Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me remind the Senator that our allies borrowed dollars worth from 44 to 50 cents on the dollar. At the present time, if they pay us in gold, they pay us in dollars worth $2.44 in farm commodities, and about $1.80 on the whole range of commodities.

Mr. GEORGE. That is very true.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. So if today we collect dollars of the present value, we are forcing our debtor allies to pay us from three to five times as much value to release and relinquish and liquidate their indebtedness as they got in value when the loan was made. Now, if we give them 30 percent reduction we are still collecting about 20 or 30 percent more value than they received when the loan was made. So I cannot see that we are doing anything but making an attempt to do partial justice, even if we make the reduction complained of by the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. That may be true, and I have no objection if we want to write off part of the foreign debts, if there is justification for it; but I want to make my own position clear. We are writing it off, but we are not writing off farm mortgages in this bill.

The farm-mortgage provision in this bill is a provision for the benefit of the stockholders and bondholders of the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks. We are writing off nothing, unless perchance these institutions themselves may be willing to write it off, for the benefit of the farmers; and their mortgages likewise were created at a time when wheat was selling at an average price in 1917 of $2.48 a bushel, and an average price of $2.84 a bushel, or approximately that, in 1918, and cotton at 25½ cents in 1917, and 34.9 cents in 1918. Exactly the same situation obtains; and if we are going to write off these debts I cannot see why we do not simply write them off, and have some advantage that may accrue to us by reason of our forgiveness of these obligations.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. While it may be stated that the dollars that foreign nations borrowed from us were depreciated dollars—except that I have never understood the argument to be confined altogether to the appreciation or depreciation of dollars, and neglected altogether as to the appreciation or depreciation of commodities—nevertheless, foreign nations were required to spend nearly every dollar that we loaned them in the purchase of commodities in this country at the most extortionate prices that we have had for 100 years, and out of which so great were the fortunes made as that our Government collected $8,000,000,000 alone out of excess-profits taxes in consequence of that incident.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not taking issue with what the Senator from Virginia says; but I think if there is one thing upon which the party has spoken, it is against the cancellation of these debts. I know that very nearly every man here who came up for election last year was committed definitely against the cancellation of these debts, and I know that this is a cancellation in part of the debts. If my surmise is correct, if my judgment is good, we have a deflationary measure here rather than an inflationary measure; and we are probably cutting the debts that are due and payable with this $200,000,000 of silver at not exceeding 50 cents an ounce—which, of course, will become the price—probably 50 percent rather than 30 percent.

It is of no consequence, as I see it, that silver may advance, and that we may be buying at the bottom, or, by reason of the absorption of the surplus, or the dumping of the Indian silver, or what not, that we are going actually to make a good bargain. That may be true; but that is in the lap of the gods. That is in the hands of the future. Nor do I think it of any consequence, if I may repeat, that, by virtue of placing the stamp of the Government upon the thing which we take, we give it a value of 100 cents in the dollar and therefore sustain no loss.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. No such proposition as that last stated by the Senator is involved in this amendment. We take silver at 50 cents an ounce, and we issue as many dollars of silver certificates against that silver bullion as there were dollars due us on the debt; so that, unlike the ordinary silver certificate that has behind it one silver dollar, now worth, so far as its bullion content is concerned, 20 cents, we have over twice as much silver behind any one of these dollars as there is against the ordinary silver dollar.

Mr. GEORGE. I take no issue with the Senator on that point.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. This amendment was presented rapidly. I confess that I did not vote upon it because I did not know exactly what it was, and have just read it. Will the Senator permit it to be reconsidered? Then, if we are going to finish this bill tonight, we will take it up later; or, if the bill goes over until tomorrow, we will take it up tomorrow.

I ask that merely for the purposes of investigation. I am not prepared at the present time to make any objection beyond that which has been made by the Senator from Georgia; but I should be very glad if the Senator would consent to that procedure.

Mr. HAYDEN. So far as I am concerned, of course, the Senator has a perfect right to move a reconsideration. If that is to be done, I should like to take a few moments to explain the nature of the amendment. Since the Senator from Oklahoma, who offered the main amendment, accepted it, there was very little to do on my part but allow it to be done; but I do want, and I intend in the next few moments, if I can obtain the floor, to explain the proposal.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I ask unanimous consent, then—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the amendment was adopted may be reconsidered.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the Senator withhold that request for a moment, so that I may tell him what is in it?

Mr. JOHNSON. Let us have it reconsidered, because some of us have been reading it. If we want to discuss it subsequently, all right; but will the Senator permit that?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I suggest to the Senator from California that the Senator from Oklahoma has a right to modify his amendment or make that a part of it, and that is what he did. This is not an amendment to the bill; it is a perfection of the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is an amendment that was offered here, and the question was put by the Chair.

Mr. DILL. But it was accepted as a modification by the Senator from Oklahoma, and he has a perfect right to do that without anybody's consent.

Mr. JOHNSON. I confess, Mr. President, that I did not understand the procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, may I be recognized on the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course, that vacates the pending amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. I beg to disagree with the Chair. The original amendment, increasing the amount of silver to be accepted on the foreign debts from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000, was adopted. I then offered another amendment, relating to the printing of silver certificates, which is now the pending amendment. Upon that I desire to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the other amendment will have to be withdrawn. Both amendments cannot be considered at the same time.

Mr. HAYDEN. The only amendment pending before the Senate is the amendment permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to issue silver certificates in such denominations as he may choose, rather than limiting him to $1 bills. I do not want the Senate to adjourn without an explanation on my part as to why I suggested that the amount of silver to be taken in payment on the foreign debts be increased from $100,000,000, as provided in the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Oklahoma, to $200,000,000.

That part of the Thomas amendment which relates to the acceptance of silver in payment of the foreign debts is taken word for word from the bill, S. 145, introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] on the 10th of last March, providing that from Great Britain alone the United States might accept $100,000,000 worth of silver in payment of any debt owed by that Government to our Government. The object sought was to permit a transfer of silver from India to England and from England to the United States, and in so doing to take off the market the silver that has most depressed the price of that metal.

I learned last year that the British Government for India owes to Great Britain £16,721,000 sterling, or $81,422,000 at par of exchange, as the remnant of £100,000,000 that India assumed as a part of the British Empire World War debt.

The British Government for India is the greatest possessor of silver of any government in the world. It occurred to me that if India would pay its debt to Great Britain in silver, and the United States would accept that silver in payment of principal or interest due from Great Britain, and the American Government could utilize that silver as money, then two intergovernmental debts could be paid with the same silver without burden either to the British taxpayer or the American taxpayer. That is the proposal as contained in the bill introduced by the Senator from Nevada.

When it was subsequently incorporated in the legislation now pending the proposal was broadened to include all countries that are debtors to the United States. It is quite obvious that the amount of $100,000,000 should be increased, because it is not equal to the amount due on the June payments and the payments that were unpaid in December. I therefore looked into the matter to determine how much money remained unpaid in December and what sums will be due in June from all the governments to whom the United States loaned money during and after the World War. The following table shows that the total amount is $194,073,221.

Amounts due the United States from foreign governments within 6 months

Country	Principal	Interest	Principal	Interest	Total
	Dec. 15, 1932	Dec. 15, 1932	June 15, 1933	June 15, 1933
Austria	$287,556				$287,556
Belgium		$2,125,000	$4,200,000	$2,125,000	8,450,000
Czechoslovakia			1,500,000		1,500,000
Estonia	111,000	245,370		284,322	640,692
Finland				148,592	148,592
France		19,261,432	21,477,135	19,261,433	60,000,000
Great Britain				75,950,000	75,950,000
Greece	$130,000		130,000		1,149,300
	$227,000	217,920	231,000	213,380
Hungary	12,285	28,444		28,260	68,989
Italy			12,300,000	1,245,438	13,545,438
Latvia				118,961	118,961
Lithuania			39,705	92,886	132,091
Poland	1,357,000	3,070,980		3,559,062	7,987,042
Rumania			1,000,000		1,000,000
Yugoslavia			275,000		275,000
Total	2,124,841	24,949,146	41,152,840	103,026,834	171,253,661

Country	Sept. 30, 1932	Mar. 31, 1933	Sept. 30, 1933	Total
Germany:
Army costs
reichsmarks	12,650,000	12,650,000	9,300,000	34,600,000
Mixed claims
reichsmarks	20,400,000	20,400,000	20,400,000	61,200,000
Total	33,050,000	33,050,000	29,700,000	$22,819,560
				194,073,221

<sup>1</sup> Jan. 1, 1933.

<sup>2</sup> Jan. 1, July 1.

<sup>3</sup> May 10, Nov. 10.

Includes amounts payable under moratorium agreements but does not include interest payable on principal installments postponed since July 1, 1932.

My amendment applies only to sums due or to become due to the United States within 6 months—the December payments and the June payments—and also places a limit of $200,000,000 upon the amount of silver that can be accepted from foreign governments. The table covers all sums immediately due the United States arising out of the so-called "war loans", except, perhaps, balances from Nicaragua and Russia.

My amendment permits the President to accept silver at not to exceed 50 cents an ounce. That is a ceiling. It does not mean that he must take it at that price. The President can accept it at any agreed price up to 50 cents an ounce. If all sums now due or to become due within 6 months are paid in silver at that price, there will be deposited in the Treasury of the United States 388,000,000 ounces of silver. Against that silver so deposited the Secretary of the Treasury will issue $194,000,000 of silver certificates, with more silver behind them, over twice as much as there is behind our present silver certificates.

Another effect will be to take off the market the surplus silver of the world. A House committee composed of Members not one of whom was from a silver-producing State and headed by a Representative from the State of New York, Hon. ANDREW L. SOMERS, investigated the silver very thoroughly for months in the last Congress. In March of this year the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures reported to the House of Representatives a bill (H.R. 14756) providing that the Secretary of the Treasury purchase in the open market $250,000,000 worth of silver at prices beginning at 40 cents an ounce and extending up to as high as 75 cents an ounce for the avowed purpose of taking off the market the surplus silver of the world. The report of the committee states that silver would then be restored to its normal position in world trade, and would advance in price.

The British Government for India has been the chief seller of silver. In an effort to place India on the gold standard the Indian Treasury has sold silver, beginning in 1928, down from 57½ cents an ounce to under 30 cents. They have given up twice as much silver in their later operations to get an ounce of gold as they did in the beginning, and they never obtained gold enough to put India on the gold standard.

The best proof that the whole operation, not only wrong but futile, is that in the meantime England has gone off the gold standard. But the Indian Government still has on hand, as best we can learn, some 200,000,000 ounces of surplus silver, which they still desire to sell. If that silver is taken by the United States so that it is no longer a menace to the silver market, it is certain that the price of that metal will go up.

The maximum price fixed in the Thomas amendment is 50 cents an ounce. The following table shows that this is less than the pre-war and pre-depression price of silver.

Average price of silver in New York per fine ounce

Year:
1901	$.59703
1902	.52815
1903	.54208
1904	.57843
1905	.61008
1906	.67379
1907	.65978
1908	.53496
1909	.52163
1910	.54245
1911	.54002
1912	.62006
1913	.61241
1914	.56331

Average for 14 years before the World War, $0.58029.

Year:
1921	.63096
1922	.67934
1923	.65239
1924	.67111
1925	.69406
1926	.62428
1927	.56680
1928	.58488
1929	.53306

Average for 9 years after the World War, $0.62632.

(Report of the Director of the Mint, June 30, 1932, p. 127.)

There is in this proposal no reduction, no cancellation of indebtedness whatsoever. Why does the Senate object to cancellation? Because it is an effort to relieve British or the French or German taxpayers, and transfer a burden to American taxpayers. If this proposal contained any suggestion of such a thing as that, I myself would oppose it. But when the United States Treasury accepts silver and issues against it the identical amount of silver certificates represented in the sum of the payments on the foreign debts, and utilizes such certificates in paying the current expenses of our Government, that silver is just as good to us, and will serve every purpose of the American taxpayer as if the same value of gold had been paid. There is no transfer of any burden whatsoever from a European to an American taxpayer.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I wanted to inquire of the Senator from Arizona whether he did not think there was an error in the understanding of the Senator from Georgia. He seemed to be under the impression that this amendment required the silver to be taken from the foreign government at 50 cents an ounce. My understanding is that the 50 cents per ounce is an outside figure. It is provided in the amendment that it shall not be taken at a price in excess of that, and really contemplates that the silver shall be taken at its market price, merely putting a limit on the price. Therefore, when the Government takes the silver, it takes it at a price at which it could again put it on the market.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is what I have previously stated, that 50 cents is nothing more than a ceiling. I want that made perfectly clear.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I want it made clear that I understand the language of the amendment, but I know what the result will be. Of course, the maximum price fixed becomes the actual price of the silver.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let us suppose that what the Senator from Georgia asserts does take place; there is still no element to which any American taxpayer can object. It transfers no debt burden from any European country to the United States. That is why Senators generally are opposed to cancellation, because it means that it would relieve European taxpayers of an obligation they have to the United States and impose that same obligation upon the American taxpayers. This amendment would do nothing of the kind. It could not possibly have any such effect. The American Government accepts silver at a price and issues against it silver certificates to the amount of the debt payments only. There will be behind those silver certificates over twice as much silver in value as there is against the present silver certificates now in circulation at par throughout the United States. It will be good money; it will be sound money. When such silver certificates are issued they can be paid out of the Treasury just as we would pay out the gold if we received it from a foreign government.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the certificates are issued, are they issued for the same number of dollars we take in the form of silver, or are they issued at the price the silver is purchased for? For instance, suppose we got 40 cents an ounce. Are we to issue the certificates based on that 40 cents?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; the Secretary of the Treasury will issue the certificates to the extent of the number of dollars credited on the foreign-debt payment. The entire amount of silver is deposited in the Treasury as security for the payment of such certificates, and, as I have said, it will be more than double the amount of silver now deposited against the silver certificates now in constant use.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true, but under the Parity Act we would have to make those silver dollars interchangeable with gold dollars. How much actual silver would be in this new silver certificate that is to be issued?

Mr. HAYDEN. The ordinary silver certificate has 77/100 of an ounce of silver deposited in the shape of coin silver in the Treasury for its redemption. Under the Parity Act of 1900 silver certificates are also redeemable in gold. These certificates likewise, as long as the Parity Act is in existence, would be redeemable in gold, so that they would have not only an extraordinary amount of silver behind them, but also the entire gold reserve in the Treasury. It would be perfectly sound money.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is it the Senator has in mind that would be accomplished by this amendment? Does he think it would raise the price of silver?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do. I think it would at least have the effect of taking off the market the surplus silver which it is well known that the Indian Government has been seeking to sell during the past 4 or 5 years.

Mr. BORAH. But a hundred million would not make a dent in that.

Mr. HAYDEN. I must disagree with the Senator from Idaho. After very exhaustive hearings, the House Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, taking the testimony of many witnesses who were fully qualified to speak, came to the conclusion that there is not in existence in the world today more than 350,000,000 ounces of surplus silver. Of that amount about 200,000,000 ounces are in the Treasury of the British Government for India.

There has been no overproduction of the white metal. The decline in its price has been solely due to the action of governments; first, the Government of Great Britain, which called in all the silver coins, the shilling, the sixpence, the half crown, and melted them up. They melted all the coins up and reissued them, instead of nine hundred and twenty-five one thousandths fine, at five hundred one thousandths fine, and thus got a large amount of surplus silver. The British Government sold over a hundred million ounces of silver obtained in that way and dumped it on the market. That action was followed by similar debasement of coins by Belgium and again by France.

Mr. BORAH. Does anybody know how much silver is hoarded in India?

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no accurate knowledge of the amount of silver in India, because that country has been a sink of silver since the days of Marco Polo. But we do know that is the principal store of value the Indian people have. They hoard silver against a time of need. The House committee finds that, regardless of any price that might be offered for silver, particularly a modest price like 50 cents an ounce, the hoards of India and China would not be disturbed.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my friend.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is just the point I wanted to call attention to. When silver was $1.18 an ounce, in 1919, instead of the great amount of silver coming out of India, they bought nearly twice as much that year as they did before. The same was true of China. They held silver, but not for speculation. So we know, from the history of the past, that during the 3 years—1918, 1919, and 1920—when silver was above a dollar an ounce throughout the world, instead of silver coming out of the hoards of India and China, the world's mine production went into those countries. That is about all I want to say about the flow of silver.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me read from this well-considered report made by the House Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. This is its findings:

Whilst there are in existence probably about 12,000,000,000 ounces of silver, the testimony before our committee convinces us that most of it is in the form of hoardings held by the people of China and India, and that no price will cause it to come on the market of the world. The best testimony that our committee could obtain is that the oversupply of silver in the markets of the world, and that could come upon the markets of the world even with a great rise in the price of silver, would not exceed 350,000,000 ounces.

The purchases of silver under this bill—

That was a proposal to buy $250,000,000 worth—

The purchases of silver under this bill, therefore, would remove the surplus supply of silver from the market of the world and allow it to reach its normal price, where it remained for many years, around 60 cents an ounce, which was based on normal mine production and normal demand.

I said that European governments, by debasing their coins, taking silver out of their coinage and dumping it on the market, first broke the price. Then the British Government for India in 1928 decided to go on the gold standard. To get gold India has sold over 150,000,000 ounces of silver, derived from demonetized coins, within the past 6 years.

It is our contention, and I believe it is perfectly sound, that if European governments had continued to use silver in their coinage as they did before the World War, and if the Indian Government had not demonetized silver and dumped it on the market, the price would not have fallen to the all-time low of 24¼ cents an ounce in New York on December 29, 1932.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think that if this amendment is enacted into law the foreign governments will pay in silver?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am quite hopeful that the British Government will do so.

Mr. BORAH. Why would they pay in silver and not in gold, unless they can get silver cheaper?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the point exactly. If the Indian Government has been willing to sell large quantities of silver at very low prices, they ought to be glad to obtain a higher price and get rid of all their surplus. If India will pay the $80,000,000 they owe England in silver, the English can take the same silver and pay the United States. Two intergovernmental debts will be canceled, and the silver will be just as useful to the American Government as though the English payment had been made in gold. By this method, for one payment only—and the privilege will expire in 6 months—the British taxpayer will be relieved of making the June payment, because the British Government will have collected a debt from a British Dominion—India.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The amount is $200,000,000?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. FESS. Is that to come in the form of bullion?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; it is to be $200,000,000 worth of silver. That is the maximum amount.

Mr. FESS. It will be received, not in coin, but in bullion?

Mr. HAYDEN. In bullion; yes.

Mr. FESS. Then we are to put it out in the form of silver certificates?

Mr. HAYDEN. Up to the amount of the debt payments only.

Mr. FESS. On what basis would the certificates be issued?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Thomas amendment provides that as many silver dollars shall be coined as dollars are paid to us, the balance of the silver to remain as bullion, a reserve in the Treasury. Then the Secretary of the Treasury will issue the ordinary silver certificates against that silver.

Mr. FESS. The silver certificate issued would be redeemable in what?

Mr. HAYDEN. On its face, in silver. Under the parity act, in silver or gold, at the demand of the owner.

Mr. FESS. Is there any obstacle to a person having a silver certificate having it redeemed in gold? Then, when it is redeemed, what will be done with the certificate?

Mr. HAYDEN. It will be reissued for the ordinary operating expenses of the Government.

Mr. FESS. Then the person who gets it can take it back and get it redeemed in gold the second time?

Mr. HAYDEN. That was done, as the Senator will remember, many years ago.

Mr. FESS. That was done in 1890.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Under the Sherman Act. That started the vicious circle which drained the gold. Does not the Senator think that is a dangerous provision?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; not with such a comparatively small amount of silver. The Senator will remember that the United States went on the gold standard in 1900. At that time there was $1,034,000,000 of monetary gold in the United States, and $648,000,000 in silver. The per capita of silver then was $8.50. The per capita of silver is now $6.75. The gold in America has increased fourfold. We now have $4,380,000,000 in monetary gold. This is a very limited operation, applicable only to payments due the United States within 6 months, and is designed to take off the world market the surplus which we know exists, and then allow the silver market to operate in a normal way.

Mr. FESS. I will say to the Senator that I have had a lot of sympathy with what the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Nevada have wanted to do. It has appealed to me that it would permit the payment of a debt which might not be paid otherwise; that it would furnish a market for silver and offer an opportunity for better trade with these other countries. But I was not aware of the fact that the plan was to issue the silver in the form of certificates and then permit the certificates to be redeemed in gold, and the certificates, after they are paid out, will get into a vicious circle, by which, I think, we will be in the same position we were in in 1893, when Cleveland called a special session of the Congress to repeal the act of 1890. I was not aware that the Senator was proposing that.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. This amendment does not propose any different condition with regard to the certificates than now exists with regard to the $490,000,000 of certificates which are in circulation.

Mr. FESS. The Senator, then, is not afraid of what we faced in the years from 1890 to 1893?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; because since that time there have been $490,000,000 of silver certificates in circulation, secured by only 0.78 ounce of silver each; only once in that whole time, in 1920, has the intrinsic value of silver reached its monetary value, and yet never during this century has there been any depreciation of those certificates nor any necessity for our Government to do anything to maintain their parity.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada, who knows much about this matter, Is there not wrapped up in this amendment the possibility and probability that foreign governments will pay their debts in a less amount than they would if the amendment were not adopted?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think not, sir; and my reason for saying so, if the Senator wants a reason, is this—

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say that I cannot see why they would want to pay their debts in silver unless there was some advantage to them in doing so by reason of their ability to obtain silver at a low price.

Mr. PITTMAN. I agree with the Senator in that, too, and therefore it is very probable that the only government that would gain by it would be the British Government, by collecting a war debt from India and transferring it at the same rate to us.

Mr. BORAH. According to the newspapers, Great Britain and France now are in what might be called a financial alliance by which Great Britain is to help with her so-called "equalization exchange fund" to maintain the franc. I should think she could furnish silver to France, although perhaps she would not have enough to do that.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know about that; but here is the situation.

Mr. HAYDEN. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator, or I will yield the floor if the Senator so desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Arizona has expired, both on the amendment and on the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, let me make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I take the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Arizona for a question.

Mr. HAYDEN. I should like to know if it is expected to dispose of the entire bill tonight? If it is, I think the Senate should vote on the proposal now before us.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion, if the Senator from Nevada will allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I want to state that it is imperative that we pass this bill, and I am going to ask the Senate to remain in session and try, if possible, to pass it tonight. If we shall not be able to do that, then I hope we will reconvene tomorrow and continue the work on this bill so as to expedite its passage.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will yield, if there are any other suggestions.

Mr. CLARK. I merely wish to ask a question of the Senator from South Carolina. Can the Senator from South Carolina tell the Senate the subject of the pending bill?

Mr. SMITH. If I had the bill here before me, I might do so, but, unfortunately, I have it not, and I have not had time to list all the matters contained in it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I understood the parliamentary situation to be this: That the amendment was offered by the Senator from Arizona, and the Senator from Oklahoma really accepted the amendment to his amendment, which he had a right to do, without a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Georgia that, under the rules, the Senator from Oklahoma did not have the right to accept the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Perhaps so. I assumed that he did have that right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He attempted to do it, but it could not be done under the rules.

Mr. GEORGE. And I considered the amendment as having become a part of the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. I merely rose to state my own position, because I thought the matter was being passed over, and not to argue the merits or the demerits of the coinage of so much silver or the advantage of absorbing the silver surplus. Those questions were not in my mind. As I interpret it, this is a pro-tanto cancellation, because, obviously, there would be no necessity of taking silver from foreign countries unless silver was to be taken for more than its market price. If it is to be taken only at the market price, the governments which would offer to pay us silver could, of course, just as readily pay us in gold.

I concede that by virtue of the treatment which we gave to the silver we probably would hold ourselves harmless, but I do not want to enter into any controversy over those phases of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state that technically there are two amendments pending before the Senate, which is in violation of the rules. The first amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona having been agreed to, he offered his second amendment, which was not voted on; and while it was pending, the vote by which his first amendment was adopted was reconsidered, which puts it back in its original position. One of these amendments has got to be laid aside before the Senate can vote on the other. The Chair suggests that the last amendment be temporarily laid aside so that the first one may be passed on again.

Mr. HAYDEN. I hope the Senate will adopt the second amendment, to which I am sure there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that amendment can now be adopted, it will be out of the way, and the debate may proceed upon the first amendment which was reconsidered and the parliamentary situation will be clarified by voting on the second amendment. Without objection, the Chair will put the question on the second amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Wait a moment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I do not want to be put in the position of controverting anything that has been said by the Senator from Nevada or the Senator from Arizona. I recognize that they are authorities upon these particular questions, and I would accept, of course, what they say as being determinative of the facts, but there is presented by this amendment a proposition that the Senate ought to know and understand. Originally, Mr. President, the bill provided as will be found in section 36.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from California permit the Chair to put the question on the second amendment which was being voted on when he rose? It apparently has no relation to the first.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I misunderstood the Chair. I thought he was referring to the second amendment to the amendment concerning which there has been a reconsideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second amendment provides merely for a change in the language to give the Secretary discretion as to the denomination of the silver certificates that may be issued.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then, the second amendment refers to silver certificates?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Silver certificates that will be issued under the first amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. The whole question was whether they should be all $1 bills or whether the Secretary might have discretion to issue bills of different denominations.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; and that amendment necessarily is a corollary or an amplification of the first amendment which was reconsidered.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, to save time, I withdraw the second amendment, so that we go on with the first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Arizona withdraws the second amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I shall occupy but a moment in this regard; but here we have a question which I think the Senate ought to understand at least in its implications. I do not pretend to speak with any degree of accuracy respecting silver at all. I am sympathetic with the view, of course, that has been expressed upon this floor and has been so ably expounded by the Senator from Montana, the Senator from Arizona, and the Senator from Nevada; but in this bill as originally presented, in section 36, we find that—

The President of the United States is authorized to accept silver, in amounts not to exceed the aggregate in value in the United States currency of $100,000,000, in payment of the whole or any part of any amount of principal or interest due from any foreign government or governments on account of any indebtedness to our Government, such silver to be accepted at not to exceed the price of 50 cents an ounce.

I could quite understand that provision, sir, although I do not know whether or not it was intended as I have suggested. I could understand that it might well be proposed upon the theory that Great Britain, who had paid the last installment of her debt to the United States in December 1932, should be permitted to pay the next installment in such coin as she desired and in silver, which doubtless she has. I could understand that, I say, because Great Britain had paid the installment of the debt that was due from her. I do not comprehend, however, why there should be an increase in the amount of silver, in relation to the debts, from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000. The increase from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000 can have, in relation to the debts, but one purpose, and that is to permit the countries which have defaulted to obtain, as they desired, silver in the market and pay the installment of their debts in that silver. That we would not realize, therefore, the amount from the defaulting countries that those countries owe our Government is self-evident, it seems to me, and therefore, sir, it was that I made the motion to reconsider.

I do not believe, and I do not think the Senate believes, that there should be extended any special privilege to any nation on the face of the earth that has defaulted in the payment of its just obligations unto this country, and particularly, sir, I do not believe, and I do not think that any Member of the Senate believes, that any country that was able to pay the last installment due from it should be permitted in any depreciated currency or in currency that lacks its full monetary value to repay any installment in the near future. It was because I thought I saw that implication in this amendment, and because I think I see it now, that I objected to the amendment, and would prefer that the bill stand in its original form.

I do not stand here as a last "red-center", as the great international newspapers like to refer to men who believe that the just obligations due this country from other countries ought to be met; I do not stand here in an ungenerous and uncharitable attitude regarding any nation on the face of the earth. I do not wish that there should be broken the course of amity between ourselves and any nation which has defaulted or which may default; but I do insist when the United States Government has an obligation that is due, that is in the form of a solemn agreement to pay, that this Government shall stand its ground in friendly fashion and maintain its position, holding its obligation and yielding nothing in relation to any country that is wholly able to meet its obligations to us. That is all that I desire in respect to the debts that are due us.

If any country cannot pay, well and good; we pass it by. If any country will not pay when it can pay, then, sir, we hold our obligation and we cheerfully say to that country, "Do as you see fit, because, able to pay and refusing to pay, your action will in the future harm you infinitely more than the payment would advantage us." That is the position of some of those who hold views such as I hold in regard to these debts.

Now, sir, I can see no reason, if it be embraced within the amendment that has been presented, why we should increase the silver that may be paid from $100,000,000, which would include the debt that Great Britain owes to us in June next or the installment of that debt, to $200,000,000, which would enable any defaulting country to purchase, if it could purchase, silver at a decreased price in any part of the world or receive it from any economic or financial ally that that country may have. Therefore, I hope that the particular amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, as originally—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized on the bill; he has spoken once on the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. I realize the situation. I did not speak, but I was on my feet while others spoke; it is all right.

Originally when a bill was introduced by me in March which was in the form of the provision in the Thomas amendment it only referred to Great Britain, because I do not believe there is any other country that has any substantial amount of silver or can get any amount of silver without buying it with gold, and it would be just as easy to pay in gold as to buy the silver. That was the limit fixed.

The reason for limiting it to India was because we ascertained that the Indians owed the British Government about $15,000,000,000 of war debts, and we were advised that they wanted to pay those war debts in silver. It has been argued as an excuse for not paying the debt that the British Government could not safely transfer the gold away without affecting its reserve; that we would not accept commodities because we did not need commodities—and hence our tariffs against them—and, therefore, they could not pay us. Here was a commodity called silver which they could get in settlement of their debts from India and which, if we accepted in settlement of our debts, would cancel the transaction. It happened to be a commodity, however, that would not endanger our market.

We could not accept $74,000,000 of any other commodity without endangering our already oversupplied domestic market; but we could accept the silver without occasioning that loss for the reason already stated and as stated by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. We could follow the old practice that we followed in the past, and, having accepted from Great Britain the $94,000,000, as it was estimated at that time, we could issue $94,000,000 worth of silver certificates and add them to the $490,000,000 we already have. It would not then give us as large a proportion of silver issue as we had in 1890 or 1900. It would be on the same terms as the other silver certificates. But, in addition to that, we would have twice as much silver behind the new issue of silver certificates as we have behind the $490,000,000 of silver certificates.

As to the depreciated prices, silver today is around 37 cents an ounce. It is inevitable that if Great Britain will accept or will offer to pay the debt payment due June 15 in silver, silver would rise perhaps 10 cents an ounce. In other words, the oversupply of it is so small that any use in that way would cause silver to rise. We put it at 50 cents an ounce, thinking that might possibly help us to solve the embarrassing question which will arise on June 15, when no one desires repudiation, particularly right in the face of the economic conference. If silver happened to be 51 cents an ounce and the President was not allowed to accept it at less than that figure, the whole transaction would be off because of that lack of power. If we put it at 36 cents an ounce, the price today, and it became rumored that Great Britain was going to make that payment in silver, that much silver taken out of India would increase the price of silver, in my opinion, 10 cents an ounce instantly.

On June 15 those countries will owe us payments as follows: Belgium will owe us $4,200,000; Czechoslovakia, $1,500,000; France, $21,477,135; Great Britain, $75,950,000, with interest; Greece, $231,000; Italy, $12,300,000. I understand there is $30,000,000 owed us by Germany.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, the figures given for France do not include the defaulted payment, I understand.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I am just stating the payments that will fall due on June 15.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator has not told us yet, but will he tell us why the amount was raised from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is by reason of the schedule I have just read. The totals include the $19,000,000 that they did not pay, but should have paid—$194,000,000.

Mr. COUZENS. Then the Senator does contemplate that those countries which are in default shall be permitted to pay in silver?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I do.

Mr. COUZENS. And it is that to which the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] objects, I understand?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; that is true. Personally I feel that if France is willing to pay the next payment as well as the one now past due in a metal or commodity that will not injure us to accept and that is of the value at which we accept it, it would be a very fine solution of the embarrassing debt problem we now face.

So far as price is concerned, I do not think France could avail herself of it. The reason why I say that is that France will have $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 on hand of subsidiary coinage, and that would be all. If we start to buy that silver in the markets of the world, we could not buy $30,000,000 worth of silver without increasing the price at least 10 cents an ounce. I do not think France could do it; but there would be several of those small countries, including Germany, that would have enough silver to pay us in that commodity, which is undoubtedly of the value of 50 cents an ounce. It seems, when we are dealing with all the governments at this time in the face of an economic conference, we should put aside any discrimination in the settlement of these debts.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, may I submit an inquiry to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HATFIELD. Based upon the price of silver at 50 cents an ounce, how much would America scale down the European debts to be paid us?

Mr. PITTMAN. About $194,000,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I want to mention a statement which I understood the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] made with reference to the amount our foreign debtors would have to pay us. I asked for a transcript of the notes of the Official Reporter to see that I was correctly advised on the matter. I think the Senator's statement should be challenged. I do not want it to go unchallenged. The Senator from Oklahoma said:

So if today we collect dollars of the present value, we are forcing our debtor allies to pay us from 3 to 5 times as much value to release and relinquish and liquidate their indebtedness as they got in value when the loan was made. Now, if we give them 30 percent reduction, we are still collecting about 20 or 30 percent more value than they received when the loan was made. So I cannot see that we are doing anything but making an attempt to do partial justice, even if we make the reduction complained of by the Senator.

It seems to me that the Senator, in view of that statement, entirely overlooks the Liberty bonds. They are all outstanding and the American people are paying them with an average of better than 4 percent interest—4.07 percent, I believe it is. They all carry the gold clause. They are payable in gold. The American people, it seems to me, are entitled to some consideration in a matter of this kind.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I made that statement hurriedly and as a result of the best operations of my mind on the spur of the moment, and I am not absolutely sure that it is correct. If we receive $191,000,000 of silver from our allied debtors and issue thereon certificates to that amount we can retire that amount of Liberty bonds 100 percent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In the first place, we have wiped out the entire principal of their indebtedness to the American people. If England pays a little better than 3-percent interest each year for 62 years, her entire debt is extinguished, but the American people must go on and on and on, paying the amount loaned by them, which was raised through the Liberty bonds and which bears an average interest of more than 4 percent, all carrying the gold clause.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The allied nations owe us about $11,000,000,000. If we keep the dollar at the present value during the next 62 years and they should pay per their contract, at the end of that time they would have paid more than $45,000,000,000 because of the advance in the purchasing price of the dollar over and above what it was in 1926, for instance.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Suppose that is true and we continue for 62 years paying 4.07-percent interest on the Liberty bonds, how much will our people have paid out in interest on the money we raised to loan to Europe in order to save their lives? It is time someone had some consideration for the American people. The point I make is that by accepting any amount in silver on these debts we reduce the indebtedness that much further. There is no question about that, and we have already written off all the principal so that if they pay the small amount of interest each year for 62 years they will then have discharged their entire indebtedness to the American people.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Permit me to yield to myself for just a moment.

I read in the Washington Star yesterday a statement, I think under a Paris date line, to the effect that now, reluctantly, France proposes to pay the overdue installment of $19,000,000 to the American people which was due last December and which they defaulted, though they were well able to pay, on the assurance they seem to have that the President of the United States is going to grant a moratorium on the June payment. In other words, it seems that they have an impression—I do not know where they got it—that somehow or other, without any regard whatever to what Congress thinks about it, the President has agreed tentatively, or in some form that seems to satisfy them, to grant a moratorium to all our foreign debtors next June. Some of us will oppose that, I am sure, to the last degree and endeavor to reassert the independence of Congress.

Further, it is now intimated that a consultative pact has been arrived at as a result of which, if France gets into trouble with any neighbor or any other country over there, we are to enter into the European situation and embroil the American people again in the wars of Europe. Of course, I hope the President has agreed to no such consultative pact, and, of course, I assume that a red-blooded Congress will never consent to any such thing.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. I am able to inform the eminent Senator from Indiana that no such pact exists, either as to any agreement reducing the debt, or changing or shaping it, through any policy or conversation that transpired between the President and the foreign delegates here; second, I can assure the able Senator, whose solicitude I greatly appreciate, that there has been no agreement as to any consultative pact or any other pact involving this Government in any understanding whatsoever touching foreign affairs ignoring the United States Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Can the Senator assure us, too, that no agreement has been entered into for a moratorium in June?

Mr. LEWIS. I can say to the Senator that I have information which would justify me in saying to any citizen of America that there has been no agreement whatever by the President of the United States or any governmental authority of this country with any foreign country contracting for a moratorium at any time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am glad to have that assurance from my very good friend the Senator from Illinois, and I hope he speaks with authority.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Can the Senator assure us that the President will not ask for authority to deal with these matters—the question of debts, the question of moratorium, and the question of payments, and so forth?

Mr. LEWIS. Is the distinguished Senator from Idaho addressing his query to me or to my friend from Indiana? I was not sure.

Mr. BORAH. To the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I am compelled to say to the Senator that I have no way of adjudging what the President of the United States in the future may be called on to do by some events that may transpire in the future, which none in the present can now anticipate; but as matters now stand, in the present, from any information and all the information I have—

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may we have order? It is difficult to hear the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order; and Senators will take their seats, except those entitled to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the failure to hear me is my fault. My eminent friend from Idaho being so near to me—and, I hope, ever to be near to me—caused me not to regard the necessity of addressing my voice at a longer range.

My answer is that while I cannot tell and cannot say what attitude of mind the President has, or will have, as to some future events not now existing, as to matters now existing I have every reason to be able to assure the Senator that there is no intention on the part of the President or his advisers to make such request to this honorable Congress as my able friend from Idaho seems to anticipate as a possibility, if that replies to his question.

Mr. BORAH. That is a reply, I think, to my question; but my understanding is that there is an expectation upon the part of the administration to request of the Congress a delegation of power to deal with all these matters.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. Just for a moment, so that I may correct what I am sure the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HARTFIELD] did not intend to convey to the Senate. The facts are that under this proposal there could be paid, if every nation paid in silver at 50 cents an ounce, debts to the amount of $194,000,000, and that would require 388,000,000 ounces of silver. The proposal as stated by the Senator from West Virginia is not contained in the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not know just what the effect would be. I assume the Senator speaks with accuracy. I am not challenging his statement nor, of course, that of my friend from West Virginia. I do not know which is correct; but I am opposed, and I think I am expressing the temper of the people of the country, to any further reduction of the foreign debts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Austin and other Senators called for a division.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Kean	Reed
Ashurst	Costigan	Kendrick	Reynolds
Austin	Couzens	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Cutting	King	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dale	La Follette	Russell
Bankhead	Dickinson	Lewis	Schall
Barbour	Dieterich	Logan	Sheppard
Barkley	Dill	Loneragan	Shipstead
Black	Duffy	Long	Smith
Bone	Erickson	McAdoo	Steiwer
Borah	Fess	McCarran	Stephens
Bratton	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Frazier	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	George	Metcalf	Townsend
Bulow	Glass	Murphy	Trammell
Byrd	Goldsborough	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Gore	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Capper	Hale	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Harrison	Nye	Walcott
Carey	Hatfield	Overton	Walsh
Clark	Hayden	Patterson	Wheeler
Connally	Hebert	Pittman
Coolidge	Johnson	Pope

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that the amendment may be stated again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 5 of the amendment, to strike out lines 24 and 25, down to line 9 on page 6 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 36 (a). The President is authorized, for a period of 6 months from the date of the passage of this act, to accept silver in payment of the whole or any part of the principal or interest now due, or to become due within 6 months after such date, from any foreign government or governments on account of any indebtedness to the United States, such silver to be accepted at not to exceed the price of 50 cents an ounce in United States currency. The aggregate value of the silver accepted under this section shall not exceed $200,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, what we are really voting on is the question of raising the amount of $100,000,000 to $200,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. DUFFY. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. I therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. METCALF (after having voted in the affirmative). It has just been called to my attention that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is absent. I have a general pair with him. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. I am advised that if present he would vote as I have voted. Therefore I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] has a general pair on this question with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the general pair of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—53

Adams	Clark	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Connally	Lewis	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Coolidge	Loneragan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Costigan	Long	Smith
Barkley	Couzens	McAdoo	Stephens
Black	Cutting	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Dieterich	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bratton	Dill	Murphy	Vandenberg
Brown	Erickson	Neely	Van Nuys
Bulow	Fletcher	Norbeck	Walcott
Byrd	Harrison	Norris	Wheeler
Byrnes	Hayden	Overton
Capper	Kendrick	Pittman
Caraway	King	Pope

NAYS—32

Austin	Dickinson	Hebert	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Fess	Johnson	Russell
Barbour	Frazier	Kean	Schall
Borah	George	Keyes	Shipstead
Bulkeley	Glass	McNary	Steiner
Carey	Goldsborough	Nye	Trammell
Copeland	Hale	Patterson	Wagner
Dale	Hatfield	Reed	Walsh

NOT VOTING—10

Davis	Hastings	Metcalf	Tydings
Duffy	Logan	Townsend	White
Gore	McKellar

So Mr. HAYDEN's amendment to the amendment of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I now reoffer the perfecting amendment which I withdrew sometime ago in order to straighten out the parliamentary situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Arizona offers the following amendment, on page 6, lines 23 and 24, to strike out the words "(d) The President shall cause silver certificates to be issued in denominations of $1" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause silver certificates to be issued in such denominations as he deems advisable."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I desire to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from North Dakota offers the following amendment: At the proper place to insert the following new section:

SEC. —. (a) Subsection (a) of section 12 of the Revenue Act of 1932 is amended by striking out the last eight paragraphs thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"$22,460 upon net incomes of $100,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $100,000 and not in excess of $200,000, 50 percent in addition of such excess.

"$72,460 upon net incomes of $200,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $200,000 and not in excess of $300,000, 52½ percent in addition of such excess.

"$124,956 upon net incomes of $300,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $300,000 and not in excess of $400,000, 55 percent in addition of such excess.

"$179,960 upon net incomes of $400,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $400,000 and not in excess of $500,000, 57½ percent in addition of such excess.

"$237,460 upon net incomes of $500,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $500,000 and not in excess of $600,000, 60 percent in addition of such excess.

"$297,460 upon net incomes of $600,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $600,000 and not in excess of $700,000, 62½ percent in addition of such excess.

"$359,960 upon net incomes of $700,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $700,000 and not in excess of $800,000, 65 percent in addition of such excess.

"$424,960 upon net incomes of $800,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $800,000 and not in excess of $900,000, 67½ percent in addition of such excess.

"$492,460 upon net incomes of $900,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $900,000 and not in excess of $1,000,000, 70 percent in addition of such excess.

"$562,460 upon net incomes of $1,000,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $1,000,000, 75 percent in addition of such excess.

"(b) This section shall take effect as of January 1, 1933."

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the effect of this amendment would be that of increasing the surtax rate on incomes in excess of $100,000 per annum. The present surtax rate on incomes of $100,000 is 48 percent, and it is graduated upward to a maximum of 55 percent on net incomes in excess of $1,000,000.

My amendment would increase this spread from the figures I have just named, 55 percent, to 75 percent, so that the individual with a net income in excess of $1,000,000 a year instead of being taxed at the rate of 55 percent, as is now the case, would be taxed at the rate of 75 percent.

One of the first effects of the inflationary measure we are about to pass will be to make it possible for those who have bought properties at foreclosure sales to cash in large profits on those purchases. The farmer, for example, who saw his $20,000 farm sold to satisfy a $10,000 mortgage, will see that farm sold for $20,000 by the insurance company, or whoever may be the mortgagee, who bid it in at the foreclosure sale, sold for $20,000, representing a profit of $10,000, without any effort, without any contribution to the needs of the day. Why should we not put a tax on so swift a profit—a profit made possible only by the inflation which Congress provides for in this legislation?

No safeguard which Congress can write into an inflation bill can prevent men from making fortunes out of their less fortunate neighbors. The first thing to be observed when it became apparent that Congress would adopt an inflation measure was a wave of speculation and gambling on the stock exchanges. Each day those who have read the financial pages have observed the headlines about "profit taking." We cannot or will not close the exchanges, and we do not seem to be able to stop this gambling. But there is no reason why we should not put a heavy tax upon the gamblers and their excessive profits.

Millions of dollars have been made in gambling in silver on the commodity markets within the last 10 days. Why should we not levy a tax upon the men who make those millions, for they make them not because of their industry or their diligence or their skill but solely because of the legislation which we are about to pass?

This amendment of mine fixes an increased surtax which only falls upon those whose net incomes for the year will exceed $100,000. Those with smaller incomes will not be touched. Surely those citizens whose incomes exceed $100,000 cannot object, in times like these, to being asked to pay a higher tax, particularly as the fortunes they pile up in such incomes are made possible not by anything they have done but by what the Nation has done for them.

In times like these the man who has an income in excess of $100,000 does not create that income; he takes it from those who have less and are caught in the press of unfortunate conditions.

It is highly important that we write this tax into the bill at this time, so that the profiteers who are enriched by our inflation legislation will know in advance what their tax is to be. With 12,000,000 unemployed there will be plenty of employers who will go out and hire men at $1 or $2 a day. They will buy our farm products at sacrifice prices. They will add $1 worth of labor to $1 worth of our products, and, thanks to the fact that prices will rise before their work has been done, they will sell the result of that operation for 6 or 8 or 10 dollars, or whatever they can get. They should not object if we put a new and heavier tax on incomes that result from such operations.

If such an employer, however, knows that he will have to pay a high tax on the resulting profit, he will be more likely to pay living wages. For if he is liable to a tax of 85 percent on each additional dollar of his income, even the hardest hearted and most grasping employer will be tempted to raise the wages of his workers.

Mr. President, this inflation will cause a mushroom growth of millionaires, and the next year after they reap the harvest of this unprecedented inflationary plan some Senator will rise here on the floor and say that we should have taxed the excess profits of their market manipulations. It will be too late then. We cannot then make the tax retroactive. The time to do it is now.

Perhaps it is true that a large part, as some say, that 90 percent of the benefits of this inflation will accrue to less than 1 percent of our people. I hope the percentage may be more favorably in the interest of the people. Why should we not put a surtax on all incomes over $100,000, so that the Government can obtain revenue from these exorbitant profits and abortive fortunes which will be made by means of a bill we are now passing. The excess incomes of smaller industries and businesses of the country up to $100,000 will not be touched. Surely, when an income exceeds this amount, the Government should receive additional revenue over and above the present surtaxes, which are altogether too lenient, when one considers that millions of families are penniless and farmers are getting so little for their products that they might as well give them away.

The present surtax on net incomes of $100,000 is 48 percent, and is graduated upward to a maximum of 55 percent on net income in excess of $1,000,000. To tax the excess profits which will be created by inflation, this surtax should be increased so it will range from 50 percent on incomes of $100,000 to a maximum of 75 percent on incomes in excess of $1,000,000.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment which I have offered may prevail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. Does not the amendment affect the revenue?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair, it does; but the custom in the Senate has been for the Chair not to pass on the constitutionality of such matters, but to submit the question to the Senate. In the opinion of the Chair it is a revenue measure.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota if he will not withdraw this amendment and allow it to go to the Committee on Finance, which has before it a tax bill which is going to come up here next week? The amendment will be more appropriate to be offered at that time.

Mr. NYE. I am glad to have the assurance which comes from the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not give any assurance that I will be for it.

Mr. NYE. I understand the Senator to say that there is a tax bill from the House being considered by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRISON. There is a tax measure that passed the House on which the Committee on Finance will have hearings on next Tuesday. We hope to have it reported out soon. I do not want the Senator, however, to draw the inference that I shall support his amendment, because I am very much opposed to it; but I hope, in the interest of expediting the pending measure, and of bringing it to a vote, the Senator will withdraw his amendment and have it referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NYE. First let me ask the Senator a question. Can we, at least, be assured that the proposal will be considered by his committee, if referred to it?

Mr. HARRISON. The Committee on Finance always considers measures referred to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment as submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am inclined to agree with the thought that is being voiced that the amendment might better find a place on the revenue bill to which the Senator from Mississippi refers, and, in the interest of expediting the passage of the important measure which we now have before us, I shall follow the suggestion made and will withdraw the amendment and will ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Finance, as a proposed amendment to House bill 5040.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the pending bill is withdrawn and will be considered as having been presented to House bill 5040, and, as such, will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], as amended.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have an amendment here which was presented by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. In his absence, and, at his request, I wish to offer it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I understand the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is to a different portion of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is to the text of the original bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will wait, then, Mr. President, until after action on the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], as amended.

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUFFY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. If he were present, I understand he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce once again that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] has a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] has a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. HALE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. WHITE] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 64, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—64

Adams	Connally	King	Reynolds
Ashurst	Coolidge	La Follette	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Copeland	Lewis	Robinson, Ind.
Bankhead	Costigan	Loneragan	Russell
Barkley	Couzens	Long	Sheppard
Black	Cutting	McAdoo	Shipstead
Bone	Dickinson	McCarran	Smith
Borah	Dieterich	McGill	Steiwer
Bratton	Dill	Murphy	Stephens
Brown	Erickson	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Fletcher	Norbeck	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Frazier	Norris	Trammell
Byrnes	Harrison	Nye	Van Nuys
Capper	Hayden	Overton	Wagner
Caraway	Johnson	Pittman	Walsh
Clark	Kendrick	Pope	Wheeler

NAYS—21

Austin	Fess	Kean	Schall
Bailey	Glass	Keyes	Vandenberg
Barbour	Goldsborough	McNary	Walcott
Bulkley	Hale	Metcalf
Carey	Hatfield	Patterson
Dale	Hebert	Reed

NOT VOTING—10

Davis	Gore	McKellar	Tydings
Duffy	Hastings	Townsend	White
George	Logan

So the amendment of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. I now offer the amendment as presented by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] the other day and ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 21, line 10, after the word "importation", it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That all taxes collected under this subsection upon articles coming from the possessions of the United States to which this title does not apply shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States but shall be held as a separate fund and paid into the Treasury of the said possessions, respectively, to be used and expended by the governments thereof for the benefit of agriculture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] in behalf of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will simply leave this amendment to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who is in charge of the bill. I may say, however, that unless the amendment shall be adopted there will be a conflict in the bill because of another provision which excludes the Philippine Islands.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Nevada is correct. There is one provision in the bill which excludes the Philippine Islands and another which includes them. This amendment is necessary in order to avoid a conflict.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I regret to have to disagree with the distinguished Senators who favor this amendment. I can state very briefly the effect of its adoption. It would be to levy a tax upon the American sugar consumer and pay the proceeds of the tax to the Philippine government.

Mr. PITTMAN. We should not impose more taxes on the Philippines if we want to be fair. That is all there is to it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. I inquire what has become of the motion of the Senator from Texas to reconsider the vote on an amendment which has been put in the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is still pending.

Mr. CLARK. May I ask the Senator from Texas whether he intends to call up that motion?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that, on account of the necessity for haste and the desire to finish the bill tonight, the Senator from Texas has concluded not to press the motion to reconsider, trusting to the wisdom and patriotism of the conferees to take care of the matter by eliminating it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas withdraws his motion to reconsider.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, is the Senator entitled to withdraw the motion to reconsider; and, if so, is not another Senator entitled to make it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas can have leave of the Senate to withdraw it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is there not an amendment pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada in behalf of the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota offers an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of title I, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. (a) Whenever the President shall deem it expedient or necessary to carry out any of the purposes or provisions of this act he is hereby authorized and empowered to cause the Secretary of Agriculture, or such other agency as he may designate, to receive and receipt for all that portion of the commodities included in this act which may be set aside for export, as herein provided, and all processors and buyers from farmers are hereby required to deliver said receipts to the farmer selling such commodities and deliver said exportable portion thereof to the agency designated by the President under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe.

(b) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to provide storage and all other facilities for handling and exporting said surplus, and shall cause the same to be marketed at the best prices obtainable in the foreign markets.

(c) After marketing the same the Secretary of Agriculture shall redeem the said receipts issued to the farmers for said surplus percentages at the net amount realized from each commodity and grade averaged for the season. The said receipts shall be transferable and may be presented to any post office for redemption.

(d) Any failure or refusal of any processor, buyer, or farmer to comply herewith shall be a misdemeanor and punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, and any person falsifying any of said receipts shall be deemed guilty of a felony and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the amendment?

Mr. NORBECK. The amendment gives one more optional power to the President in connection with the agricultural part of the bill. In other words, it gives him the right to segregate the surplus if he sees fit. The necessity for it is that we have delayed action on the bill so long that it is hardly effective on this year's crop. With this provision it could be made so effective. There is nothing mandatory in the bill. I do not see why anyone should object to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I have an amendment, which I send to the desk and offer at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Connecticut proposes, in part II, commodity benefits, section 8, subsection 3, line 2, page 12, after the word "any", to strike out the word "basic", so as to make the line read:

Or any agricultural commodity or product thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Texas having failed to call up his motion to reconsider the vote by which sugar was put in the bill, is it in order for another Senator to call it up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are four motions to reconsider which must be disposed of by the Senate in order to get the bill finally disposed of. The Chair will lay them before the Senate as soon as the amendments are completed.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I have an amendment in the nature of a substitute which I desire to offer.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me first to offer an amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CAREY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I offer an amendment to section 1, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.
The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from South Carolina proposes:

On page 6, after line 4, to insert a new subsection, as follows:
"(d) If any cotton held by the Secretary of Agriculture is not disposed of under subsection (c), the Secretary is authorized to enter into similar option contracts with respect to such cotton conditioned upon a reduction of production in 1934 and permitting the producer in each case to exercise his option at any time up to January 1, 1935."

On page 6, line 8, strike out the figures "1935" and insert in lieu thereof "1936."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me to ask an arrangement by which sundry minor but perfecting amendments may be considered in connection with the Wagner amendment? These are amendments merely intended to make corrections in the text. They are not of substantial importance. There are several of them. I understand the Senator's amendment is an important amendment in the nature of a substitute and may take some time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CAREY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask for consideration of the amendments. With the exception of one, they are mere corrections either of numbers or of minor errors in the text. The one referred to merely transposes a paragraph to its proper place on a different page.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments submitted by the Senator from Arkansas will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Arkansas proposes the following amendments:

On page 12, line 10, strike out "seventh" and insert in lieu thereof "eighth."

Transpose the matter in italics, on page 26, lines 7 to 15, to page 25 as a new paragraph after the period in line 15, and before the matter in italics.

Strike out the matter in italics on page 25, line 15, "that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, upon" and insert "the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, upon."

On page 27, between lines 12 and 13, insert a center heading in capitals and small capitals "Part 7—Miscellaneous."

On page 28, between lines 5 and 6, insert a center heading in small capitals "National Board of Conciliation."

On page 29, between lines 12 and 13, insert a center heading in small capitals, "Loans to Fruit Growers."

Page 29, line 21, to strike out "7" and insert "8."

On page 12, line 10, to strike out "27a" and insert in lieu thereof "28"; renumber the succeeding sections; and on page 16, line 14, strike out "29" and in lieu thereof to insert "30."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Wyoming is about to offer a substitute. Before that is done I should like to offer an amendment which will take only a moment. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAREY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. STEPHENS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Mississippi proposes, on page 7, line 6, after the word "any", to insert the word "basic", so as to read:

(2) To enter into marketing agreements with processors, associations of producers, and others engaged in the handling, in the current of interstate or foreign commerce of any basic agricultural commodity or product thereof, after due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, the amendment which I am about to offer is in the nature of a substitute. It contains some 30 pages. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be waived, that it be printed in the RECORD following my remarks, and that I be given an opportunity to explain it. I think it will take less time of the Senate if I may be given this permission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the amendment be not read, but printed in the RECORD, and that he have an opportunity to explain it. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Wyoming is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I realize the hour is late, and I have no desire to keep the Senate much longer. I merely desire to make a brief explanation of my amendment.

The amendment which I have offered to the pending measure, while in the nature of a substitute, does not seek to amend title 2, covering "Agricultural credits", as the same was reported by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency.

The amendment also contains part 1 of title 1, relating to cotton-option contracts, but substitutes new matter for part 2, "Commodity benefits", and part 3, "Costs of production", of title 1. It eliminates part 2 of section 34 and section 36, the Thomas amendment.

The amendment to title 1 authorizes and directs the Secretary of Agriculture to lease farm land not to exceed 50,000,000 acres, which land had been planted to cotton, corn, wheat, and other cereals during the year 1932, and to enter into agreements with the owners of these lands to not plant such crops on the lands leased during the years 1933 and 1934.

No land except tilled acreage on any farm would be leased, and the terms of the lease would require that no part of such farms would be planted to the crops mentioned, and that the lessor would not engage in the production of the specified crops on other lands. The lessor would be permitted to occupy the buildings on his farm, to grow garden crops for family use, and to produce crops other than cotton, corn, wheat, and other cereals.

The amendment authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to solicit offers of leases and to accept offers of the lowest bidders. It can be expected that those farmers whose losses have been the greatest will offer their lands upon the lowest terms. It is true that the lands leased probably would be submarginal land, but this will help the farmer who owns more productive land and who produces his crops at a lower cost. The elimination of price-breaking surpluses should guarantee to him a fair income for what he produces.

There is naturally some question as to whether the leasing of 50 million acres of land is sufficient to accomplish the purpose of taking care of agricultural surpluses. The total area in crops in the United States is approximately 360 million acres. Under the proposed plan the leasing of 50 million acres would mean the retirement of about 14 percent of the total. While the amount of land to be leased covering each particular crop is not specified, if, in the administration of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture should lease 15 million acres of land heretofore planted to each of the three crops—cotton, wheat, and corn—the percentage retired from cotton production would be approximately 30 percent, from wheat 25 percent, and corn 15 percent.

It is my belief that the benefits would not be confined to the crops mentioned, but by cutting the acreage of corn and cereals benefits would accrue to the livestock producer, as higher prices for livestock, hogs, cattle, and sheep usually follow higher prices for corn. The same is also true of milk and dairy products, as the dairy industry consumes cereals—the price of milk and dairy products increasing with the price of these cereals.

A provision in the lease that the lessor will not engage in the production of cotton or cereals on other lands will retire all lands of the lessors from the production of these crops. It will reduce the possibility of substitution of other acreage for lands leased and will prevent a farmer from withdrawing certain of his lands and substituting others for production of these crops.

Consequently this plan will not require a large army to administer it. The administration plan would require the policing of farms of some 6,500,000 farmers, provided they all expected to benefit by the act. To retire from production 25 percent of a farmer's land reduces the volume of his production without properly reducing his taxes, interest, overhead, and living costs. Thus, in part at least, the benefits which he might receive for a higher price for a portion of his crops would be lost. A plan is much more easily administered which will retire from production of specified crops all the lands of some farmers than to attempt to retire part of the lands of all the farmers.

The amendment as printed provides for a manufacturers' tax of 2 percent on cereals and cotton after they are processed, which is an error in drafting, as the amount of the tax which would be necessary to reimburse the Treasury for advances made is 10 percent rather than 2 percent. This tax is a definite one, being 10 percent of the value of the product, while in the so-called "administration bill" the tax would vary from day to day with the change in prices, and in some instances would amount to 400 percent.

The provision in the administration measure for the levying of taxes on the processor is such that he would not dare to either accept orders or buy any large amount of raw materials for processing for fear of a change of prices through a change in tax rates. Consequently the farmer could only sell his products in small quantity to meet the processor's demand.

The amount of sales taxes to be levied upon the consumer of food and clothing—and at a time when many are starving—will amount to from eight hundred million to two billion dollars per year; while I believe the total amount of taxes, if this amendment is adopted, will not exceed $100,000,000.

Title 1 of the administration bill gives greater powers to the Secretary of Agriculture than should be given to anyone in an administrative position. Through the licensing provision of the bill, it would be possible for the Secretary to become an absolute dictator over all who are engaged in either the production or the processing of agricultural commodities. He could make rules and regulations both as to the amount and the commodity which the processor might process and regulate their distribution and sales. For the smallest infraction of these rules and regulations the processor could be put out of business.

It has been stated repeatedly in the discussion of the bill that no farmer would be compelled to share in its provisions. While I have no doubt that those who made this statement made it in good faith, I feel that as a practical proposition the business of every farmer would be dominated by the Department of Agriculture. No farmer could sell his products so that they would be exempt from a tax, even if he did not profit by the tax. There would be no free and open market for farm products; and the Secretary, through his taxing and licensing power, could not only limit the production of any processor but could fix and determine his markets and through the processor dominate the producer. The farmer who did not submit to the domination of the Department of Agriculture would have little opportunity to dispose of his crops.

When this measure was first submitted to the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, it was stated by a prominent member of that committee that the bill should be called a "patronage measure" rather than a bill "for the relief of agriculture." No one has yet stated the number of employees that will be necessary to administer this act. There has been no bill before Congress at this session which will do more to relieve unemployment—not to mention the fulfillment of campaign promises to the faithful.

If this bill becomes a law, we will have a new bootlegger—the bootlegger of agricultural products. By repealing the eighteenth amendment we hope to get rid of vendors of illicit liquor and to reduce our prison population. If this act becomes a law, we will still need our penitentiaries, and the Prohibition Enforcement Bureau should be transferred to the Department of Agriculture. Only by an agency of this kind can the fear of God be put in the American farmer so he can be made to obey the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture.

The American people are tired of governmental spies and agents—they hate bureaucracy—yet we are establishing the greatest army of "snoopers" in the history of the Nation.

Lastly, we must consider the administration of this act should it become a law. Naturally the Secretary of Agriculture must delegate his authority to others, so it is necessary to consider who will be his assistants. First there is Mordecai Ezekiel. This measure is largely his "brain storm." Mr. Ezekiel is a statistician who has become an agricultural economist and now holds the position of economic advisor to the Secretary. Next we have Prof. "Rexall" Tugwell, until recently a professor of political economy at Columbia University—"a subway farmer"—as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. Both of these gentlemen have made extended visits to Russia, where they have studied Russian agriculture. No two men should be better qualified to adapt Russian methods to American agriculture than these two gentlemen. If it should develop that the job was too big for them, it would be possible to either get additional professors from Columbia University, or, if necessary, some Russian brothers could be imported who have a more practical knowledge of Russian methods.

I am in favor of any and all measures which I believe will help the farmer, and will vote for them. I am not opposed to this bill because it is a Democratic measure; as I have stated before, I feel that title 3, relating to farm mortgages, if sympathetically administered, will be of the greatest benefit to the American farmer. As to the balance of the bill, except the "cotton option plan", I believe it will harm the producers, that it is impractical, and I am fearful of its administration.

The plan which I am proposing is easily administered, does not place a heavy burden upon the consumer, and will increase the price of agricultural commodities. It is my hope that the amendment as offered, if enacted into law, will provide a method through the retirement of acreage whereby production can be diminished until the huge carry-overs are consumed and the supply balanced to market demand. By the leasing of lands the farmer is left on his farm, in possession of his home, and with the means of producing food for his family use. His operations in livestock will not be disturbed, and ruinous losses through overproduction will be reduced through rentals, which will be substituted to those farmers who reduce their tilled acreage.

Mr. President, I am not going to take any further time of the Senate, as I realize the Senators are anxious to get through with the bill. I ask that the amendment may be printed at this point following my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That order has already been made.

The amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], in the nature of a substitute, is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"TITLE I. AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"That (a) it is hereby declared that the depression in prices for agricultural commodities and the disparity between the prices of agricultural and other commodities have created conditions which affect sales of agricultural products with a national interest, which burden and obstruct the normal flow of commerce, and which render imperative the enactment of title I of this act for the relief of a national economic emergency.

"(b) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress (1) to encourage and to assist agricultural readjustment and planning, and to aid in balancing agricultural production to market demand, and thereby restoring the parity between agriculture and other industries, and (2) to secure to the producers of agricultural commodities for that part of the domestic production of such commodities that will be needed for domestic consumption a price at least equal to the average domestic cost of production for such commodities.

"Part 1. Land-rental plan

"Sec. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by lease or contract not to exceed 50,000,000 acres of land in the United States which were during the crop season of 1932 planted to cotton or wheat, corn, or other cereals, or which were fallowed during the summer and fall of 1932 for planting to such crops in 1933.

"Sec. 3. (a) The general purpose of part 1 of this title shall be the balancing of agricultural production to the market demands by withdrawing the lands leased hereunder from the production of the above commodities. The terms and conditions of such leases and contracts shall be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, but no lease or contract shall be for a period longer than 2 years.

"(b) The Secretary of Agriculture under this act is authorized to lease or contract for only the tilled land of any farm, and shall require that, during the term of the lease or contract, the lessor will not increase his acreage of other lands planted to said crops; but the lessor, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, may use the buildings and improvements on land so leased, and may produce thereon crops other than cotton or wheat, corn, or other cereal.

"(c) Sufficient acreage upon which to grow garden crops for family use shall be allowed the lessor of any lands.

"Sec. 4. The Secretary of Agriculture shall, in such manner as he shall determine, proceed immediately to solicit the offer of leases for any such lands by the owners thereof, and shall, within 30 days after the enactment of this act, begin to lease the same upon the best terms obtainable, up to a maximum of 50,000,000 acres.

"Sec. 5. (a) In addition to any other tax or duty imposed by law there is hereby imposed a tax of 10 percent of the sale price on the sale of every article manufactured wholly or in chief value from cotton or cereals and sold in the United States by the manufacturer or importer thereof.

"(b) Such tax shall take effect on the day following the date of enactment of this act, and shall continue in force until the 1st day of June 1935.

"Sec. 6. (a) The taxes provided in this title shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such taxes shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

"(b) All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by title IV of the Revenue Act of 1932, shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, be applicable in respect of taxes imposed by this title: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to permit postponement, for a period not exceeding 60 days, of the payment of taxes covered by any return.

"(c) If (1) any person has, prior to the date the tax under this title takes effect, made a bona-fide contract for the sale, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect of the sale of which a tax is imposed under this title, or in respect of which a tax is imposed under this subsection, and (2) such contract does not permit the adding to the amount to be paid under such contract, of the whole of such tax, then (unless the contract prohibits such addition) the vendee shall, in lieu of the vendor, pay so much of the tax as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. If a contract of the character above described was made with the United States or with any person other than a dealer, no tax shall be collected under this title. The taxes payable by the vendee shall be paid to the vendor at the time the sale is consummated, and shall be collected, returned, and paid to the United States by such vendor. In case of failure or refusal by the vendee to pay such taxes to the vendor, the vendor shall report the facts to the Commissioner, who shall cause collection of such taxes to be made from the vendee.

"Sec. 7. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from the proceeds of the taxes imposed under this title such sums as may be necessary for the purposes of this title, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to advance, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Secretary of Agriculture such sums, not exceeding $150,000,000, as may be necessary for the payment of rentals upon lands leased under the provisions of part 1 of this title and administrative expenses in connection therewith. The amount of any such advance shall be deducted from such funds as subsequently become available under this subsection.

"Sec. 8. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to make and promulgate and enforce such rules and regulations for the carrying out of the purposes and intent of part 1 of this title as may be deemed necessary.

"(b) The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to carry out the terms and provisions of part 1 of this title, and is hereby authorized, subject to the approval of the President, to use any agencies and personnel of the Government that may be necessary in carrying out the same: Provided, That when any existing agency or personnel of the Government is used, no additional compensation shall be paid therefor.

"Sec. 9. Any person who shall knowingly make any material false representation for the purpose of making a lease, or of obtaining any benefit under part 1 of this title, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

"Part 2. Cotton-option contracts

"Sec. 10. The Federal Farm Board and all departments and other agencies of the Government are hereby directed—

"(a) To sell to the Secretary of Agriculture at such price as may be agreed upon, not in excess of the market price, all cotton now owned by them.

"(b) To take such action and to make such settlements as are necessary in order to acquire full legal title to all cotton on which money has been loaned or advanced by any department or agency of the United States or held as collateral for loans or advances and to make final settlement of such loans and advances. In making such settlements the cotton shall be taken over at prices equal to the amounts loaned or advanced, directly or indirectly, plus the carrying charges and operating costs thereon. The Department or other agency shall sell this cotton also to the Secretary in the same manner as is provided in the preceding paragraph hereof.

"The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to purchase the cotton specified in paragraphs (a) and (b).

"Sec. 11. The Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to borrow money upon all cotton in his possession or control and deposit as collateral for such loans the warehouse receipts for such cotton.

"Sec. 12. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to advance money and to make loans to the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire such cotton and to pay the carrying costs thereon, in such amounts and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the Secretary and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with such warehouse receipts as collateral security.

"Sec. 13. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the producers of cotton to sell to any such producer an amount of cotton equivalent in amount to the amount of reduction in production of cotton by such producer below the amount produced by him in the preceding crop year, in all cases where such producer agrees in writing to reduce the amount of cotton produced by him in 1933, below his production in the previous year, by not less than 30 percent, without increase in commercial fertilization per acre.

"(b) To any such producer so agreeing to reduce production the Secretary of Agriculture shall deliver a non-transferable-option contract agreeing to sell to said producer an amount, equivalent to the amount of his agreed reduction, of the cotton in the possession and control of the Secretary.

"(c) The producer is to have the option to buy said cotton at the average price paid by the Secretary for the cotton procured under section 10, and is to have the right at any time up to January 1, 1934, to exercise his option, upon proof that he has complied with his contract and with all the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture with respect thereto, by taking said cotton upon payment by him of his option price and all actual carrying charges on such cotton; or the Secretary may sell such cotton for the account of such producer, paying him the excess of the market price at the date of sale over the average price above referred to after deducting all actual and necessary carrying charges: Provided, That in no event shall the producer be held responsible or liable for financial loss incurred in the holding of such cotton or on account of the carrying charges therein: Provided further, That such agreement to curtail cotton production shall contain a further provision that such cotton producer shall not use the land taken out of cotton production for the production for sale, directly or indirectly, of any other nationally produced agricultural commodity or product.

"Sec. 14. The Secretary shall sell the cotton held by him at his discretion, but subject to the foregoing provisions: Provided, That he shall dispose of all cotton held by him by March 1, 1935: Provided further, That he is authorized to sell unlimited amounts at any time a price equivalent to not less than 10 cents, basis middling,  $\frac{3}{8}$ -inch staple, at the ports can be procured.

"TITLE II—AGRICULTURAL CREDITS

"Part 1. Amendments to Federal Farm Loan Act

"ISSUANCE OF BONDS BY LAND BANKS

"Sec. 15. Section 32 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 991), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Until such time as the Farm Loan Commissioner determines that Federal farm-loan bonds (other than those issued under this paragraph) are readily salable in the open market at a yield not in excess of 4 percent per annum, but in no case more than 2 years after this paragraph takes effect, Federal land banks may issue farm-loan bonds as authorized under this act, for the purpose of making new loans, or for purchasing mortgages or exchanging bonds for mortgages as provided in paragraph "Second" of section 13 of this act. The aggregate amount of the bonds issued under this paragraph shall not exceed $2,000,000,000, and such bonds shall be issued in such denominations as the Farm Loan Commissioner shall prescribe, shall bear interest at a rate not in excess of 4 percent per annum, and shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed as to interest by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof. In the event that the issuing bank or banks shall be unable to pay upon demand, when due, the interest on any such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Upon the payment of such interest by the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so paid shall become an obligation to the United States of the issuing bank or banks and shall bear interest at the same rate as that borne by the bonds upon which the interest has been so paid. After the expiration of 1 year from the date this paragraph takes effect, if in the opinion of the Farm Loan Commissioner any part of the proceeds of the bonds authorized to be issued under this paragraph is not required for the purpose of making new loans or for purchasing mortgages or exchanging bonds for mortgages as herein provided, such bonds may be issued within the maximum limit herein specified for the purpose of refinancing any outstanding issues of Federal farm loan bonds; but no such bonds shall be issued after 2 years from the date this paragraph takes effect for the purpose of such refinancing.

"PURCHASE, REDUCTION, AND REFINANCING OF FARM MORTGAGES"

"SEC. 16. Paragraph 'Second' of section 13 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'Second. In order to reduce and/or refinance farm mortgages, to invest such funds as may be in its possession in the purchase of qualified first mortgages on farm lands situated within the Federal land-bank district within which it is organized or for which it is acting, or to exchange farm-loan bonds for any duly recorded first mortgages on farm lands executed prior to the date this paragraph, as amended, takes effect, at a price which shall not exceed in each individual case the amount of the unpaid principal of the mortgage on the date of such purchase or exchange, or 50 percent of the value of the land mortgaged and 20 percent of the value of the permanent insured improvements thereon as determined upon an appraisal made pursuant to this act, whichever is the smaller: Provided, That any mortgagor whose mortgage is acquired by a Federal land bank under this paragraph shall be entitled to have his farm-mortgage indebtedness refinanced in accordance with the provisions of sections 7 and 8 of this act on the basis of the amount paid by the bank for his mortgage.'

"EXTENSION OF LOANS"

"SEC. 17. Paragraph 'Tenth' of section 13 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 781), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: 'The terms of any such extension shall be such as will not defer the collection of any obligation due by any borrower which, after investigation by the bank of the situation of such borrower, is shown to be within his capacity to meet. In the case of any such extension made prior to the expiration of 5 years from the date this paragraph, as amended, takes effect, or in the case of any deferment of principal as provided in paragraph "Twelfth" of section 12 of this act, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, on behalf of the United States, upon the request of the Federal land bank making the extension, and with the approval of the Farm Loan Commissioner, to subscribe at such periods as the Commissioner shall determine, to the paid-in surplus of such bank an amount equal to the amount of all such extensions and deferments made by the bank during the preceding period. Such subscriptions shall be subject to call, in whole or in part, by the bank with the approval of the Commissioner upon 30 days' notice. To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make such subscriptions to the paid-in surplus of the Federal land banks, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $50,000,000, to be immediately available and remain available until expended. Upon payment to any Federal land bank of the amount of any such subscription, such bank shall execute and deliver a receipt therefor to the Secretary of the Treasury in form to be prescribed by the Farm Loan Commissioner. The amount of any subscriptions to the paid-in surplus of any such bank may be repaid in whole or in part at any time in the discretion of the bank and with the approval of the Farm Loan Commissioner, and the Commissioner may at any time require such subscriptions to be repaid in whole or in part if in his opinion the bank has resources available therefor.'

"REDUCTION OF INTEREST ON LOANS AND DEFERMENT OF PRINCIPAL"

"SEC. 18. Section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 771-772), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'Twelfth. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph "Second", the rate of interest on any loans on mortgages made through national farm-loan associations by any Federal land bank, outstanding on the date this paragraph takes effect or made within 2 years after such date, shall not exceed 4½ percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 5 years commencing 60 days after the date this paragraph takes effect; and no payment of the principal portion of any installment of any such loan shall be required during such 5-year period if the borrower shall not be in default with respect to any other condition or covenant of his mortgage. The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay each Federal land bank, as soon as practicable after October 1, 1933, and after the end of each quarter thereafter, such amount as the Farm Loan Commissioner certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury is equal to the amount by which interest payments on mortgages held by such bank have been reduced, during the preceding quarter, by reason of this paragraph; but in any case in which the Farm Loan Commissioner finds that the amount of interest payable by such bank during any quarter has been reduced by reason of the refinancing of bonds under section 32 of this act, the amount of the reduction so found shall be deducted from the amount payable to such bank under this paragraph. No payments shall be made to a bank with respect to any period after June 30, 1933. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000,000 for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Treasury to make payments to Federal land banks which accrue during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and such additional amounts as may be necessary to make payments accruing during subsequent fiscal years.'

"INCREASE OF AMOUNT OF LOANS TO BORROWERS"

"SEC. 19. Paragraph 'Seventh' of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 771) (relating to the limitations as to amount of loans), is amended by striking out '$25,000' and inserting '$50,000, but loans to any one borrower shall not exceed $25,000 unless approved by the Farm Loan Commissioner.'

"DIRECT LOANS"

"SEC. 20. Section 7 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the last paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraphs:

"'Whenever it shall appear to the Farm Loan Commissioner that national farm-loan associations have not been formed in any locality in the continental United States, or that the farmers residing in the territory covered by the charter of a national farm-loan association are unable to apply to the Federal land bank of the district for loans on account of the inability of the bank to accept applications from such association, the Farm Loan Commissioner may, in his discretion, authorize said bank to make direct loans to borrowers secured by first mortgages on farm lands situated within any such locality or territory. Except as herein otherwise specifically provided, all provisions of this act applicable with respect to loans made through national farm-loan associations shall, insofar as practicable, apply with respect to such direct loans, and the Farm Loan Commissioner is authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary with respect to such direct loans.

"'The rate of interest on such direct loans made at any time by any Federal land bank shall be one half of 1 percent per annum in excess of the rate of interest charged to borrowers on mortgage loans made at such time by the bank through national farm-loan associations.

"'Each borrower who obtains a direct loan from a Federal land bank shall subscribe and pay for stock in such bank in the sum of $5 for each $100 or fraction thereof borrowed. Such stock shall be held by such Federal land bank as collateral security for the loan of the borrower and shall participate in all dividends. Upon full payment of the loan such stock shall, if still outstanding, be canceled at par, or, in the event that such stock shall have become impaired, at the estimated value thereof as approved by the Farm Loan Commissioner, and the proceeds thereof shall be paid to the borrower.

"'Each such borrower shall covenant in his mortgage that, whenever there are 10 or more borrowers who have obtained from a Federal land bank direct loans under the provisions of this section aggregating not less than $20,000, and who reside in a locality which may, in the opinion of the Farm Loan Commissioner, be conveniently covered by the charter of and served by a national farm-loan association, he will unite with such other borrowers to form a national farm-loan association. Such borrowers shall organize the association subject to the requirements and the conditions specified in this section, so far as the same may be applicable, and in accordance with rules and regulations of the Farm Loan Commissioner. As soon as the organization of the association has been approved by the Farm Loan Commissioner, the stock in the Federal land bank held by each of the members of such association shall be canceled at par, and in lieu thereof the bank shall issue in the name of the association an equal amount of stock in said bank, which stock shall be held by said bank as collateral security as provided in this section with respect to other loans through national farm-loan associations. Thereupon there shall be issued to each such member an amount of capital stock in the association equal to the amount which he previously held in said bank, which stock shall be held by said association as collateral security as provided in section 8 of this act. The board of directors of said association shall adopt a resolution authorizing and directing its secretary-treasurer on behalf of said association to endorse, and thereby become liable for the payment of, the mortgages taken from its charter members by the Federal land bank. When it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Farm Loan Commissioner that all the foregoing conditions have been complied with, and upon the granting of the charter by the Farm Loan Commissioner, the interest rate paid by each charter member of such association whose loan is in good standing shall, beginning with his next regular installment date, be reduced to the rate of interest paid by borrowers on new loans made through national farm-loan associations in the same Federal land bank district at the time the said loan was made to such charter member.

"'Charges to be paid by applicants for direct loans from a Federal land bank shall not exceed amounts to be fixed by the Farm Loan Commissioner and shall in no case exceed the charges which may be made to applicants for loans and borrowers through national farm-loan associations under the provisions of sections 11 and 13 of this act.'

"LOANS TO RECEIVERS"

"SEC. 21. Any receiver appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board pursuant to section 29 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, is authorized, for the purpose of paying taxes on farm real estate owned by the bank or securing the mortgages held by it, with the approval of the Farm Loan Commissioner, to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and to issue receiver's certificates against the assets of such bank as security for any loan received from the corporation under this section, and such certificates shall constitute a prior lien on such assets. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make loans to such receivers for the purposes of this section.

"Part 2. Joint-stock land banks"

"LIMITATIONS ON ISSUE OF BONDS AND LENDING"

"Sec. 22. After the date of enactment of this act no joint-stock land bank shall issue any tax-exempt bonds or make any farm loans except such as are necessary and incidental to the refinancing of existing loans or bond issues or to the sale of any real estate now owned or hereafter acquired by such bank.

"LOANS TO JOINT-STOCK LAND BANKS TO PROVIDE FOR ORDERLY LIQUIDATION"

"Sec. 23. (a) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make available to the Farm Loan Commissioner, out of the funds of the Corporation, the sum of $100,000,000, to be used for a period not exceeding 2 years from the date of enactment of this act for the purpose of making loans to the joint-stock land banks organized and doing business under the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, at a rate of interest not to exceed 4 percent per annum, payable annually. Such loans shall be made upon application therefor by such banks and upon compliance with the requirements of this section. The amount which may be loaned hereunder to any such bank shall not exceed an amount having the same proportion to the said $100,000,000 as the unpaid principal of the mortgages held by such bank on the date of enactment of this act bears to the total amount of the unpaid principal of the mortgages held by all the joint-stock land banks on such date.

"(b) Any joint-stock land bank applying for a loan under this section shall deliver to the Farm Loan Commissioner as collateral security therefor first mortgages or purchase-money mortgages on farm lands, first mortgages on farm real estate owned by the bank in fee simple, or such other collateral as may be available to said bank, including sales contracts and sheriff's certificates on farm lands. The real estate upon which such collateral is based shall be appraised by appraisers appointed under the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, and the borrowing bank shall be entitled to borrow not to exceed 60 percent of the value of such real estate as determined by such appraisal. Fees for such appraisals shall be paid by the applicant banks in such amounts as may be fixed by the Farm Loan Commissioner. No such loan shall be made until the applicant bank, under regulations to be prescribed by the Farm Loan Commissioner, (1) shall have agreed to grant to each borrower then indebted to the bank under the terms of a first mortgage a reduction to 5 percent per annum in the rate of interest specified in such mortgage, beginning at his next regular installment date occurring more than 60 days after the date of enactment of this act, and (2) shall have agreed to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that during a period of 2 years from the date of enactment of this act the bank will not proceed against the mortgagor on account of default in the payment of interest or principal due under the terms of its mortgage and will not foreclose its mortgage unless the property covered by such mortgage is abandoned by the mortgagor or unless, in the opinion of the Commissioner, such foreclosure is necessary for other reasons.

"LOANS BY RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION TO JOINT-STOCK LAND BANKS FOR EMERGENCY PURPOSES"

"Sec. 24. (a) In addition to loans authorized to be made to joint-stock land banks as provided in section 23 of this act and as provided in section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to make loans, at a rate of interest not to exceed 4 percent per annum, to any joint-stock land bank for the purpose of securing the postponement for 2 years from the date of the enactment of this act of the foreclosure of first mortgages held by such banks on account of (1) default in the payment of interest and principal due under the terms of the mortgage, and (2) unpaid delinquent taxes, excluding interest and penalties, which may be secured by the lien of said mortgage: Provided, That during the period of postponement of foreclosure such bank shall charge the mortgagor interest at a rate not exceeding 4 percent per annum on the aggregate amount of such delinquent taxes and defaulted interest and principal with respect to which loans are made pursuant to this section. The amount loaned to any joint-stock land bank under this section shall be made without reappraisal: Provided, That the amount loaned with respect to any mortgage on account of unpaid principal shall not exceed 5 percent of the total unpaid principal of such mortgage, and the total amount loaned to any such land bank with respect to any mortgage shall not exceed 25 percent of the total unpaid principal of such mortgage.

"(b) No such loan shall be made with respect to any mortgage unless the Corporation is satisfied that the mortgagor, after exercising ordinary diligence to pay his accrued delinquent taxes and meet accrued interest and principal payments, has defaulted thereon; and unless the bank shall have agreed to the satisfaction of the Corporation that during such 2-year period the bank will not foreclose such mortgage unless the property covered thereby is abandoned by the mortgagor or unless in the opinion of the Corporation such foreclosure is necessary for other reasons.

"(c) Each such loan shall be secured by an assignment to the Corporation of the lien of the taxes and/or of the bank's mortgage with respect to which the loan is made: Provided, That the part of each such lien so assigned representing the interest and principal due and unpaid in any such mortgage which has been assigned to the farm-loan registrar shall be subordinate to the existing lien of the bank for the balance of the indebtedness then or thereafter to become due under the terms of such mortgage; but the Corporation may require the bank to furnish additional collateral as security for such loan, if such collateral is available to the bank.

"(d) The Corporation is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section and to make the relief contemplated immediately available.

"Part 3. Loans to farmers by Farm Loan Commissioner"

"REDUCTION OF DEBTS AND REDEMPTION OF FORECLOSED FARMS"

"Sec. 25. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to allocate and make available to the Farm Loan Commissioner the sum of $200,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be used for the purpose of making loans as hereinafter provided to any farmer, secured by a first or second mortgage upon the whole or any part of the farm property, real or personal, including crops, of the farmer. The amount of the mortgage given by any farmer, together with all prior mortgages or other evidences of indebtedness secured by such farm property of the farmer, shall not exceed 75 percent of the value thereof, as determined upon an appraisal made pursuant to the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended; nor shall a loan in excess of $5,000 be made to any one farmer. Every mortgage made under this section shall contain an agreement providing for the repayment of the loan on an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual or semiannual installments, sufficient to cover (1) interest on unpaid principal at a rate not to exceed 5 percent per annum and (2) such payments equal in amount to be applied on principal as will extinguish the debt within an agreed period of not more than 10 years from the date the first payment on principal is due: Provided, That during the first 3 years the loan is in effect payments of interest only may be required. No loan shall be made under this section unless the holder of any prior mortgage or instrument of indebtedness secured by such farm property arranges to the satisfaction of the Farm Loan Commissioner to limit his right to proceed against the farmer and such farm property for default in payment of principal. Loans under this section shall be made for the following purposes only: (1) Refinancing, either in connection with proceedings under chapter VIII of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, as amended (relating to agricultural compositions and extensions), or otherwise, any indebtedness, secured or unsecured, of the farmer, (2) providing working capital for his farm operations, and (3) enabling any farmer to redeem and/or repurchase farm property owned by him and occupied by him as a home prior to foreclosure, which has been foreclosed within 1 year prior to the enactment of this act or which is foreclosed after the enactment of this act. The provisions of paragraph "Ninth" of section 13 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (relating to charges to applicants for loans and borrowers from the Federal land banks), shall, so far as practicable, apply to loans made under this section. As used in this section, the term "farmer" means any individual who is bona fide engaged in farming operations, either personally or through an agent or tenant, or the principal part of whose income is derived from farming operations, and includes a personal representative of a deceased farmer.

"REGULATIONS"

"Sec. 26. The Farm Loan Commissioner is authorized to make such rules and regulations and to appoint such agents as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title and to make the relief contemplated by this title immediately available.

"FACILITIES OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS AND NATIONAL FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS MADE AVAILABLE"

"Sec. 27. The Federal land banks and the national farm loan associations are authorized, upon request of the Farm Loan Commissioner, to make available to him their services and facilities to aid in administering the provisions of this title.

"PENALTIES"

"Sec. 28. Any person who shall knowingly make any material false representation for the purpose of obtaining any loan under part 3 of this title, or in assisting in obtaining any such loan, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both.

"Part 4. Refinancing of agricultural improvement district indebtedness for the benefit of farmers"

"LOANS BY RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION"

"Sec. 29. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans as hereinafter provided, in an aggregate amount not exceeding $50,000,000, to drainage districts, levee districts, levee and drainage districts, irrigation districts, and similar districts, duly organized under the laws of any State, and to political subdivisions of States which, prior to the date of enactment of this act, have completed projects devoted chiefly to the improvement of land for agricultural purposes. Such loans shall be made for the purpose of enabling any such district or political subdivision (hereafter referred to as the 'borrower') to reduce and refinance its outstanding indebtedness incurred in connection with any such project, and shall be subject to the same terms and conditions as loans made under section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended; except that (1) the term of any such loan shall not exceed 40 years; (2) each such loan shall be secured by refunding bonds issued to the Corporation by the borrower which are a lien on the real property within the project or on the amount of the assessments levied on such property by the borrower pursuant to State law, or by such other collateral as may be acceptable to the Corporation; (3) the borrower shall agree not to issue during the term of the loan any bonds so secured except with the consent of the Corporation; (4) the borrower shall pay to the Corporation, until all bonds of the borrower held by the Corporation are retired, an amount equal to the amount by which the assessments against the real property within the project collected by the borrower exceed the costs of operation and maintenance of the project and interest on its outstanding obligations; and (5) the borrower shall agree, to the satisfaction of the Corporation, to reduce the outstanding indebtedness to the borrower of the landowners within such project by an amount corresponding to that by which the indebtedness of the borrower is reduced by reason of the operation of this section, to distribute the amount of such reduction among such landowners on a pro rata basis, to cancel and retire its outstanding bonds in an aggregate amount equal to the amount of the reduction so distributed, and to permit the Corporation, in the case of the payment of the bonds of the borrower or the liquidation of such project, to participate in such payment or in the proceeds of such liquidation on the basis of the face amount of the bonds so retired plus the face amount of the bonds held by the Corporation as security for the loan. No loan shall be made under this section until the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (A) has caused an appraisal to be made of the property securing and/or underlying the outstanding bonds of the applicant, (B) has determined that the project of the applicant is economically sound, and (C) has been satisfied that an agreement has been entered into between the applicant and the holders of its outstanding bonds under which the applicant will be able to purchase or refund such bonds at a price determined by the Corporation to be reasonable after taking into consideration the average market price of such bonds over the 6 months' period ending March 1, 1933, and under which a substantial reduction will be brought about in the amount of the outstanding indebtedness of the applicant.

"Part 5. Increase of lending power of Reconstruction Finance Corporation"

"Sec. 30. In order to provide funds to carry out the purposes of this title, the amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered under section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to have outstanding at any one time is hereby increased by $300,000,000.

"Part 6. Functions of Farm Loan Commissioner under Executive orders"

"Sec. 31. If and when any Executive order heretofore transmitted to the Congress pursuant to title IV of part II of the Legislative Appropriation Act of 1933, as amended, shall become effective, all functions, powers, authority, and duties conferred upon or vested in the Farm Loan Commissioner by this title shall be held and exercised by him subject to all the terms and conditions in any such Executive order the same as if such functions, powers, authority, and duties were specifically named in such Executive order or orders.

"Part 7. Short title"

"Sec. 32. This title may be cited as the 'Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933.'"

"TITLE III. REGULATION OF CURRENCY"

"Part 1. To coin money and regulate the value thereof."

"Sec. 33. Whenever the President finds, upon investigation, that (1) the foreign commerce of the United States is adversely affected by reason of the depreciation in the value of the currency of any other government or governments in relation to the present standard value of gold, or (2) action under this section is necessary in order to regulate and maintain the parity of currency issues of the United States, or (3) an economic emergency requires an expansion of credit, or (4) an expansion of credit is necessary to secure by international agreement a stabilization at proper levels of the currencies of various governments, the President is authorized, in his discretion—

"(a) To direct the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into agreements with the several Federal Reserve banks and with the Federal Reserve Board whereby the Federal Reserve Board will, and it is hereby authorized to, notwithstanding any provisions of law or rules and regulations to the contrary, permit such Reserve banks to agree that they will, (1) conduct, pursuant to existing law, throughout specified periods, open-market operations in obligations of the United States Government or corporations in which the United States is the majority stockholder, and (2) purchase directly and hold in portfolio for an agreed period or periods of time Treasury bills or other obligations of the United States Government in an aggregate sum of $3,000,000,000 in addition to those they may then hold, unless prior to the termination of such period or periods the Secretary shall consent to their sale. No suspension of reserve requirements of the Federal Reserve banks, under the terms of section 11 (c) of the Federal Reserve Act, necessitated by reason of operations under this section, shall require the imposition of the graduated tax upon any deficiency in reserves as provided in said section 11 (c). Nor shall it require any automatic increase in the rates of interest or discount charged by any Federal Reserve bank, as otherwise specified in that section. The Federal Reserve Board, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require the Federal Reserve banks to take such action as may be necessary, in the judgment of the Board and of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prevent undue credit expansion.

"(b) If the Secretary, when directed by the President, is unable to secure the assent of the several Federal Reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board to the agreements authorized in this section, or if operations under the above provisions prove to be inadequate to meet the purposes of this section, or if for any other reason additional measures are required in the judgment of the President to meet such purposes, then the President is authorized—

"(1) To direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be issued in such amount or amounts as he may from time to time order, United States notes, as provided in the act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes and for the redemption of funding thereof and for funding the floating debt of the United States", approved February 25, 1862, and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, in the same size and of similar color to the Federal Reserve notes heretofore issued and in denominations of $1, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, and $10,000; but notes issued under this subsection shall be issued only for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States and for purchasing United States bonds and other interest-bearing obligations of the United States: Provided, That when any such notes are used for such purpose the bond or other obligation so acquired or taken up shall be retired and canceled. Such notes shall be issued at such times and in such amounts as the President may approve, but the aggregate amount of such notes outstanding at any time shall not exceed $3,000,000,000. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to retire and cancel 4 percent annually of such outstanding notes, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to retire and cancel annually 4 percent of such outstanding notes. Such notes and all other coins and currencies heretofore or hereafter coined or issued by or under the authority of the United States shall be legal tender for all debts public and private.

"Sec. 34. The Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to make and promulgate rules and regulations covering any action taken or to be taken by the President under subsection (a) or (b) of section 33.

"Sec. 35. Section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (c) thereof the following new paragraph:

"Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the Federal Reserve Board, upon the affirmative vote of not less than 5 of its members and with the approval of the President, may declare that an emergency exists by reason of credit expansion, and may by regulation during such emergency increase or decrease from time to time, in its discretion, the reserve balances required to be maintained against either demand or time deposits."

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, for fear there will not be a record vote on this matter, I should like to go on record personally by saying that, if I understand it aright, the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Wyoming is to strike out the agricultural part of the bill, the allotment plan, and to substitute the leasing plan?

Mr. CAREY. That is correct.

Mr. NORBECK. If I had a chance to vote the other way, I would vote to retain the agricultural part of the bill and strike out the refinancing of mortgages. I am afraid this new-fangled rural-credit scheme is going to get the Government in trouble, is going to get the Treasury in trouble, and is going to get the farmers in trouble. It may help the mortgage companies instead of the farmers. Of course, it is proposed with the best of intentions, but we cannot get ourselves out of trouble without earning power, and there is not much in the bill that will create earning power soon. I think the bill is not in bad shape, but it will depend entirely upon its administration. I hope we will have good administration.

However, we have let this year go by. We have said in effect to the farmer, "There is nothing for you this year. We will give you something next year." I proposed an amendment that might have done something for the farmers this year. I heard the almost solid "no" from the Democratic side, saying in effect that they did not want any change.

I am going to vote for the bill, anyway, but not without misgivings as to the farm-mortgage feature of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. CAREY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. GORE's name was called). I am authorized to announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. Both are necessarily absent at this moment.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] has a pair on this question with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. If the Senator from Delaware were present, he would vote "yea", and I am informed that the Senator from Montana, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. DUFFY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. I am not informed how he would vote. Therefore I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. I should like to say that if my colleague [Mr. WHITE] were present, he would vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] has a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 65, as follows:

YEAS—19

Austin	Goldsborough	Keyes	Schall
Barbour	Hale	McNary	Steiwer
Carey	Hatfield	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Dale	Hebert	Patterson	Walcott
Fess	Kean	Reed

NAYS—65

Adams	Connally	Kendrick	Reynolds
Ashurst	Coollidge	King	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Copeland	La Follette	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Costigan	Lewis	Russell
Bankhead	Couzens	Loneragan	Sheppard
Barkley	Cutting	Long	Shipstead
Black	Dickinson	McAdoo	Smith
Bone	Dieterich	McCarran	Stephens
Bratton	Dill	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Erickson	Murphy	Thomas, Utah
Bulkeley	Fletcher	Neely	Trammell
Bulow	Frazier	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Byrd	George	Norris	Wagner
Byrnes	Glass	Nye	Walsh
Capper	Harrison	Overton
Caraway	Hayden	Pittman
Clark	Johnson	Pope

NOT VOTING—11

Borah	Gore	McKellar	Wheeler
Davis	Hastings	Townsend	White
Duffy	Logan	Tydings

So, Mr. CAREY's amendment, in the nature of a substitute, was rejected.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I offer a motion to recommit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri offers a motion to recommit which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Missouri offers the following motion to recommit:

I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with instructions to report the bill back forthwith with an amendment striking out part 2 of title I.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, we have wandered far afield in the consideration of this bill. So many extraneous propositions have been offered as amendments to the bill, and been adopted by the Senate, that almost everybody has lost sight of the original scope of the bill and of the original bill itself.

My motion is to strike out the original bill and to leave the amendments which have been adopted, some of which are, in my opinion, very beneficial to the enactment.

Part 2 of title I includes those provisions which, in my judgment, establish a super farm board, probably promising the greatest disaster that ever happened to agriculture in the history of the United States. It includes those provisions which authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to emasculate the antitrust laws of the United States, which authorize him at will, at his whim, to impose tariff duties, and which give him the powers of a dictator over not only the farmers but the processors of the United States.

I believe that if the remaining portion of the bill were adopted, and the original bill stricken out, it would bring about reforms of great benefit to the people of the United States.

I offer this motion to recommit for the purpose of allowing the Members of the Senate to vote on the beneficial amendments which have been adopted, with the original bill left out.

In the long debate on this measure only one argument has been made in behalf of the portion of the bill which my motion is designed to strike out. No Senator has had the hardihood really to defend the measure. One and all have explained their support of this abortive measure by asserting that they have such great confidence in the President that they are sure he will stop the experiment before it can do too much damage. I prefer not to enter on such a hazardous experiment.

It has been almost universally agreed that this bill will in no case be effective in raising commodity prices without inflation, and that if we have inflation it will not be needed or effective. Since the inflation amendment has just been adopted, I submit that the dangerous grants of power to the Secretary of Agriculture should be deleted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. REED. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate sundry motions to reconsider, which should be disposed of before this bill can go to the House of Representatives. The clerk will state the motions.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] on April 10 entered a motion to reconsider, on page 2, line 18, after the word "tobacco", the amendment inserting "milk, and its products."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I withdraw the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion is withdrawn.

The clerk will state the next motion.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] entered a motion on April 20, on page 11, line 1, to reconsider the amendment relative to the reprocessing tax on cotton.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, that was a request made by the Department of Agriculture in reference to an amendment that was offered by my colleague [Mr. BYRNES]; but under the circumstances I think I will withdraw it, if the Senate will consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The clerk will state the next motion.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] entered a motion on April 21 to reconsider the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], on page 16, line 19, inserting "sugar beets and sugarcane."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, calling up this motion at this time would no doubt provoke considerable debate. Those in charge of the bill are extremely anxious to get final action on it tonight, so I am perfectly willing to withdraw the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The clerk will state the next motion.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] entered a motion on April 25 to strike out the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], on page 13, after line 8, inserting subsection (c) relative to joint-stock land banks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in connection with the debate on this question I ask that a statement issued by myself to the press with reference to my position on the matter, and two brief editorials printed in the leading Republican newspaper of New Hampshire, the Manchester Union, on Controlled Inflation and the Inflation Debate, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR WALSH ON THE PENDING FARM RELIEF BILL

The plight of agriculture admits of no dispute. Restoration of some measure of prosperity to the farmer is indispensable to our economic recovery.

Congress has listened to many plans for farm relief. Congress has authorized various emergency aids in the way of farm credits, and in the creation of the Federal Farm Board and the establishment of a $500,000,000 revolving fund, the Government undertook a large and costly experiment in an abortive attempt to control farm surpluses and to peg prices of farm commodities. The Farm Board experiment was a ghastly failure.

We have before us now another farm-relief plan of enormous magnitude and complexity. In submitting this plan to Congress the President, with commendable candor, said that the plan was an experiment the feasibility of which could only be determined by trial. He described it as an untrodden path.

The underlying purpose of the present bill, as indeed has been the underlying purpose of almost every farm-relief proposal, is to overcome the existing disparity between the price level of farm products and the price level of manufactured goods. The elimination of this disparity, if its elimination be possible, is a desirable objective. This bill proposes to eliminate this disparity by the employment of various artificial devices to raise the price level of farm commodities. It is hoped to accomplish that in part by offering various inducements to agriculture to curtail production and in part by levying taxes on the products of agriculture and passing back to the producer the tax so levied.

It is impossible to know what those taxes are to be. It is impossible to say what this bill will cost the Government or cost the American people or how many dollars it will actually put into the pockets of the farmer.

The proponents of the bill argue very plausibly that it is impossible to determine these matters in advance; that the whole scheme is predicated on the idea of extreme flexibility.

Almost everything with respect to the working out of the plan is a matter of estimate, conjecture, or hypothesis.

It is suggested that the consumer is not to be unduly prejudiced in that the consumer's interest is to be taken into account in fixing taxes; that competitive conditions are to be taken into account; that compensatory taxes and tariffs are to be invoked wherever necessary to preserve an equilibrium in competitive positions.

I do not know how this gigantic price-lifting scheme is going to work out. I do not know whether it is going to work at all. I do not believe anyone else has any real assurance that the plan will succeed. I view many aspects of the plan with grave apprehension.

But it is the only plan for farm relief now offered to us. Perhaps trial and error is the only method through which a solution of the farm problem will be found.

Our President is dealing courageously and vigorously with the overwhelming problems of the present hour. He has asked us for whole-hearted support and we are glad to give it to him. He has called upon us to follow his leadership and we are doing so. He has asked us to assent to the farm-relief program embodied in this measure. Both in broad outline and in detail the bill before us is the handiwork of expert advisers in whom the President reposes highest confidence. The President has assured us that though the good which may follow from this bill is as yet problematical, no harm will follow from it because if harm is to ensue he will be the first to discard and abandon the whole scheme.

Under these circumstances, though I personally repose little confidence in the workability of the plan and am apprehensive that its hoped-for benefits to agriculture may prove elusive, I feel constrained, nevertheless, to give the measure my support.

The amendments added to the original bill making provision for refinancing farm mortgages and for controlled inflation of the currency have my approval and support, and in my opinion are necessary measures to the rehabilitation program seeking to lift us out of the depression.

The editorials are as follows:

[From the Manchester Union of Apr. 19, 1933]

CONTROLLED INFLATION

Amid the numerous economic panaceas for depression, many of them strongly suggesting the "socialized state" in which government participation in business is raised to the nth degree, there are two at least, both primary and fundamental, to which most Americans who remain faithful to the political economy which made America great, will assent. These two are: A balanced Budget and a controlled inflation.

Congress promptly provided the President with the summary power needed to achieve a balanced Budget, and the President swiftly and courageously used that power to cut expenses and to assess a Federal tax on beer, the two combined sufficing to cut Government costs by approximately a billion dollars. This action, if not impaired by later increases in expenditures, assures maintenance of the Federal credit, an absolute essential to permanent economic recovery.

While there has been a great deal of talk of inflation in administration and congressional circles, there has actually been practically none as yet. Instead there has been actual deflation resulting from the necessarily drastic conditions imposed on the banks when the moratorium ended. Very properly, only sound and solvent banks were permitted to resume activity, but this meant a further deflation of bank credit in an amount not less than $5,000,000,000, tied up in the assets of unopened banks. Also the effect of the sharp reduction in veterans' benefits and the cut of 15 percent in the pay of Government employees were obviously deflationary. Thus while the machinery for controlled inflation was actually set up in the emergency legislation which provided for "asset currency", no significant amount of such currency has been put into circulation.

But why inflation at all? Was it not excessive inflation which caused the depression itself?

It is entirely accurate to affirm that extreme and long-continued inflation was a tremendous factor in producing the business catastrophe of 1929. There were other contributing causes but inflation played a leading role in that tragedy. Then why talk of inflation as a cure?

The answer is comparatively simple. It is found in that curious human attribute which makes of most of us, in a period of great prosperity, unreasoning and intemperate optimists, and in a period of prolonged adversity, equally unbalanced and rampant pessimists. Our enthusiasms in the twenty-eights and twenty-nines drove the pendulum too far one way and our unhappiness and discouragements in the thirty-ones and thirty-twos swung it as unreasonable a distance in the opposite direction. Just as the cure of excessive inflation is deflation, taken in reasonable doses, so the remedy for excessive deflation is inflation, in sane moderation.

We are suffering today as acutely from the sickness of too great deflation as we suffered 5 years ago from the ills of too great inflation. The price levels of today are as indefensible and unwarranted in their depths as were the price levels of 1929 in their absurd heights.

And the only way to bring price levels up is to depreciate the value of the medium with which we measure prices—that is, the dollar. This can be done in two ways. We can begin issuing fiat money, set the printing presses running, and set in motion the machinery of uncontrolled inflation and reproduce here the disaster which overtook Germany when the German mark lost its entire value. This we do not want. Or we can resort to controlled inflation of both credit and currency under the emergency legislation already provided, and by a carefully measured expansion of both reduce the buying power of the dollar, with instantaneous effect upon price levels of all commodities which enter into commerce. With rising prices both debt and tax burdens lighten, new hopes are born, and confidence returns. We change the face of business. With 75-cent wheat and 40-cent corn and 12-cent cotton the farm problem recedes, the farmer begins to buy, store stocks are swiftly exhausted and must be replenished, mills and factories begin to awake to new life, and the long hopeless lines of unemployed, dependent upon emergency relief, begin to dwindle.

Let us say, without the slightest attempt at accuracy, solely for purposes of illustration, that the total wealth of this country at the present immoderately deflated price levels is around 250 billions, and that the total debts of the country, public and private, are 260 billions. Under such circumstances the country is obviously insolvent. But 5 years ago approximately the same assets measured at a higher price level against practically the same liabilities showed us to be the richest country the world has ever known, solvent to such a degree that we thought we could actually banish poverty for all classes indefinitely. Plainly, our credit and currency must be sufficiently increased to raise again the price level to a normal and reasonable point where we at least become solvent, but under such control that expansion can be halted before the danger of overinflation is incurred. This is controlled inflation. Wisely employed, in combination with a balanced Budget, it will give American courage and American initiative all the help it needs to get the wheels of industry turning again.

[From the Manchester Union of Apr. 26, 1933]

THE INFLATION DEBATE

The almost universal lack of agreement on the Roosevelt inflationary program must be confusing to the man of the street. Even the best-informed economists are divided among themselves regarding the soundness of the steps that the President proposes to take. On every side one is met with arguments both for and against inflation. No question has been the subject of such keen debate during the present session of Congress. Amid so many diverse opinions, the man of the street is not to be blamed if he throws up his hands and declares frankly that he does not know what it is all about.

In this dilemma there are two thoughts to which we can tie. First, it is well to remember that the present inflationary movement was launched to check another that was positively dangerous. The rapid gain of inflationist strength in Congress created the threat that we would get inflation in its worst form. As soon as it became apparent that some form of inflation was likely to be adopted, the President recognized the importance of its being placed under the most rigid control. For that reason he stepped in and requested the authority to take the entire matter under his own direction.

The first thing, then, to remember is that if the President is denied this authority, Congress will be left free to enact any kind of inflation, dangerous or otherwise, which in turn will be left free to work itself out regardless of its effects. Now, as to the merits of the question itself. A certain degree of inflation is recognized as necessary to raise prices and wages, and reduce the present burden of indebtedness. The crux of the problem is in keeping it under control. It is uncontrolled inflation, which is always dangerous, that the opponents of the present measure have in mind. But if this matter is left to the President's discretion, he will be able to feel his way forward, and check the movement if he finds it is ineffective or harmful, or when he believes it has achieved the desired results. All the measures of the administration so far have been deflationary, and it is obviously necessary that these influences should be offset by a judicious movement in the opposite direction.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, it seems to me there is a discrepancy in the farm-loan provision of the so-called "Wagner substitute." In the print I have it is on page 4, lines 11 and 12. It provides for the valuation of farm property at 50 percent of the value of the land and 20 percent of the value of the permanent and insured improvements.

I think that is altogether too low. In the home-loan bill there is pending a valuation of 80 percent of urban property. That urban property produces no income at all. In the case of farm land, it seems to me that farm property should be valued higher. No one, of course, knows what 50 percent means; but if it means 50 percent of the present value, it is altogether too low.

I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to strike out "50 percent" and insert "70 percent", and to strike out "20 percent" and insert "70 percent."

Mr. WAGNER. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still open to amendment. It has not yet been engrossed.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment that I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "50 percent" and to insert "70 percent."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. There are two amendments. Mr. President, I ask that they go together.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The second amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is also proposed, in lines 11 and 12, to strike out "20 percent" and insert "70 percent."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, between these two bills there is a discrepancy that is indefensible. In the home-loan bill the valuation is 80 percent. In the farm bill it is 50 percent on the land and 20 percent on the buildings. In this farm-loan provision—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator permit the Chair to make a statement? The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] objected, which was tantamount to making a point of order.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I intended to do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is an amendment to what is known as the Wagner amendment, which has been agreed to; and therefore the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota is not in order at this time. The Wagner amendment is not open to amendment, having been already agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wish to say that it seems to me there is a discrepancy there that should be remedied.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator be allowed to offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, in connection with the bill, an expression of opinion by leading members of the Associated Press, meeting in New York on April 26, with reference to inflation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PUBLISHERS NOTE BETTER CONDITIONS—GENERAL IMPROVEMENT IN PUBLIC CONFIDENCE REPORTED BY NEWSPAPER EXECUTIVES

NEW YORK, April 26.—A marked improvement in public confidence and in general business conditions was noted yesterday by newspaper publishers from wide-spread industrial and agricultural areas.

In the South, Clark Howell, of the Atlanta Constitution, said: "The reaction to pending legislation already has been extremely favorable, as shown in an increase of cotton prices of approximately 1½ cents a pound."

Mr. Howell said he felt "this is due more to the inflation program than to reaction to the farm-relief program."

"So long as kept under control, as it can be under pending legislation, I think the effect of inflation will be to increase commodity prices. That is the keystone of returning prosperity."

CONFIDENCE HAS IMPROVED

Col. Frank Knox, of the Chicago Daily News, said the action of the stock market in the last week "is a perfect example of what happens in a rising market. This is more fundamentally illustrated in the commodity market. There has already been a healthy increase in the price of farm commodities, wholly by the expectation of inflation. When inflation actually comes, providing it is controlled, farm prices will go still higher and by this vacate the necessity for most of the remedies proposed in the pending farm measure."

"Chicago," Colonel Knox said, "is very much in favor of a controlled inflation in both credit and currency. And we believe the present price level is as much overdeflated as overinflated in 1929."

George B. Longan, of the Kansas City Star, said he had "no doubt but what the feeling of confidence among the people has improved more than 100 percent."

Mingled with the comments of the publishers, in New York for meetings of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and the Associated Press, was praise of President Roosevelt and expressions of confidence in his administration.

APPROVE PRESIDENT'S ACTION

The President was described by the Kansas City publisher as "a man of action who has given us a feeling that we most assuredly are not marking time and who is using every means to get results."

The publisher said that "while the Kansas City Star has been an advocate of sound money, we are not alarmed over the inflation program. We think that thoughtful people understand that the administration has a strategic plan and only that part will be used that is essential to what we might term reflation."

Both L. K. Nicholson, of the New Orleans Times-Picayune, and W. H. Cowles, of the Spokane Spokesman-Review, found favor with the administration's handling of the banking situation.

"The whole Nation is indebted to Mr. Roosevelt for his courageous and positive work in handling the banking crisis," said Mr. Cowles, while Mr. Nicholson felt that "one of the essential things for recovery is certainly the getting down to a solid foundation by rebuilding and strengthening our banking structure. And this Mr. Roosevelt is doing."

The New Orleans publisher cited that "the President says much of his program is more or less experimental. We are in strong sympathy with this leadership and the people in Louisiana have been quick to respond to the continuous action in Washington."

HELPS LUMBER INDUSTRY

The reaction of the lumber industry in Washington to the administration's gold embargo was cited by the Spokane publisher.

"The results of this embargo in the matter of increased prices," Mr. Cowles said, "was of great importance in the Northwest."

"The drop in the exchange was of great consequence because it reduced the ability of Canada and Japan to ship in and undersell American producers. This lowering of the exchange necessarily affects the lumber industry, which is a very large factor in the Northwest's prosperity. Already there has been considerable increase in employment and resumption of operation in mills."

Mr. Cowles said there is not, as far as he is able to sense, "a united sentiment behind the administration's farm program and the suggestion that the Government enter upon a program of controlling the hours and wages in industry."

AN "ACE IN THE HOLE"

In Indiana: Henry W. Marshall, of the Lafayette Journal and Courier, found that "people have a lot of faith in President Roosevelt and what he is trying to do. Particularly is this true of the farmers."

Mr. Marshall said he found a feeling that "a moderate controlled inflation will be helpful."

Colonel Knox, who was a close adviser to former President Hoover, said his "admiration for President Roosevelt has been greatly enhanced by his astute preparation for the impending world conference. The power he asks in pending currency legislation may never be used and probably will not be. But this gives him an ace in the hole when they get around the conference table, which may prove immeasurably valuable."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUFFY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote. I am informed that if the Senator were present and permitted to vote he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. LOGAN's name was called). The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] is absent and is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote the same as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who is absent on account of a death in his family. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay." I understand that if the Senator from Tennessee were present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

Mr. HEBERT. On this vote the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] is paired with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I am informed that if the senior Senator from Delaware were present he would vote "nay", and that, if the Senator from Montana were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 64, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—64

Adams	Coolidge	King	Pope
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds
Bachman	Costigan	Lewis	Robinson, Ark.
Bankhead	Couzens	Loneragan	Robinson, Ind.
Barkley	Cutting	Long	Russell
Black	Dickinson	McAdoo	Schall
Bone	Dieterich	McCarran	Sheppard
Borah	Dill	McGill	Shipstead
Bratton	Erickson	McNary	Steiwer
Brown	Fletcher	Murphy	Stephens
Bulow	Frazier	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	George	Norbeck	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Harrison	Norris	Trammell
Capper	Hayden	Nye	Van Nuys
Caraway	Johnson	Overton	Wagner
Connally	Kendrick	Pittman	Walsh

NAYS—20

Austin	Clark	Hale	Metcalf
Bailey	Dale	Hatfield	Patterson
Barbour	Fess	Hebert	Reed
Bulkley	Glass	Kean	Vandenberg
Carey	Goldsborough	Keyes	Walcott

NOT VOTING—11

Davis	Hastings	Smith	Wheeler
Duffy	Logan	Townsend	White
Gore	McKellar	Tydings

So the bill was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes."

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be printed as amended and that the Senate amendments be numbered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, ask for a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Chair appointed Mr. SMITH, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. WAGNER, Mr. McNARY, and Mr. WALCOTT conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senator from Arkansas cannot yield to the Senator from Florida to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of anything.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. LEWIS and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield first to the Senator from Illinois.

MESSAGE TO THE UNITED STATES FROM M. EDOUARD HERRIOT

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I accept the courtesy of the Senator from Arkansas to present in writing a salutation of the Premier of France, who addresses us in writing his appreciation of the manner in which he was received in the United States and of the courtesies which were extended to him on his visit here. Since there is nothing in the statement which in anywise touches on any matter of politics, and since the statement is a mere expression of the Premier's gratitude for the manner in which he was received and the courtesies which his party enjoyed from our people, together with their commendations, I ask the liberty of having the statement printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF M. EDOUARD HERRIOT

Before sailing back to France, I wish to thank the American people for the kind reception my fellow workers and myself have met on their part. First of all, I must pay a most grateful tribute to President Roosevelt, with whom I have had the privilege to hold such long and valuable conversations. In the course of a life extending already over a good many years, I had the opportunity of meeting many prime ministers and heads of governments. This time I had the great joy to come across a man endowed with splendid powers, a man in whom idealism and realism are happily blended, a man able at the same time to discuss on the most intricate matters in a genial atmosphere, deeply versed in technical and human knowledge, and worthy of his great predecessors.

I fully understand today the proud confidence of a people who chose such a leader and who under his guidance will see its authority in the world affairs rise still higher.

I found the same kind support, the same enlightening competence in my intercourse with Secretary of State Cordell Hull and all the members of the Cabinet and Under Secretary of State William Phillips, who attended our parleys. I extend the thanks I offer them to all their aides.

I will strictly avoid intruding, ever so little, upon the United States politics, which concern no one but themselves.

Moreover, I got in touch with most interesting and charming men belonging to all political parties. I shall take away with me the most pleasant recollections of my interviews with the members of the Foreign Affairs Committees of the Senate and the House; I shall not forget either the kindness shown to me by Senator J. T. ROBINSON, Democratic floor leader, or my interesting talks with Senator BORAH and Senator REED, as well as the hearty welcome of the Vice President and of the Speaker, HENRY T. RAINEY.

Were I able to do so, I should be delighted to come and work here in all freedom of mind, merely to increase my knowledge of and information about a people to whom, as a Frenchman and a devotee to liberal institutions, I feel so deeply attached.

I rejoice at what we have been able to achieve in such limited time. A week ago, we might very well have wondered whether the World Economic Conference could meet at all and, in the event of its meeting, at what date it would meet. Now we know for certain that it is to begin its work on the 12th of June. Within a few hours the invitations will be issued, and on certain points we have already brought our views much nearer to each other: an excellent way of proceeding, which President Roosevelt has rightly advocated while he launched new notions concerning the world disarmament and security.

Recent events have taught us a dreadful lesson, namely, that the world cannot, without great risks, be divided into water-tight compartments. Either spontaneously or under the pressure of events, the solidarity of nations must come into being and find guarantees if the universe is to be kept from utter surrender to the evil spirit of war. Europe is not alone in danger. And now I recall Walt Whitman's famous lines in his Leaves of Grass:

"Years of the modern! Years of the unperformed!

Your horizon rises, I see it parting away for more august dramas, I see not America only, not only Liberty's nation, but other nations preparing.

I see tremendous entrances and exits, new combinations, the solidarity of races,

I see that force advancing with irresistible power on the world's stage—

I see Freedom, completely arm'd and victorious and very haughty with Law on one side and Peace on the other."

The time has come for all statesmen to work jointly and bring to life that great man's dreams, which are also those of the peoples of the earth.

To that end we have worked in Washington. Of course, we could not in one week map out a complete scheme for the world recovery, but we have at least fixed up the first landmarks.

As to me, my ambition would be to bring France and the United States to a better knowledge of each other. The word "propaganda" is sometimes spoken; the word, to me, appears as a stupid and almost loathsome word. The only justified propaganda I can conceive is that which consists in the spreading of truth, through fair and undisturbed information.

I came over to this country to bring you a message from France, from France as she truly is, from France who suffered so dreadfully during the Great War, that France who works in offices, warehouses, workshops, or fields.

Citizens of the United States, trust a man who had to fight for his ideas. France has no hatred against any people, she longs for peace; she only wants never to be invaded again. She is only a mother who wishes to shelter from death on the battlefields the children that are left her. Do not trust those who show you another picture of our country.

But, on the other hand, I shall endeavor, as I have already done many times, to interpret the United States to my countrymen; I shall tell them what they really are and why I feel so deeply attached to them.

I shall explain that this land is the land of liberty and that in the hour when brute force and persecutions seem to drive us back to barbarism, there is, on this continent, a great Nation who means to obey nothing but the dictates of reason and justice.

I will recall to them that, on the front of your history, the Declaration of Independence—that elder sister of our Declaration of the Rights of Man—is deeply engraved.

That your old motto has lost nothing of its strength in those times of uncertainty and sufferings—"Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness"—the city of Washington has witnessed, these last few days, the meeting of the representatives from three liberty-loving nations, the United States, Great Britain, and France. There rises to my memory the following fragment of a letter written in France by Benjamin Franklin to his friend Hartley, on October 16, 1783: "What America would be as happy as the Sabine girls if she could be the means of uniting, in perpetual peace, her father and her husband? What repeated follies are those repeated wars? You do not want to conquer and govern one another. Why then should you continually be employed in injuring and destroying each other?"

It seems to me that in these words lies the best plan of action. We gathered here not to seek any selfish ends, not to combine paltry schemes, but in order to work jointly for this double aim: The maintenance of freedom and the organization of peace.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1272, the so-called "Muscle Shoals bill."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1272) to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama; and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I want to propound an inquiry. I assume that the bill having been made the unfinished business, the intention is to take a recess.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is my intention to move an adjournment until Monday next.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. There is pending upon the Calendar House bill 4606, the so-called "relief bill." The Senate has already passed a bill almost identical with it, and I am sure that on Monday, perhaps with but very little discussion, we can pass this House bill, which I regard as a very important measure. Time is really of the essence, and I wondered whether the Senator from Nebraska would consent to lay aside the unfinished business.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think some other Senators have spoken to me about the same bill. Perhaps we can take it up on Monday morning during the morning hour, the Senator from Arkansas having stated that he intends to move that the Senate adjourn until Monday. If we do not, I should like to go on a little while with the Muscle Shoals bill and see how we get along with it. I will say to the Senator from New York that if we shall not get along as rapidly as we think we may, and there shall be some delay, I will not object to laying aside the unfinished business, if the consideration of the other bill will not consume very much time.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I would not make the request, of course, if I thought the bill would take much time.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to make any agreement tonight about it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. As far as the morning hour on Monday is concerned, I should like to ask whether it is the purpose of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to renew his motion in regard to the joint resolution having to do with the St. Lawrence Treaty. If it is his purpose to renew his motion to refer that matter to the Committee on Foreign Relations, I can assure both the Senator from New York and the Senator from Nebraska that there will be no other business transacted during the morning hour except the consideration of that motion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The joint resolution to which the Senator from Missouri refers, and which I moved to refer to the Committee on Foreign Relations, went to the calendar after the hour of 2 o'clock had been reached. The question will no doubt arise at some time in connection with the reference of the joint resolution which has already passed the House, and is now on the table.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that, but I simply desired to give this notice, since the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from New York were talking about what would happen in the morning hour on Monday.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator from Nebraska will yield further, I merely wish to say that I made the motion at the request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], who was in the chair and could not make the motion in his own behalf. The matter naturally rests in his hands, and I would not presume, under any other circumstances, to initiate any action concerning it; but, so far as I am concerned, I hope it will soon be disposed of.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senate shall adjourn till Monday, the calendar will be in order before the joint resolution may be considered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the rule; on Monday the calendar is in order.

SILVER AND THE DEBTS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR HAYDEN

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some remarks made by me over the radio December 26, 1932, respecting the acceptance of silver in payment of the British debt.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The average American production of silver for the past 10 years has been 58,000,000 ounces. Nearly all of it is taken from the earth as an incident to mining lead, zinc, copper, and gold. The bonanza silver mines have long since been exhausted. American manufacturers annually consume about 30,000,000 ounces of silver. When compared with billions of dollars of agricultural and other products, the net amount left for export or for coinage shows that, as producers, our people have but a very minor interest in the price of silver. America's concern is not with production, but with the world-wide effect upon commodity prices when more silver is used as money.

In a report submitted to the Senate in February 1931 Senator KEY PITTMAN pointed out that silver is the only money used by half of the people of the world. The people of the Orient who use silver are large purchasers of American products. Cutting its price in half reduced their purchasing power. The great decline in the price of silver early in 1929 preceded the economic crash in the fall of that year. Silver led the parade toward panic. There is a safe and sound way whereby silver can help lead the world back to prosperity.

SILVER AND COTTON

Let me illustrate the effect of a low price for silver on one American agricultural product. Before 1929, when silver was 60 cents an ounce, the Chinese cheerfully paid 12 cents a pound for our cotton. When silver dropped to below 30 cents an ounce, it took twice as much Chinese silver money to buy a pound of cotton. They stopped buying our cotton, which for lack of export glutted the home market until its price declined to 6 cents a pound. At 6 cents the Chinese could again purchase an equal amount of cotton with 30-cent silver as they did when both silver and cotton were worth twice as much. Vast quantities of 6-cent cotton were shipped to China, but it was bought below the cost of production, at a Chinese and not an American price.

Not only have American cotton producers suffered but it is of record that all other exports to the silver-using countries have similarly declined, chief among which are petroleum products, tobacco, and automobiles. In the face of these facts, is it not reasonable to assume that anything done to raise the price of silver will improve our foreign trade and that better export prices will be reflected in an improvement of commodity prices at home?

LOW COMMODITY PRICES SPREAD RUIN

The British note of December 1, asking for a readjustment of the war debt, pointed out a profound truth by stating that the debt represents today, in terms of goods, not less than twice the amount which was borrowed. But this is true of every other debt more than 3 years old due throughout the world. The note truthfully presented the cause of this condition to be the great fall in commodity prices which has spread ruin to producers everywhere. The note expressed the view that the December payment, if made in gold, might further depress commodity prices. It did not say that a failure to pay would do more than hold prices where they are. Postponement was offered as a palliative. With wheat cheaper today than it was in the time of Queen Elizabeth, it is obvious that the only cure is a general increase in commodity prices.

At a severe sacrifice Great Britain has kept faith and paid in gold the $95,550,000 when due. In depreciated pound sterling it required over $30,000,000 more of English money to meet the payment than would have been required with the pound at par. Meeting this burdensome obligation in full when the day of payment arrived has won the admiration and respect of the American people.

COMPENSATION FOR MODIFYING DEBT PAYMENTS

There is little, if any, disposition in Congress to unreservedly cancel the foreign debts. There is a strong desire to use a modification of the terms of payment as a definite means of remedying the economic distress which not only prevails in our own country but throughout the world.

A general reduction in the expenditures for armaments probably now stands first as a welcome reason for scaling down the installments. Any practical formula for lowering the trade barriers which interfere with the normal flow of American exports will likewise be accepted as adequate compensation for reducing the total amounts due. A third proposal, which contemplates utilizing the foreign debts as a means of bringing about a rehabilitation of silver by international agreement, also has sincere congressional support.

These three suggestions for relief from the unparalleled depression which throttles world trade are certain to be advanced by those who will speak for the United States with the representatives of the various debtor nations. The greater use of silver as a handmaiden to gold is not so well understood. That is why I presume to discuss the advantages which may follow from the acceptance of silver in payment of a part of the British debt as a prelude to a still wider and more permanent monetary use of the white metal.

GOVERNMENTS CAUSE FALL

Governments are solely responsible for the great fall in the price of silver. Overproduction was not the reason, because there has been no overproduction. In the last 440 years since the discovery of America less than 14½ ounces of silver have been taken out of the ground for each ounce of gold. Since 1900 the ratio of production of silver to gold has dropped to less than 11 to 1. The decline in price was brought about by artificial means and not by the operation of normal economic laws.

The Government of Great Britain and the British Government for India have been the chief offenders against silver. Great Britain debased her silver coinage in 1920 by reducing its silver content nearly a half. Beginning with that year, according to a report transmitted to the State Department by Ambassador Mellon, over 102,000,000 ounces of silver have been taken out of the British coinage and sold. Handy and Harman, recognized authorities on silver, estimate that since 1927 the British Government for India has sold 131,000,000 ounces of silver derived from demonetized coins. Other countries, particularly France and Belgium, have followed the bad example set by England and India in the "flight from silver."

Since governments alone ruined the price of silver, the governments which are chiefly responsible for its fall can, by retracing the steps they have taken, restore the price of silver to its pre-war and pre-panic level. Great Britain, which started silver on the downward path, and India, which sold silver down to half its former price, should lead the way back to recovery.

PLATFORM PLEDGES

Both the Democratic and Republican national platforms pledge American cooperation in an international effort to restore the use of silver as money. The quickest and most effective international cooperation that the American Government can extend toward the rehabilitation of silver is to accept 100,000,000 ounces of silver in full settlement of $100,000,000 due from Great Britain upon two conditions. First, that the British Government acquire an equal number of ounces of silver to restore its coinage to its former silver content. Second, that satisfactory assurances be obtained from the British Government for India that no silver owned by it will be sold except to other governments for coinage purposes.

This transaction will take off the market 200,000,000 ounces of silver and utilize the same for coinage. Certainly there should be some favorable effect on the price of silver if an amount equivalent to a whole year's world production is thus legitimately disposed of and the fear of future governmental dumping by Great Britain and India is ended.

RELIEF FOR TAXPAYERS

The British Government for India owes a debt to Great Britain arising out of the World War that now amounts to £16,721,000, which is $81,422,000 at par of exchange. If that debt could be paid in silver it would be possible not only to relieve the British taxpayers of any expense in meeting a $100,000,000 payment to the United States but also to restore the British silver coinage to its former fineness without cost to them. Two intergovernmental debts would be settled by the use of the same silver.

If the $81,422,000 were fully paid by the transfer of 200,000,000 ounces of Indian silver, the price paid by Great Britain for the silver would be 40.7 cents per ounce. In 1931 the British Government for India, which still has a reserve of over 200,000,000 ounces of unencumbered silver, sold 35,000,000 ounces at the market price, which averaged 32 cents for that year. The present market price is around 25 cents an ounce, so that at 40 cents the Indian Government would be well paid for its silver.

But it will be said that the United States is accepting silver worth only $25,000,000 at the present all-time low price in payment of a $100,000,000 debt. That is true on its face, but, since there is not an ounce of silver in a dollar, 100,000,000 ounces of silver can be coined into 129,299,000 dollars which the American people will be glad to accept at par in these hard times. Such dollars, or silver certificates issued against them, will serve our Government just as well as though the British payment were made in gold. There will be no added burden to the American taxpayer.

MILD INFLATION

Some will say that this means inflation of the currency and so it does, but only a mild inflation. I now propose to accept silver for only one payment from Great Britain because one payment is sufficient to accomplish the purposes sought, which are to again make the British silver coinage "honest money" and to remove the menace of further open-market silver sales by India.

Let me remind those who worry about inflation and the maintenance of the gold standard that in 1900, when Congress provided that all forms of money should be maintained at a parity with gold, the American stock of monetary gold was just a little over $1,000,000,000 and the stock of silver was about $650,000,000. Today we have approximately $4,000,000,000 in gold and only about $850,000,000 in silver money. The United States could now absorb over a billion dollars of silver into its monetary system and still have less silver in proportion to gold than we had in 1900. To take one payment in silver on all of the foreign debts would mean but a moderate inflation and in no sense threaten the maintenance of the gold standard.

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT NEEDED

I freely admit that for the United States and Great Britain to coin 200,000,000 ounces of silver is no permanent solution of the world's monetary problem. It would help restore the price of silver to a level comparable to that which existed before England and India began dumping it on the market, but more permanent measures must be adopted. The stabilization of silver can best be accomplished by an international agreement to which it is essential that the two Governments shall be parties.

In President Hoover's message to Congress last week recommending preparation for discussions with the several nations respecting their indebtedness to the United States and in anticipation of the World Economic Conference, the President said:

"While the gold standard has worked badly since the war, due to the huge economic dislocations of the war, yet it is still the only practical basis of international settlements and monetary stability so far as the more advanced industrial nations are concerned. The larger use of silver as a supplementary currency would aid to stability in many quarters of the world."

It is well recognized that there can be no permanent increase in commodity prices throughout the world when 26 nations are off the gold standard and the value of their currencies vary from day to day. On invitation of the British Government, the World Economic Conference will be held in London next spring or summer and a return to the gold standard will be one of the most urgent and most vital problems considered. This time of stress has proven that there is not gold enough in the world to serve as money for all the world, hence the numerous departures from that standard.

SERVICE OF SILVER

For over 3,000 years of recorded history silver has helped to perform part of the service rendered by money to mankind. There are men now living who can remember when silver was demonetized in 1873. Within the past 12 years the worst damage has been done to its use as money. It is not possible that we have been too hasty in discarding the wisdom of the ancients by scorning silver as money and even as a value-storing commodity? Why not consider how silver can be used to help get 26 nations, among them Great Britain, away from fluctuating paper currencies and back to the gold standard?

Certain fundamental facts must be recognized as the basis for any international monetary conference. The first is that in all history no nation which sought to pay its debts by printing paper money has known just when to stop the printing presses. The American continental currency and greenbacks, the French assignats, and the German marks are typical examples. The only way to pay is with goods and services or with a metal that all nations can use as money. The fault of managed money is that the management is prone to make mistakes.

I quote Joseph Caillaux, ex-Premier and former Finance Minister of France, in saying that:

"Man cannot, in the present state of his knowledge, establish a sane monetary system which has not at its foundation a metallic mass. We think that to gold, whose scarcity we fear, we must add silver."

TOTAL MASS OF GOLD

The total metallic mass of monetary gold, used as the most important yardstick to measure values, is estimated to be 580,551,000 ounces, valued at $12,000,000,000. If melted into one cube, it would be about 32 feet square on each face.

The amount of silver is also limited. I have checked the figures of experts and am convinced that there is not available for possible use as money more than 7,500,000,000 ounces of silver in the entire world. Seven and one half billion ounces of silver would make 9,108,500,000 standard silver dollars.

It will thus be seen that if by international agreement all the available silver in the world were added to all the available gold in the world, the metallic mass that could be used as money would not be doubled. The base upon which the monetary structure rests would be broadened, but time has shown that nature has fixed quite definite limits to its expansion which man cannot change.

MONETARY CONFERENCE

The first result to be accomplished by an international monetary conference is that the governments of Europe shall agree to restore their subsidiary silver coinage to the basis which existed prior to the World War and by annual purchases keep an adequate supply of that kind of money available to their people. As I have said, Great Britain needs approximately 100 million ounces of silver for such purpose. In France and in her colonies and mandates at least 100 million ounces of additional silver could readily be used as money.

Last June, at my request, inquiries were made, through the Departments of State and Commerce, of all of the countries indebted to the United States to ascertain how far they have departed since the World War from the customary use of silver coinage. The replies in every instance show that there is no debtor nation which cannot legitimately make use of much more silver in its coinage. None of them are minting silver coins of pre-war fineness.

SUPPLEMENTAL RESERVE

The second way that nations which are now or have been on the gold standard can stabilize the price of silver and make that metal carry part of the burden now borne by gold is to return to its use as a supplemental reserve against issues of paper money. In the United States Treasury today there are over 400 million silver dollars against which silver certificates circulate at par.

The silver in which they are redeemable is doing the work of gold. The present per-capita circulation of silver certificates is over $2.50. If each of the debtor nations would gradually use, as a reserve against paper money, the equivalent of $2.50 in silver for each of their inhabitants, just as the United States now does, more than 500,000,000 ounces of silver would be required.

It has been estimated by Mr. Francis H. Brownell, of the American Smelting & Refining Co., that, taking into consideration the normal demand for silver by oriental peoples, who have for many centuries used it as a store of value, only about 20,000,000 ounces, or one tenth of the new production, will have to be used by governments each year. All that is needed is to treat silver in approximately the same way that governments acted toward it prior to the World War and the price of that metal can be readily increased and stabilized. But great nations must act in unison.

PREPARATION ADVOCATED

We know that before long there is to be an international meeting where the monetary problems of the world are to be discussed. I propose that the English-speaking peoples prepare themselves for that meeting by direct negotiations through existing agencies of diplomacy to improve the position of silver as money. The United States, Great Britain, Canada, India, Australia, New Zealand, the Irish Free State, and the Union of South Africa can do more for silver than all the rest of the world combined.

Let the United States, Great Britain, and India make their intergovernmental debts a reason for the transfer of 200,000,000 ounces of silver to show that powerful governments still have use for that metal. Let the self-governing dominions of the British Empire join in a greater utilization of silver as money. When the world economic conference meets, there will be no groping about for a plan. The plan will be made. There will be behind it the prestige of nations of such commercial power that the course of action they have agreed upon to meet an unprecedented monetary and economic crisis will be gladly followed by the rest of the world.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. From the Committee on Commerce I report favorably the nomination of Raymond S. Patton, of Ohio, to be Director of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, for a term of 4 years beginning April 29, 1933, vice himself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be placed on the calendar.

DIRECTOR OF THE MINT—NELLIE TAYLOR ROSS

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Nellie Tayloe Ross, of Wyoming, to be Director of the Mint.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and, without objection, the President will be notified.

That completes the calendar.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 3 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 1, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 28 (legislative day of Apr. 17), 1933

ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY

Warren Delano Robbins, of New York, now Chief of the Division of Protocol, Department of State, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Canada.

GOVERNOR OF PUERTO RICO

Robert Hayes Gore, of Florida, to be Governor of Puerto Rico.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate April 28 (legislative day of Apr. 17), 1933

DIRECTOR OF THE MINT

Nellie Tayloe Ross to be Director of the Mint.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 28, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Ever-blessed Father in Heaven, sheltered again by Thy merciful providence, bless and sustain us by the life and the light within. Commune with each heart that all may have strength in the good and power to resist the evil. Mark out and direct our paths, and by Thy grace divine may we be able to sincerely understand that we are masters of our souls. Awaken the divine in us, and may we be inspired with faith in the truth, faith in justice, and faith in the American people. Almighty God, help us to add wisdom to wisdom, earnestness to earnestness, endeavor to endeavor so that in the sight of heaven and earth this Congress may legislate wisely, faithfully, and justly. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

AMERICA LIBERATING THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following address delivered by myself on April 27, 1933, over station WOR in New York City, on America Liberating the Philippines:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, as an official representative of the Philippines in this country, I am privileged to convey over Station WOR the Filipino people's message of good will and gratitude to the people of the United States.

I elected to speak on a timely subject, "America Liberating the Philippines." It is just now, and for the next few years should be, of vital interest to the whole world.

The genesis of American-Filipino relationship dates back to the war which in 1898 America waged against Spain avowedly for the liberation of peoples oppressed and dependent. As a result of that war Spain was compelled to cede her sovereignty over the Philippine Islands to the United States.

Soon after the signing of the treaty of peace in Paris, President McKinley decided to send the first Philippine Commission to the islands. In his instructions of January 20, 1899, he expressed the hope that the members would be received as bearers of "the richest blessings of a liberating rather than a conquering nation."

Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, who was president of that commission, gave solemn assurance that "the political emancipation of the Filipinos was the controlling object with the President and people of the United States."

Speaking of America's motives and objects, Dr. Schurman later said:

"Our purpose was not selfish, it was humanitarian; it was not the vanity of self-aggrandizement, it was not the greed of power and dominion; no, no; not these, but altruism caring for the happiness of others, philanthropy relieving the Filipinos of oppression and conferring on them the blessings of liberty."

The liberation of the Philippines as an objective has been promised by every President from McKinley and by the Congress. It is the alpha and omega of America's colonial experiment in the Orient.

The Philippines is a tropical country blessed with rich and abundant natural resources. It has an area of 115,000 square miles or about the size of all the New England States and New York combined. Agriculture is the basic industry of the people now numbering over 13,000,000. My country can comfortably be the home of fifty or sixty million.

The Filipinos are essentially of Malayan ancestry. Racially they are a homogeneous people. Inheritors of an oriental culture, their civilization has been enriched by the impacts of Latin and Anglo-Saxon influences.

The Filipinos are lovers of education. They had a college as early as 1601 and a university as early as 1611. Parents make every sacrifice for the training of their children. There are in the islands today some 8,500 schools and colleges and 5 universities. There are over 31,000 teachers and about one million and a half pupils and students. Thirty percent of our budget goes to the support of popular education. The record of literacy in the Philippines is higher and better than that of 37 countries that are independent.

We are a Christian people. The last official census shows that 5 percent of the inhabitants are pagans, 4 percent are Mohammedans, often referred to as Moros, and 91 percent are Christians. The alleged danger from the Moros, or our Mohammedan brethren, is mere fiction—a bugaboo.

In the last three decades the Philippines has witnessed remarkable progress. An excellent school system has been established with English as the basis of instruction. An educated Filipino knows three or more languages. Peace and order have existed throughout the archipelago. Health and sanitation have been improved. Mortality has been reduced. Roads, bridges, port works, irrigation systems, and other public improvements have been constructed. Means of transportation and communication and inter-island shipping have been developed. A program of conservation, forestation, and reforestation has been followed. The national wealth and production, trade, and commerce have increased. Justice has been administered without fear or favor through a unified system of courts. The legislature has made a commendable record. From the implantation of civil administration in 1901 the Philippine government has been self-supporting. Our budget has been balanced. While the currencies of most countries have greatly depreciated, the Philippine money has remained at par and the country's currency continues on a sound gold-exchange basis. In a word, we have established and maintained a stable government.

The Congress of the United States has recognized that the time has come for definite action on the question of Philippine independence. Following the passage of the Organic Act of 1902 "temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands", and the Autonomy Act of 1916, the Seventy-second Congress, despite strong opposition, on January 17, 1933, passed the Philippine Independence Act. I do not hesitate to say that this congressional action is the greatest and most important fact in the entire history of American-Filipino relations.

What have the Filipinos been petitioning Congress these many years? What has America granted the Filipinos in the Philippine Independence Act? I shall employ the remaining minutes to answer these and indicate the important provisions of the act.

The new law is an independence law. It is an act that provides for the withdrawal of American sovereignty over the Philippine Islands. It is America's response to the repeated petitions of the Filipinos for the early grant of their independence.

The Philippine Independence Act is to take effect upon acceptance "by concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature or a convention called for the purpose * * *." It is in the hands of the Filipino people to give effectivity to its provisions and set in motion the processes and mechanism contemplated by the act.

The Philippine Legislature, as early as 1922, asked the Congress "for authority to call and hold a constitutional convention." The Congress passed the act "to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution" for a government of the Philippine Commonwealth "within 1 year after the enactment of this act", and, a few years later, an amended constitution for the Philippine Republic.

The Filipinos have long clamored for increased autonomous powers. The act provides for the inauguration of an autonomous Commonwealth government after the President has certified that the constitution conforms with the provisions of the act, and the Filipinos have ratified the constitution and elected the necessary officials.

The Filipinos have been demanding the Filipinization of the government service. This can be achieved effectively and quickly by the acceptance of the act and the inauguration of the new government without unnecessary delay. Filipinization may be effected in three coordinate branches of the government.

America, by this act, offers the transfer of property and rights acquired in the islands, with certain reservations, to the government of the Commonwealth.

Congress, by this act, makes an immediate grant of a preliminary and partial Philippine sovereignty. In the words of one of the authors of the act, the "Commonwealth of the Philippines will be a semi-sovereign and semi-independent republic." Under it we shall enjoy "virtually complete self-government." Ten years of such a government will be automatically followed by the "final and complete withdrawal of American sovereignty over the Philippines."

The act contains certain immigration and trade restrictions which have been criticized by some but insisted upon by others clothed with the power to decide. The limitation on sugar in the amount of 850,000 tons has aroused considerable discussion. The sugar men in the islands contend that the quota is too low. The sugar men in the United States say it is too high. A former President wanted it at 600,000 with yearly reduction of 10 percent. The United States Senate reduced the amount to 615,000 tons. The House quantity limitations were restored by the conference committee. Some compromise had to be effected. The graduated export tax during the last 5 years will help in the discharge of our bonded indebtedness.

The act vests powers in the President and provides for a high commissioner as the President's representative during the life of the government of the Commonwealth. Some in the Philippines contend that the powers are excessive, while others in the United States believe they are too limited and inconsequential.

The act provides that the President of the United States, not later than 2 years after the grant of independence, may redesignate certain reservations from those heretofore possessed as such by the United States. This has been criticized by some of my own countrymen. As a Filipino, I want to say (1) that this provision is optional, not mandatory; (2) that the Filipino leaders have made official commitments of approval or acquiescence as to America's retaining coaling stations and military or naval bases; and (3) some Americans oppose the retention of any bases in the Philippines once she is independent.

The act provides for a trade conference between representatives of the American and Philippine Governments "at least 1 year prior to the date fixed in this act for the independence of the Philippine Islands." This provision has been overlooked by many critics of the act. It can and should be taken advantage of for the adjustment of trade relations on the basis of equity and mutuality of interests.

The act contains a provision requesting the President "to enter into negotiations with foreign powers with a view to the conclusion of a treaty" for neutralization. Some in the United States and in the Philippines favor neutralization, while others oppose it. Filipino leaders on more than one occasion have asked for neutralization.

The most important thing about the new act is that it solves the independence question on an American-Filipino basis. It grants independence upon a day fixed and certain. Once the law is accepted and the government of the Commonwealth is inaugurated American sovereignty shall be withdrawn from the Philippine Islands and independence granted on the 4th day of July immediately following the 10-year period. This is the definite understanding of the Resident Commissioners, the authorized constitutional representatives of the Philippines in Congress. It is the understanding of the members of the Philippine Mission who labored with the Commissioners in Washington. It is the intention and interpretation of the authors of the act, Mr. Hare in the House and Senators Hawes and Cutting in the Senate. It is the interpretation of those who were most friendly to the cause of independence and have worked and voted for the act in both Houses of the Congress. It is likewise the interpretation of President Hoover and his administration, as attested by his message of January 13, 1933.

It is hardly necessary that I make known my stand after having labored for the measure in Congress and advocated its passage. That there may be no doubt, I wish to say that I am for the Philippine Independence Act and recommend its acceptance. I believe that it is in the main a fair, just, and reasonable act.

Should anybody ask if the act is 100 percent perfect, my answer is, "Of course not." Who so demands perfection in a Philippine independence legislation or takes the position that it must be 100 percent or nothing will never get an independence law. I am essentially an idealist, but I am not blind to the realities of earthly life.

There must be faith on both sides. Without faith, little or no good can be accomplished. I am not unaware that there should be further improvements in American-Filipino relations. But I know that the Congress in enacting the Philippine Independence Act was not actuated by base motives as alleged by imperialists on both sides of the Pacific. I know that the act was piloted to final passage by friends of independence, not by enemies of it. I know that many of the very friends of Philippine independence will be disillusioned if the bill which they have so patiently and unselfishly helped to translate into a Philippine independence act will be set at naught by its rejection.

It is my considered judgment that this new charter of liberty, this American offer of autonomy and independence, should be accepted. In its acceptance lies the national redemption of the Philippines. A wise and statesmanly action on the part of the Filipinos will enable them to retain the faith, respect, and friendship of the Government and people of the United States.

I believe that, after the acceptance of the act, such flaws or defects as it may have can be mitigated or remedied (1) through the constitution that we shall formulate and adopt; (2) through sympathetic administration; (3) through negotiations; and/or (4) through perfecting amendments.

The radio time allotted does not permit detailed discussion of each of these methods of effecting improvement.

Before closing I wish to thank my listeners for their attention and their interest. Let me give the assurance that the Filipino people appreciate the good that America has done in the Philippines. For the Independence Act passed by the Congress by which the Philippines will shortly be liberated, I am grateful beyond words.

I am a disciple of the philosophy of suffering and sacrifice. Such hardships as the new law may occasion my people will, I dare say, be no greater or more severe than those now being suffered by a large portion of mankind in this era of great travail. But if God wills that they be so, it should be deemed as His wondrous way of making a people ascend their calvary in order to have a better vision of the glory that shall be.

To those whose vision is not dimmed, there is glory enough in the fact that there has been no shedding of precious blood in America's manner of liberating the Philippine Islands.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of Senate Joint Resolution 13 on Wednesday last I made the statement that the gentleman from Oregon had agreed not to introduce his resolution. I find that I was mistaken about that. His agreement was that he would not offer it and insist upon it before the committee. I make this statement, because it might be construed from what I said then that he sought to break faith with the committee, which he did not do.

LOANS TO HOME OWNERS

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 5240) to provide emergency relief with respect to home-mortgage indebtedness, to refinance home mortgages, to extend relief to the owners of homes occupied by them and who are unable to amortize their debt elsewhere, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, to increase the market for obligations of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 5240, with Mr. DRIVER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. At the conclusion of the session yesterday, debate on the section then pending and all amendments thereto was ordered closed in 30 minutes. The pending amendment was offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: Page 7, line 17, after the word "cash", strike out the words down to and including "encumbered", in line 20, and insert in lieu thereof the words "to home owners."

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition on the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, our able Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency does not need it, but I should like to say a word in behalf of him, since the argument rose to somewhat heated proportions just before we closed on yesterday.

I think the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency should have at least a degree of our sympathy, because he and our committee have been given a task that is absolutely impossible of performance. If we should utilize all of the powers that have been given and that have been proposed to raise funds, we would not have more than six or seven billion dollars to do all of these things that we hope may be done through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the other legislation that has been proposed. If you look at the other side of the picture, you will see that during the last 2 or 3 years the incomes of the people of this country have been cut by the depression to the extent of more than $100,000,000,000. That is why it seems the pinch is so pressing. You will find that the properties of people have been reduced in amount one hundred and fifty to two hundred billion dollars in market value during the past 4 years, and that is why this task of using six or seven billions is so impossible of performing the things that we want done.

Now, we want direct loans. We would like to vote a provision which would authorize the Government to make those loans direct, but there are $22,000,000,000 of debts, mortgages, or loans to the home owners alone, when there are but two billion proposed in this bill to relieve the distress. You can search the whole picture and you will see that for this type of legislation to give the relief desired is impossible when it comes to carrying forward sufficient relief that we hope to bring to the people.

RAISE COMMODITY AND PROPERTY VALUES ONLY REAL RELIEF

There is but one way we can do the thing we are trying to do, and it is not by this kind of legislation. It is by correcting general conditions so as to bring back to the people a degree of prosperity through the general uplift of the country, and that is the only way. Until we do that we will be haggling here as to whether we will grant direct loans or whether we will grant them through certain organizations, and none of this, my friends, will be effected, because the amount of power in loans we are trying to use cannot perform the task we are undertaking to perform with it.

So I say our Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee is entitled to have you consider the whole picture before you say to him and before you say to our committee, "You are not doing the thing you ought to do." How can we sell the credit of this country in the form of bond issues and raise enough funds through the national credit to relieve all private obligations? It is impossible of performance. The National Government cannot give employment to the people of this country. It will have to be done by private business, but private business cannot give that employment as long as it lies prostrate on its back, because we do not have the circulating media in this country to carry forward the functions of business.

WE MUST HAVE CURRENCY AND RESTORED BANK CREDIT

Our circulating media is not performing more than 25 percent of its normal work. When we have more currency—coined or issued legal tender—or restored bank credit, when we have restored a working bank credit, and when those things that make up our exchange-media machine are put back to work and we begin to use them in a normal sort of way, you will not hear anything of this type of legislation. It is emergency legislation that will not work effectively or satisfactorily to but a few. All of these loan arrangements cannot bring us the relief we have been looking for, and I ask you not to lay the blame on the chairman of our committee or on the Committee on Banking and Currency, but help us in a general and broad way to stand back of and enact a broad currency expansion program of legislation that will restore a condition of prosperity and that will help in a substantial, general sort of way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY] has expired.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is on the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be withheld, but the gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GOSS. May the amendment be reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment, and it will remain on the desk.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand there is an amendment pending. The Cochran amendment is pending.

Mr. GOSS. But the time has been limited, and the only way I can explain my amendment is by taking it up during this 30 minutes that has been allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the Clerk to report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Goss: Page 8, line 4, strike out the subsection (f) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Corporation shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, or agents as shall be necessary for the performance of its duties under this act, with due regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment or compensation of officers, employees, attorneys, or agents of the United States, except wherein the Board shall certify in writing that persons with the special qualifications desired cannot be so secured. No such officer, employee, attorney, or agent shall be paid compensation at a rate in excess of the rate provided by law in the case of members of the Board. The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails for its official business in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government, and shall determine its necessary expenditures under this act and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, subject to such restrictions as the Budget Director or the President of the United States may prescribe. The Corporation shall pay such proportion of the salary and expenses of the members of the Board and of its officers and employees as the Board may determine to be equitable, and may use the facilities of Federal home loan banks upon making reasonable compensation thereof as determined by the Board."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, this sounds like a long amendment. However, the fact is I have simply changed three parts of this subsection, and the amendment has just been read as the language will read if the bill is amended in these particulars.

Let me explain the purpose of the amendment, directing attention first to page 8, line 7, wherein the language of the bill reads:

Without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment or compensation of officers, employees—

And so forth.

This amendment puts the employees of this corporation under existing laws, the language of my amendment being "with due regard to the provision of other laws."

In other words, it would fix the compensation rates of the employees of this corporation as determined by the Classification Act, which is now the law.

The next matter I want to call attention to is that I have taken out the word "select" because that is in reference to the civil-service section, and I have put the qualifying language after the words "United States", in line 10.

In line 16 the language states that the corporation—shall determine its necessary expenditures under this act and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditures of public funds.

I simply have changed this language by striking out the words—without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditures of public funds—

And inserting in lieu thereof the following—subject to such restrictions as the Director of the Budget or the President of the United States may prescribe.

In other words, as long as we are doing away with the provisions of the law governing the expenditure of public funds I thought it only proper to put it under the direction of the Bureau of the Budget as well as of the President of the United States.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I think the original act, the mother act, setting up the Federal Home Loan Board and the Federal home-loan banks, contains, in section 18, exactly the language of the pending bill as it came out of the committee; that is, without regard to the provisions of existing law.

So, if the gentleman's amendment prevails, we would have an inconsistency; that is, this corporation set-up would have to be with limitation, whereas the Federal home loan bank is not.

Mr. GOSS. But this corporation is practically going to take the place of the other corporation, I may say to the gentleman from New York. I think it is only fair, inasmuch as we are trying to relieve home owners, to give at least a little consideration to the employees who are going to administer this fund; and inasmuch as the Congress has already enacted into law the Classification Act governing the compensation of employees, I think it only fair that the provisions of this act apply to the employees of this corporation charged with the expenditure of the $2,000,000,000 it will have under its control.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman knows this is emergency legislation. The gentleman knows also that were we to wait for Civil Service examinations, and whatnot, perhaps the exigency necessitating this legislation will have passed.

Mr. GOSS. What I am trying to do here primarily is to have the existing law, as it relates to wages under the Classification Act, apply to the employees of this corporation.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Would not the effect of the gentleman's amendment be to put all the employees under the classified service?

Mr. GOSS. Yes; it would put them all under the classified service, or under the provisions of any other law that exists, I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he would be willing to accept this amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. It would be in direct violation of a recent positive expression of this House.

Mr. GOSS. How, may I ask the gentleman from Alabama, by putting them under the Classification Act it violates the express provisions of any recent bills?

Mr. STEAGALL. A similar provision to that desired by the gentleman was, on motion, stricken out of the last bill we had under consideration.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman is talking only about civil service. He is not talking about the rate of compensation of the employees. Is not this true, may I ask him? The House passed upon the civil-service question. My amendment applies to the rate of wages to be paid the employees of this new $2,000,000,000 corporation, and only puts them under existing laws of the Government as determined by Congress in the past.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Would not the effect of the gentleman's amendment be to continue in employment people already under civil service, rather than permit the employment of those who might not be?

Mr. GOSS. No. It applies the classification wage rates to the employees of this new governmental agency, I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma. If the bill stands as written, any wage scale may be imposed upon these clerks and other employees.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on an amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I shall not use the 5 minutes allotted me. A simple amendment is needed in order to prevent discrimination in the administration of this particular act.

May I say at the outset that I am in accord with the purposes of the act. Properly administered, I believe very much good will come from it, but I am bound to say that in times past acts have been passed by Congress with good intent and good design, but the very intent of those acts has been ruined by the improper administration of the acts.

My amendment provides that, in line 14, on page 7, after the figures "$15,000," the following words shall be inserted:

No discrimination shall be made against any home mortgage which is upon real estate located in a municipality, county, or taxing district which is in default upon any of its obligations.

You may say there is no necessity of writing these words in the act itself, but I want to safeguard the interests of the property owners in the municipalities, counties, and taxing districts which at the present time may be in default. I may say further that it is not a local provision, applicable to my own State. It is applicable to a great number of the States of the Union at the present time. Having, as we do, municipalities, counties, or taxing districts in 41 States of the Union in default at the present time, I wish to inform the committee that in the application of the previous Home Loan Act municipalities in default and properties in such districts were denied the privileges of the act, and I want to prevent a repetition of that in respect of this act.

I sincerely trust the Committee will concur in this amendment. It is a simple amendment for the purpose of assisting in the administration of the act and preventing those things which will defeat the very purposes of the act in the communities that need its application most. I realize that oftentimes an act passed here is so administered that its purposes are defeated.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON. I yield.

Mr. THOM. Why would the makers of loans under this bill discriminate against a community where bonds have been defaulted?

Mr. PETERSON. They should not.

Mr. THOM. Why would they?

Mr. PETERSON. In times past they have for this reason: They take the position that they do not know what the tax levy will be in that particular community, but I may say that no one knows from year to year what the tax levy will be in any particular community, whether the bonds be in default or whether the bonds mature in the future. However, this has been a far-fetched construction in the application of the principles of the previous act, and I fear it may occur in the future unless the Congress writes into this bill a provision of this sort, and I am pleading today not only for my own State but for the 40 other States that may be in the same position.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILCOX. I should like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in the administration of the Farm Loan Act, Federal land banks have in many instances refused to grant loans on farms located in counties or in taxing districts where the bonds of the county or taxing district are in default.

Mr. PETERSON. They have, sir.

Mr. WILCOX. Is it not also a fact that there are now in the United States approximately 1,000 communities that are in default on their public obligations, and if this act should be administered as the Farm Loan Act has been administered there would be 1,000 communities in the United States which would be shut off from participating in the loans provided under this act.

Mr. PETERSON. That is correct.

Mr. WILCOX. And the object of the gentleman's amendment is to remove discrimination against such communities with respect to the benefits of this act.

Mr. PETERSON. Yes; and those communities are increasing in number and involve 41 States.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am sure the gentleman understands that under the specific provisions of this bill it would be the duty of the administrators of this law to extend accommodations to mortgagors to meet deficiencies in taxes or other liens or charges against homes. This is one of the primary purposes of the legislation.

Mr. PETERSON. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I take it that all the members of the Committee are anxious to do everything possible to relieve the distress of home owners, but the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] would simply open wide the floodgates of this bill and bankrupt the United States.

The gentleman talked about handing the people a gold brick in the home loan bank bill; he would hand them another gold brick in this bill if his amendment should be adopted.

There are $22,000,000,000 of home-loan mortgages in this country on urban property, $8,000,000,000 of which is in default. We have no right to pick out any particular home owner and say that we are going to give him a mortgage at 5 percent on 80 percent of value.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REILLY. I cannot yield.

And then say to the great masses of the home owners that we have no relief for them.

This bill carries $200,000,000 for this particular activity, but even taking into consideration the entire appropriation of $2,000,000,000, you would not get anywhere in trying to relieve the distress of all the home owners.

We are trying to do something for the home owner in this bill, but if you adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri you are going to destroy the whole bill. The President of the United States cannot accept such a measure. It is out of the question for this Congress to say to the people of the United States who have $20,000,000,000 of city mortgages, "Come on, the United States Government will lend you cash up to 80 percent of the value of your property."

Where are you going to get the money? How are you going to finance such a stupendous operation on the part of the National Government? If we should issue $20,000,000,000 worth of bonds to take care of our city mortgages we would be entering upon the most stupendous inflation this country has ever known, an inflation that would destroy and wreck the industrial life of our country.

Again, there are 9,000,000,000 of farm mortgages—where are you going to stop in this work, where are you going to end? We all have sympathy with the home owner, but there is a limit beyond which the Government cannot go. This bill is designed to help home owners, the home owner that is distressed from unpaid taxes, and the home owner who can arrange with his mortgagor to take bonds in exchange for his mortgage. There is a limit to what the Government can do on the home-mortgage question. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is unworkable and will draw Presidential veto.

Now, as regards the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss], this amendment should be voted down. The pending bill carries the same provision as to clerical help and assistants that the home loan bank bill carried, and the Reconstruction Finance bill. Both of these measures left to the Boards the power of determining as to the personnel necessary to carry out their functioning. I have had no complaint from the method pursued by either of these Boards, and I think the pending bill should be left in this regard as reported by the committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The pending motion of the gentleman from Missouri is the most important that will have been made in connection with this bill. The vote of every Member, whether it comes now or later on the same topic, will be one of the most important that he will have cast in the course of this Congress, because by it he will express his judgment as to whether this particular proposal of the President of the United States ought to become law or should not become law.

If this motion prevails, this bill cannot become law. So every man is now put to the test of whether or not he desires that the proposal of the President, recommendation for which was sent to us by message, shall receive the approval and support of this House. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DUFFEY] put in the RECORD this morning some important figures. I commend to your attention the figures on page 2519 of this morning's RECORD, where you may find that the total of the urban-home mortgages in this country is estimated at $21,450,500,000. The pending amendment, if it succeeds and if it becomes a law, will invite every maker of every home mortgage included in that total to transfer his mortgage to the United States Government. The United States Government by the action of yesterday is not to charge more than 5 percent interest. There are thousands and thousands of mortgages in this country that are carrying 6 percent interest or more. Should you vote for this proposal, and should it prevail, you will invite every one of those mortgagors—and I repeat for the sake of emphasis, in order that you may know what you are doing—to transfer his mortgage from the present mortgagee to the United States Government.

Mr. MAY rose.

Mr. LUCE. I have not the time. I ask you to consider whether you wish at this moment to add somewhere up toward $20,000,000,000 more to the debt of the United States, in the shape of outstanding obligations of one of its agencies, with interest guaranteed. It may not be $20,000,000,000, but dare you add even $10,000,000,000 more on top of what we have now?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. And I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there are only $200,000,000 of cash capital provided in this bill for this corporation. How could they take care of eight or ten billion dollars worth of distressed mortgagors?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. LUCE. I regret that I have only a moment, but if the gentleman will make it snappy I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman from Massachusetts will remember that in the very closing days of the last session of Congress I introduced an amendment to the other home-loan bill making it possible for a home owner to deal directly with the corporation.

Mr. LUCE. I cannot yield any more. I wish I had a louder voice and stronger lungs that I might more emphatically condemn fastening on this bill the sort of thing that was put on the bill last year.

Mr. MAY. Then why do you name this bill "the Home Owners Loan Act of 1933" in the very first section of the bill?

Mr. LUCE. Because that is what it is for. It is for the home owner who can give security, who is in distress, and who cannot now get relief. We are not doing anything for the man who can now get relief, but we are doing something for the man who cannot. Gentlemen who vote for this motion will vote to destroy the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. All time has expired on the section and all amendments thereto. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], which the Clerk will again report for information.

The Clerk again reported the Cochran amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and, the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 77, noes 118.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. STEAGALL and Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri were appointed tellers.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported ayes 77, noes 133.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend H.R. 5240 by adding to section 4 (d) the following paragraph:

"The Corporation shall appoint in each State a board of conciliation, consisting of not more than five members, who shall serve without pay. It shall be the duty of said State boards of conciliation to appoint or designate a suitable number of local boards of conciliation in their respective States, who shall also serve without pay. It shall be the duty of such State and local boards of conciliation to bring about between home mortgagors and mortgagees and lien holders an exchange of bonds for home mortgages, as herein provided, wherever it may be found practical to do so, considering the interests of all parties."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina) there were—ayes 32, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STOKES: Page 5, line 3, after the word "thereof", strike out all of the remainder of line 3 down to and including line 8 to the words "the Corporation."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 5, line 16, strike out the comma after the word "it" and insert "or as provided in subsection (e) of this section."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 40, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is on the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRUAX: Line 7, page 9, after the word "advance", insert the following:

"STAY OF PROCEEDINGS"

"SUBSECTION 1. If on or within 1 year after the day this act takes effect any owner of real property occupied by such owner is unable to pay, and is in default in the payment of, either principal or interest of any debt secured by a mortgage on such real property, or of taxes the nonpayment of which constitutes a default under such mortgage, such default shall constitute an act of bankruptcy and such owner of real property being therefore unable to pay his or her debts as they fall due shall be deemed insolvent and a bankrupt for the purpose of this act."

"SEC. 2. No proceeding to foreclose or otherwise to enforce any claim against or out of the real property of such owner and no sale on foreclosure, execution, or otherwise shall be instituted, further prosecuted, held, or made on or within 1 year after the day this act takes effect except upon petition in bankruptcy duly filed in a court of the United States pursuant to the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', as heretofore amended."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the amendment is not germane to this section.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DRIVER). The Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] on the point of order.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, in the preceding lines of subsection (g) provision is made in this act to redeem or recover homes lost by owners by foreclosure or forced sale, by a trustee under a deed of trust, within 2 years prior to such exchange or advance.

The amendment I have offered seeks to protect those whose homes will be foreclosed during the interim in which they might secure benefits under this act. This amendment is constitutional. The Congress has absolute control—

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is discussing the amendment and not the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assumes it is necessary to make an explanation of the amendment in order to understand whether or not it is germane.

Mr. TRUAX. Under the plenary powers of Congress over the bankruptcy laws of this country, the Congress has the authority and power to declare what group of persons or individuals may be classed as bankrupts for the purpose of this act. The Congress also has the power to throw its arm of protection about any group of people whom it may class—

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I insist the gentleman is discussing the amendment and not the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it is necessary for the gentleman to explain the purport of the amendment and its application to this particular section to which it is directed, in order that the Chair may properly understand the nature and purpose of the amendment. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, the whole purpose of this act, as stated by the proponents, the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the members of that committee, is an emergency act for the immediate relief of distressed home owners. I deny that this is an emergency act. I deny that it will in any large measure—

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that the gentleman has not yet said one word as to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order raised against the amendment.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, it is absolutely necessary to explain the purposes of the act in order to explain the germaneness of this amendment to this subsection of the bill. I would say, moreover, that every time a suspension of foreclosure has been presented in this House we are immediately confronted with the old alibi of unconstitutionality.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I greatly regret to insist, but if this practice is permitted, it would be possible for any Member, on the basis of a point of order, to discuss the merits of the matter for an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct about that, and his objection is well taken, and the gentleman from Ohio will confine his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is germane. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I frankly admit that as a new Member of this House, and coming from the rolling prairies of the great State of Ohio and being a hog farmer, I have not the experience nor the ability to discuss this point of order that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has. However, I would say to the Chair that in view of the distressing circumstances of these home owners, in view of the fact that one of the learned jurists of this country—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not confining his remarks to the point of order. Some latitude is allowed, but I think the gentleman has gone far enough.

Mr. TRUAX. May I be permitted to tell what the amendment does?

The CHAIRMAN. That would be arguing the amendment. The point of order is whether or not it is germane. The explanation which the gentleman has made explains the purpose of the amendment as directed to this section.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I submit the gentleman is entitled to explain what his amendment does for the purpose of showing the germaneness to the section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so stated, and has heard the gentleman; but the Chair is asking the gentleman to confine his remarks to the germaneness of his amendment.

Mr. TRUAX. I will try to do so. This amendment is drafted on the theory that Congress has the power under the Constitution to define bankruptcy and determine under what circumstances a particular class of persons are bankrupts.

Having determined that the members of a particular group are bankrupts, Congress has power to protect them and to compel mortgagees to proceed against them and their property only through the regular channels prescribed by the Federal bankruptcy court.

The amendment also proceeds upon the further assumption that the Congress has power to authorize Federal and State courts to enjoin the violation of this amendment and thereby to stay proceedings by way of foreclosure, Congress having in this condition and under the bankruptcy clause of the Constitution the further power by appropriate measures to prevent the bankruptcy courts of the United States from being flooded with a tide of bankruptcy proceedings.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the information we have had, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWANK: Page 4, line 3, strike out the word "Corporation" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Treasury Department", and strike out the word "bonds" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Treasury notes."

Page 4, line 5, strike out the word "sold" and insert in lieu thereof the word "used."

Page 4, line 6, strike out the words "or exchanged" and the three first words in line 7.

Page 4, line 7, strike out the word "bonds" and insert in lieu thereof the word "notes."

Page 4, line 8, after the word "prescribe", insert a period and strike out the remainder of subdivision (c) down to and including the word "paid" in line 25.

Page 4, line 25, strike out the word "bonds" and insert in lieu thereof the word "notes."

Page 5, line 1, strike out the word "Corporation" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Treasury Department."

Page 5, line 3, after the word "exempt", strike out the words "both as to principal", and in line 4, strike out the words "and interest."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: On page 5, line 2, after the word "instrumentalities", insert the following: "and direct obligations."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRUNNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BRUNNER: Page 6, line 6, after the word "case", strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$12,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: Page 5, lines 1, 2, and 3, after the word "subsection", strike out the following: "shall be instrumentalities of the United States and shall so state on the face thereof, and", so that the sentence will read as follows:

"The bonds issued by the corporation under this subsection shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any District, Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. As far as I could gather from the reading of the amendment, it is similar to an amendment already acted on, offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, to the effect that the bonds shall be direct obligations of the United States Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOSS: Page 8, line 4, strike out subsection (f) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The corporation shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, or agents as shall be necessary for the performance of its duties under this act, with due regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment or compensation of officers, employees, attorneys, or agents of the United States, except wherein the Board shall certify in writing that persons with the special qualifications desired cannot be so secured. So such officer, employee, attorney, or agent shall be paid compensation at a rate in excess of the rate provided by law in the case of members of the Board. The corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails for its official business in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government, and shall determine its necessary expenditures under this act and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, subject to such restrictions as the Budget Director or the President of the United States may prescribe. The corporation shall pay such proportion of the salary and expenses of the members of the Board and of its officers and employees as the Board may determine to be equitable, and may use the facilities of Federal home-loan banks, upon making reasonable compensation thereof as determined by the Board."

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman from Connecticut introduced an amendment practically similar to the one he now proposes, and the House, after due deliberation, rejected his amendment. He now proposes practically the same amendment.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order. I merely had the amendment read for the information of the House previously.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The amendment was read only as a matter of information and not for consideration by the House at the time.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOSS) there were—ayes 34, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANZETTA: Page 7, line 12, after the word "dwelling", strike out everything down to the period on page 7, line 14, and insert the following: "apartment or tenement building used by the owner as a home and by some of the tenants as and for living quarters, or held by him as his home-stand, and having a value not exceeding $20,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. LANZETTA) there were—ayes 6, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOEPEL: On page 6, strike out the last two words in line 7, all of line 8, and the first word in line 9; and in lieu thereof insert the following: "at the time of execution of the mortgage encumbrance."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas: Page 5, line 3, after the word "thereof", strike out the remainder of subsection (c) providing that the bonds therein provided for shall be tax exempt.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. This is the section of the bill with respect to the tax-exempt feature of these bonds, and I make the point of order that we have already voted on that matter.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that there was a question of that sort presented, but it was not entirely similar to the amendment which the gentleman has now offered. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak upon this amendment for 5 minutes in order that I may speak against the nefarious practice of issuing various tax-exempt bonds.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object—I dislike to object—but in order to preserve the rules of the House, if this request is granted, a similar privilege should be granted to every other Member who is offering amendments here, and therefore I am constrained to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas and Mr. O'MALLEY) there were—ayes 7, noes 43.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: Page 4, line 12, after the word "to", insert "principal and"; line 15, after the word "the", insert "principal and"; line 17, after the word "such", insert "principal and"; line 20, after the word "such", insert "principal and"; line 21, after the word "such", insert "principal and."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: Page 8, line 25, after the period, insert: "In no event shall the aggregate compensation from the board and/or corporation exceed the compensation now being paid by the board or by any of its Federal home-loan banks."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRUNNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BRUNNER: Page 4, line 11, after the word "exceed," strike out "4" and insert "3 1/4"; on line 12, after the word "interest," strike out "only" and insert "and principal"; on line 15, after the word "interest," add "and on principal"; on line 17, after the word "interest," add "and on principal"; on line 21, after the word "interest," add "and on principal"; and on page 7, line 2, after the word "of," strike out "5" and insert "4 1/2."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk and which I referred to in my remarks today.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PETERSON: Page 7, line 14, after "$15,000," insert: "No discrimination shall be made against any home mortgage which is upon real estate located in a municipality, county, or taxing district which is in default upon any of its obligations."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS

Sec. 5. (a) In order to provide local mutual thrift institutions in which people may invest their funds and in order to provide for the financing of homes, the Board is authorized, under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, to provide for the organization, incorporation, examination, operation, and regulation of associations to be known as "Federal savings and loan associations", and to issue charters therefor, giving primary consideration to the best practices of local mutual thrift and home-financing institutions in the United States; but no such association shall be incorporated by the Board unless in its judgment the community to be served is insufficiently served by local thrift and home-financing institutions.

(b) Such associations shall raise their capital only in the form of payments on such shares as are authorized in their charter, which shares may be retired as is therein provided. No deposits shall be accepted and no certificates of indebtedness shall be issued except for such borrowed money as may be authorized by regulations of the Board.

(c) Such associations shall make loans only upon real property located within 50 miles of their home office, and such loans shall be first liens upon homes, or combination homes and business property, having a value not exceeding $20,000, except that not exceeding 15 percent of the assets of such an association may be invested in first liens on other improved real estate. Such associations may also lend upon the security of their own shares and may invest in stock of a Federal home-loan bank or in obligations of the United States or in Federal home-loan bank bonds.

(d) The Board shall have full power to provide in the rules and regulations herein authorized for the reorganization, consolidation, merger, or liquidation of such associations, including the power to appoint a conservator or a receiver to take charge of the affairs of such association, and to require an equitable readjustment of the capital structure of the same; and to release such association from such control and permit their further operation.

(e) No charter shall be granted except to persons of good character and responsibility, nor unless in the judgment of the Board a necessity exists for such an institution in the community to be served, nor unless there is a reasonable probability of its usefulness and success, nor unless the same can be established without undue injury to properly conducted existing local thrift and home-financing institutions.

(f) Each such association, upon its incorporation, shall become automatically a member of the Federal home-loan bank of the district in which it is located, or if convenience shall require and the Board approve, shall become a member of a Federal home-loan bank of an adjoining district. Such associations shall qualify for such membership in the manner provided in the Federal Home Loan Bank Act with respect to other members.

(g) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized on behalf of the United States to subscribe for preferred shares in such associations which shall be preferred as to the assets of the association, and which shall be entitled to a dividend, if earned, after payment of expenses and provision for reasonable reserves, to the same extent as other shareholders. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe for such preferred shares upon the request of the Board; but the subscription by him to the shares of any one association shall not exceed $100,000, and no such subscription shall be called for unless in the judgment of the Board the funds are necessary for the encouragement of local home financing in the community to be served and for the reasonable financing of homes in such community. Payment on such shares may be called from time to time by the association, subject to the approval of the Board and the Secretary of the Treasury; but the amount paid in by the Secretary of the Treasury shall at no time exceed the amount paid in by all other shareholders, and the aggregate amount of shares held by the Secretary of the Treasury shall not exceed at any time the aggregate amount of shares held by all other shareholders. To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make such subscriptions when called there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended. Each such association shall issue receipts for such payments by the Secretary of the Treasury in such form as may be approved by the Board, and such receipts shall be evidence of the interest of the United States in such preferred shares to the extent of the amount so paid. Each such association shall make provision for the retirement of its preferred shares held by the Secretary of the Treasury, and beginning at the expiration of 5 years from the time of the investment in such shares, the association shall set aside one third of the receipts from its investing and borrowing shareholders to be used for the purpose of such retirement. In case of the liquidation of any such association the shares held by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be retired at par before any payments are made to other shareholders.

(h) Such associations, including their franchises, capital, reserves, and surplus, and their loans and income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, and all shares of such associations shall be exempt both as to their value and the income therefrom from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States; and no State, Territorial, county, municipal, or local taxing authority shall impose any tax on such associations or their franchise, capital, reserves, surplus, loans, or income greater than that imposed by such authority on other similar local mutual or cooperative thrift and home financing institutions.

(i) Any member of a Federal home-loan bank may convert itself into a Federal savings-and-loan association under this act upon a vote of its stockholders as provided by the law under which it operates; but such conversion shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the Board may prescribe, and thereafter the converted association shall be entitled to all the benefits of this section and shall be subject to examination and regulation to the same extent as other associations incorporated pursuant to this act.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out subdivision (i).

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment to strike out the entire subsection (i), for the reason that if you include that subsection I firmly believe that you will be voting to destroy practically all of the savings-and-loan associations, which are mutual loan associations, in this country.

You will note on page 11, lines 21, 22, and 23, you refuse to grant a charter to any new Federal savings and loan association if it is going to cause undue injury to those existing mutual local thrift and home financing institutions in communities where these loan associations are already established and which are properly conducted.

There is no such safeguard in subsection (i), which is for existing mutual associations to be converted into Federal savings- and loan-associations.

Why the committee leaves out the words "without undue injury to properly conducted existing local thrift and home financing institutions" in subsection (i) is beyond me. The failure to include it renders that subsection highly dangerous.

Now, what is going to happen? If you have a community where there are several existing mutual saving and loan associations, properly conducted, serving the community, drawing their funds out of the community they serve, spreading their benefits in the community where the money is received from—and you allow any one of these organizations to be converted into a Federal savings and loan association, you are going to give a superior advantage to that Federal home-loan association, and practically all the business of that community will be drawn from the other mutual institutions to the institution that is thus federally converted. In other words, you will drive all local mutually operated organizations into a huge Federal system. That would be deplorable. We should protect our local systems.

It has been my experience that when a State bank is converted into a national bank in the eyes of the community that federalized institution is given great advantages now enjoyed by the old State institution. That same situation will be developed in the various communities where you have a loan association converted into a Federal loan association. Then the State organizations will fade out of the picture. You have the further disadvantage, if you have a Federal institution, that the money is not drawn from the community served but from the outside into the community, and there will not be the same equitable benefits derived from that money to the home owners of that community. There will be absentee control, ill-suited to local benefits.

Therefore I do, indeed, hope that you will not allow a provision to injure existing institutions in converting mutual loan associations into Federal saving-and-loan associations.

Now, as an illustration, take the city of Brooklyn: We have a score of mutual saving loan associations there, and I know that just as soon as you allow any one of these associations to be converted into a Federal institution you will put every one of the others out of business. I do not think you want to do that. I am firmly of the conviction that that will be the result if you leave subsection (i) in the bill, and I hope that my amendment will prevail.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. How does the gentleman reconcile his argument with the provision in the bill which makes it mandatory that with the establishment of Federal savings and loan associations the association shall automatically become a member of the Federal home-loan bank?

Mr. CELLER. I am willing to go the length the gentleman wants to go, if he puts those saving words in there, that there can be no conversion if there will be any undue injury to the existing institutions. You do not allow, at the threshold, the new organization to be formed, a new Federal savings-and-loan association to be set up, if it is going to cause injury to existing local home-financing institutions. Why should not that limitation be applied to existing organizations which seek to convert into the Federal system? That is all I am seeking to do, but all amendments have been so voted down this afternoon that there seems no way of breaking through the wall of the committee's opposition.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The point I make is that the gentleman's argument is in conflict with the other section of the bill, which makes it mandatory that whenever one of these Federal loan associations is established, and they are not to be established if in the judgment of the Board, after careful survey, such association would injure an existing institution, and when established it automatically becomes a member of the Federal home-loan bank system.

Mr. CELLER. That is proper, but I do not see any inconsistency with what I have said and the fact that they become members of the Federal home-loan bank system. The Federal home-loan bank system is quite something different from the system of Federal savings-and-loan association system where the Government, through the Secretary of the Treasury, invests money up to $100,000,000 in preferred stock in these associations. The Government's vast interest in such a system makes it almost wholly dependent upon the will of the Secretary of the Treasury. The mutual building-and-loan associations that may join up with the Federal home-loan bank, with none of their stock owned by the Government, are nevertheless free and independent, subject only to the general regulations of the Federal Home Loan Board.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. If we make them become members, surely any other association ought to have the privilege by proper action of converting itself into the Federal system, and especially if by so doing they can better serve their members. I am fully conscious of what may ultimately happen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEEDY: Line 7, strike out "$100,000,000" and insert "$10,000,000,000."

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted I propose to offer another amendment to line 16, page 12, authorizing subscriptions for shares of any one association up to not to exceed $500,000.

I offer this amendment to test the sincerity of those men in this Chamber who believe that a remedy for our present-day difficulties is the printing of more money—inflation. Before referring directly to the bill in hand let me say what I have long since contended, that multiplying cheap money will not solve our difficulties.

My amendment is pertinent to this bill, because we are authorizing a bond issue of about $2,000,000,000 to deal with a mortgage situation which admittedly runs up to more than $10,000,000,000.

Nobody can estimate exactly how much would be required to give the desired relief, if we are indeed to relieve the burdened mortgagors of inexpensive homes in the urban areas of the Nation.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield to the gentleman, in the hope that he will not object if I ask for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Of course, I shall not object.

The gentleman is a member of the committee, and I should like to hear him. May I ask the gentleman is this a pro-forma amendment or does he intend to pass that kind of amendment?

Mr. BEEDY. Oh, I intend to press it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Very well.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, on the 16th day of last July, under the Borah-Steagall amendment, there was authorized an issue of a billion dollars in national-bank notes. On the 9th of last March we authorized a further emergency issue of $2,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve bank notes. In that same act we authorized any bank, whether a member of the Federal Reserve System or not, to bring any paper, whether eligible for rediscount in the Federal Reserve System or not, to the Federal Reserve bank, and if that paper has any value, to get Federal Reserve bank notes for it; and the authorities inform me that the possibility of money issue under this last provision of law alone is $20,000,000,000. Meanwhile there is a sufficient gold reserve in the Federal Reserve System on which to base a further issue of Federal Reserve notes of approximately $4,000,000,000 without the passage of any emergency legislation. Under existing law, therefore, we have now authorized an issue of $27,000,000,000 more of money than is already in circulation. What has been the result? How much of this possible issue of new money has the country availed itself of? Only $200,000,000 of new money has thus far been issued. Why has not more of it been issued? Because no method has been devised for getting either more of our old money, say nothing of this new money, into the hands of the unemployed, the needy masses.

The new—let me say the emergency currency—about as fast as it was issued—and it was issued in an emergency under fear that men and women were going to draw further upon their deposits in the banks, but as soon as fear subsided the demand withdrawals had decreased, and the banks found themselves liquid—has been used by the member banks in paying off debts to the Reserve banks. Thus the Reserve banks found themselves abundantly supplied not only with the old Federal Reserve notes but with millions of the new emergency currency. But this emergency currency was of no use to the Reserve banks either as a legal reserve or as a means of reducing liability on outstanding Federal Reserve issues; and since there is not any demand by industry to make possible the use of all this money, the Reserve banks retired practically an equal amount of Federal Reserve notes. That is the inevitable working of the machinery of the Federal Reserve Banking System based on the law of demand for currency as measured by the needs of business. That operation is not the policy of the Federal Reserve Board. The initiative is taken, not by the Board but by the debtor banks of the System, which, when they find themselves with plenty of money to pay their debts, approach the central banks, demand back their collateral, and reduce their liabilities. If we say that to end this depression we must simply have more money, if the gentleman from Texas is correct when he says we need only print $21,000,000,000 more of paper money and the depression will end, why not provide for doing it here and now? One trouble with that program is that although you may print this money you do not provide any means of getting it into the hands of the people who need it. That can only be done by giving the money to the needy or by giving them enough employment to absorb it in wages.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] has expired.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Maine be extended for 5 additional minutes.

Objection was made.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the other day we were assured by the chairman of the committee when he was fixing the time for the debate that if we would yield to him in the matter of a limited time for general debate there would be sufficient time given to the Members to discuss the bill under the 5-minute rule.

Now, I have been here for 2 days, and on my feet repeatedly, trying to get some time to discuss certain features of this bill; but the time seems to be all taken up by members of the committee. I want to know, Mr. Chairman, whether or not a Member of the House can discuss this bill, and how he is going to do it.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, along the lines mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania I want to submit this question to the chairman of the committee: Will not some parliamentarian in this House cite the rule which states that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole must recognize members of the committee having the bill in charge regardless of how many times they have spoken theretofore, in preference to a Member who has sat here hour after hour unable to get recognition? I want to know what the rule is and I am asking this question for my own information. Very much of the time of the Committee yesterday was taken up by members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I am not kicking about that, although quite a portion of the time was taken up rowing amongst themselves. I should like to know why other Members of the House cannot get recognition. I should like to know about this rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma himself, in presiding over the Committee of the Whole, has applied this same rule. The Chair is merely following the precedent established by the gentleman from Oklahoma and others who have presided over the Committee of the Whole.

Without objection, the gentleman from Maryland will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, I did not ask for a moment to discuss the bill during general debate, nor have I taken the floor until a moment ago to discuss it under the 5-minute rule. When, to answer a question asked by a Member on the other side of the House, I asked to have my time extended 5 minutes, objection was made. Now I am not complaining, but I think all of us ought to be a little more anxious to have this bill thoroughly considered.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I object to the extension of the argument of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. I do not object, Mr. Chairman, but I hope the gentleman's time will be extended so he may answer questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, no one is more interested in the passage of legislation to give relief to the home owners of the United States than I am. However, I am afraid this bill will not accomplish this purpose because of the limitations in the bill.

In 1916 we passed the Federal Farm Loan Act, which provided for the organization of joint-stock land banks, private institutions, to have the benefit of that particular farm loan law. We authorized those institutions to issue bonds at rates of interest under the law. It was stated in that bill, as it is stated in this bill, that these securities were to be instrumentalities of the United States Government, and the joint-stock land banks sold them as such to the innocent investment public.

Under this bill we are creating an institution with a capital of $200,000,000 which is to be furnished by Federal funds. We are putting language in this bill which gives them the right to issue their bonds up to $2,000,000,000, that they shall be tax exempt, and that they shall be instrumentalities of the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I am sorry I cannot yield. I have only 5 minutes.

Under authority of the act creating the joint-stock land banks, the greatest deception on the investors and the public was authorized and carried out. Great privation and losses have been sustained by the investing public because these bonds were sold as instrumentalities of the United States Government; not only bonds but the stock of these banks was sold to innocent investors who believed they were investing in Government securities. In many cases they lost all of their money and in some cases I think they had to pay additional assessments.

Here, Mr. Chairman, is being created another institution that may issue $2,000,000,000 worth of bonds which will be and which are intended to be sold to the public as instrumentalities of the United States Government. This goes farther than Congress went in the joint-stock land bank provision, because the interest on these bonds is guaranteed by the Government of the United States. This guaranty of the interest is tantamount to the assumption on the part of the Government of the total liabilities of the bonds that are out, and I cite in proof of this the very fact that the Government is now contemplating taking over from the investors of this country these joint-stock land bank bonds on some basis. Now, I say that it is unfair to thus deceive the public in this manner.

In addition to this, these bonds will not sell in the open market. The only way you are going to get rid of these bonds is by trading them to present mortgage owners, and the owners of good mortgages are not going to turn over their mortgages, because most of them will bear an interest rate higher than they will get under the provisions of this bill. I say to you that the Government will get all the inferior mortgages of the country, those which the public want to unload.

If you want to make this bill work, you have got to consider some proposition that will furnish a security that will raise the money. Otherwise this plan will not operate.

My guess as to what will be done is that when you get to the point where these bonds are not sold—just the same as has been done on other occasions—you will go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or to the United States Treasury and they will have to take over blocks of these bonds.

I wanted to propose at the proper place in the bill an amendment, but no opportunity was offered. I want to suggest to you now that if you are sincere and honest and want to help the poor home owner to finance his loan, and if you want to establish a precedent here which will do what everyone wants done, which is to lower the rates of interest, instead of issuing these kind of bonds, authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds of the United States in an amount not exceeding $2,000,000,000 and provide that such bonds shall be transferred to this corporation by the Secretary of the Treasury at such times and in such amounts as the Secretary of the Treasury and the Corporation determine to be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this bill.

I propose that these bonds shall bear a rate of interest of 2 percent, and that they shall be given the circulation privilege so that national-bank notes can be issued upon them in the same manner as was authorized by the Borah amendment to the Farm Loan Act at the last session. By doing this you will be giving the borrowers a lower rate of interest and there will be no deceit practiced on the public.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, when we were on the other section of the bill I had an amendment pending which was voted on, providing for the issuance of Treasury notes instead of bonds.

This bill provides for the issuance of $2,000,000,000 of bonds at 4-percent interest. This means that an interest charge of $80,000,000 per year is to be paid for 18 years if the bonds are sold, and you will sell the bonds all right when you make them nontaxable and bear 4-percent interest. This means that when these bonds are sold under this bill the Congress will appropriate $1,440,000,000 for interest and none of the principal will be reduced.

Somebody tell me why, instead of bonds, the Treasury Department cannot issue Treasury notes and instead of appropriating $80,000,000 per year to pay this interest, which is what the interest amounts to at 4 percent on $2,000,000,000, as provided in this bill, to these nontaxable bondholders—somebody tell me why Congress cannot appropriate $80,000,000 a year, put it in a sinking fund, and retire the total issue in 25 years. In 18 years, under the terms of the bill, we pay out $1,440,000,000 in interest and none of the principal is reduced.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWANK. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I believe the gentleman and myself are in accord. If we issued Treasury notes or certificates, this would eliminate any bonus being paid to the Wall Street boys.

Mr. SWANK. I thank the gentleman.

The question has been raised, How are you going to put this money in circulation? You can put it in circulation by lending it direct to the home owners as provided in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], or you can put this money in circulation in other ways. I do not propose to deposit it in banks where it is not put in actual circulation. You can also put the money in circulation by paying off the bonus certificates, and this House is going to have another opportunity, I believe, to vote on the question of paying the bonus to the soldiers. [Applause.] This is an economic question of getting the money into circulation and paying a just debt.

This proposition of issuing nontaxable bonds ought to be stopped, and now is a good time to stop it. This Government owes over $20,000,000,000 in bonds and it costs us over $600,000,000 every year to pay the interest. This is one thing that is wrong with this country. This is one of the troubles that has been brought upon us by the international bankers, the sponsors of the non-taxable-bond issues upon which they draw their interest and pay no taxes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWANK. Yes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. It is not at all necessary to issue these bonds, is it? Can we not accomplish the same thing by using Treasury notes and in this way save $80,000,000 a year and redeem the principal in the way the gentleman has suggested?

Mr. SWANK. We can do that by appropriating the same amount that we would pay in interest through putting it in a sinking fund for that purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] has offered an amendment which calls for an increase of the authorization under this bill to $10,000,000,000. I am opposed to this amendment and obviously the gentleman is not serious in presenting it.

Much has been said in this debate with reference to the amount of home-loan mortgages in the United States, and it has been argued here seriously, seemingly, that we could not use any part of the $200,000,000 fund created by this act to make loans direct to home owners, because, these gentlemen say, the home-mortgage loans in the United States amount to $21,000,000,000, implying that if we used any part of the $200,000,000 for direct loans we would be compelled to take up all home mortgages in the United States. In other words, some of the opponents of the Cochran amendment would have you believe that no part of the $200,000,000 carried by this bill could be utilized for making direct loans to home owners, because, forsooth, the fund is not sufficient to take up all the $21,000,000,000 of home mortgages in America. This argument is not only fallacious but absurd, an argumentum ad ignorantiam, or one based on the assumed ignorance of the Membership of this House or on their assumed ignorance of the facts. The Cochran amendment does not propose to refinance all the home mortgages in the United States, but merely authorizes the use of a part of the $200,000,000 fund to make loans direct to home owners facing sacrificial foreclosure sales. It creates no obligation on the part of the Government or on the corporation created by this act to take over all the home-loan mortgages in America.

When the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act was pending carrying an appropriation of $2,000,000,000, did I hear any of the gentlemen argue that you could not make direct loans to the beneficiaries under that act because the organizations and institutions who would be the beneficiaries of its provisions had a total indebtedness amounting to more than $100,000,000,000? The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act did not contemplate making loans to cover all the indebtedness of all the concerns embraced in all the classes or groups intended to be aided, as $2,000,000,000 would have been grossly inadequate for that purpose.

When the recent farm mortgage bill was pending in this House, creating a fund of $2,000,000,000, did these gentlemen argue against making any direct loans to farmers because, forsooth, the farm-mortgage indebtedness of this Nation exceeded $9,000,000,000, and therefore we could not afford to refinance all of those obligations? No; they made no such argument. According to the logic of some of our colleagues, because we cannot refinance $9,000,000,000 of farm mortgages, therefore we should not afford the farmers of America any relief from the present intolerable farm-mortgage conditions. Applied to the pending bill, their reasoning is: Because we cannot make direct loans to take up all the home mortgages in the United States, therefore no direct loans should be made to take up any of the home loans, although a part, at least, of $200,000,000 available under section 4 of the pending bill can be utilized for that purpose if the Cochran amendment had been adopted.

That is a silly argument, and I am surprised that it should be offered in this Chamber. The purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] was not to open the gates and compel the Government to take up all the mortgages on all American homes, but it merely authorizes the use of such portion of the $200,000,000 fund for direct loans to home owners as may be deemed advisable by the Corporation.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation that you voted for provided for direct loans under certain conditions. The Farm Mortgage Act, which you recently voted for, provided for making direct loans under certain conditions. Why not adopt this same formula and authorize a part of this $200,000,000 fund to be loaned direct to home owners, without the intervention of any of the associations or organizations recognized or created by this act?

It is illogical for any Member of this House to argue that we should not permit a part of that $200,000,000 to be utilized in making direct loans to home owners, because, forsooth, the sum of $200,000,000 is not sufficient to take up all the mortgages on all homes in America.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], for whom I have a high regard, argued that the Cochran amendment, if adopted, would open the floodgates and obligate the United States Government, or the agencies hereby created, to take over $21,000,000,000 worth of home mortgages, a statement palpably illogical, inaccurate, and misleading, but which seemingly caught the imagination of many of his colleagues.

As I have said, the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] did not contemplate a universal, all-embracing refinancing of all home mortgages in America; but, if adopted, it would have permitted the use of such part only of the $200,000,000 fund as the corporation created by this act deems just and proper for making loans direct to home owners.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. Yes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. In title III of the Home Loan Act it provides that certain amounts may be used for direct loans. The Cochran amendment only provided that a certain amount of the $200,000,000 be allowed for direct loans to home owners.

Mr. LOZIER. The gentleman is correct. It would not have permitted or compelled the Government or the Home Owners Loan Corporation to acquire all of the home-loan mortgages in the United States. The amendment would only operate on and be applicable to that provision of the bill which creates a fund of $200,000,000, and only such part of this sum could be used in making direct loans as, in the judgment of the Corporation, should be used for that purpose. It would have given the Board authority to make direct loans to individual home owners only when conditions warranted such action.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. To complete what I was going to say when my time expired a little while ago, I want to add that we should be frank with the people and be frank with ourselves. This guarantee of interest is an obligation on the part of the United States to pay the entire part of these bonds that are sold to the innocent public. We might as well look the thing squarely in the face. What will be done eventually with all of these $2,000,000,000 bonds is that which we are doing in many other instances. If the securities cannot be sold, we can send them to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or the United States Treasury, and they will buy the bonds with the taxpayers' money. The losses sustained by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—and we all know many of the loans they make are losses now—will eventually be paid by the taxpayers of the United States. This Congress will authorize the payment of these losses out of the funds collected from taxes at some later date. Let us not fool ourselves. When these $2,000,000,000 of bonds are in the hands of the investing public and a default occurs, the United States will be compelled to pay for the bonds in default. And if they do not, Congress will then, by public demand, compel the Government to do so. What I am suggesting here is that to procure this fund of $2,000,000,000 we issue 2-percent Government bonds and give them circulation privilege, which will sustain the market. There is nothing wrong with that. We should be frank with ourselves and have the United States furnish the money that will make this institution function, instead of fooling the public and the Government itself. The Government will be bound to redeem these bonds in case of default.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I am sorry, but I have not the time. Further, in view of the fact that this money is furnished by the United States to this corporation at 2-percent interest, I suggest that that rate be reflected in lowering the rates of interest on these mortgages to the home owners, the borrowers, to 3 percent. The greatest hardship that is experienced by home owners today is to meet the rate of interest and taxes that they have to pay on mortgaged homes. Practically every man here recognizes that fact. If we are honest with ourselves and really want to lower interest rates in the United States, I say that this plan will do it, and it will influence the lowering of rates on every loan that is made and outstanding in the United States. We should be honest with these borrowers, and not repeat what we did under the Federal Land Bank System. Let us give this institution the money with which to operate. It cannot operate otherwise. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman will recall that for my own part I have always felt that there was some responsibility upon the part of the Federal Government to make good to the innocent purchasers on the bonds of the joint-stock land banks as well as of the land banks. The bill now approaching us with amendments from the other body destroys all possibility of that ever being done. Does the gentleman approve that attitude toward the bonds of the home-loan banks?

Mr. McFADDEN. I am not saying whether I approve or disapprove. My position has been all along, and it was so stated at the time, that these are not instrumentalities of the Government, but unfortunately those who are responsible for their issuance sold them to the innocent public as such, and many thousands of widows and many other people who had money to invest invested in these bonds. I thought I saw the attitude here, among Members of the House, to make good that obligation which was held out to buyers of these bonds. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has felt from time to time that those innocent holders should be made whole. I still feel there is that sentiment here, and I understood, although it is pretty difficult to learn what the administration is proposing to do eventually, that out of this proposal at this session for refinancing home and farm loans and other things, there was a plan to take up or to reorganize or to take over obligations of the Federal land bank and the joint-stock land bank systems, and I think there is something in the wind to that effect. I believe, in view of the deception that has been practiced upon the investing public and the losses they have sustained, that there is, to say the least, a strong moral obligation on the part of the Government to make good these bonds.

Mr. LUCE. I have not it myself, but that is what was reported in the newspapers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENCOURAGEMENT OF SAVING AND HOME FINANCING

Sec. 6. To enable the Board to encourage local thrift and local home financing and to promote, organize, and develop the associations herein provided for or similar associations organized under local laws, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000, to be immediately available and remain available until expended, subject to the call of the Board, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the Board is authorized to use in its discretion for the accomplishment of the purposes of this section, without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditure of public funds.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DIMOND: Page 15, line 7, insert a new paragraph, to be known as "section 7", to read as follows:

"Sec. 7. The provisions of this act shall apply to the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii."

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I endeavored to secure time yesterday to address the House on a similar amendment. The pending amendment is constructed so as not to be subject to a point of order, and covers alone the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii. I do not know why these Territories were not mentioned in the original bill, except perhaps there was a thought by some of the members of the committee that they were already covered. After I unsuccessfully tried to secure unanimous consent to discuss the matter yesterday, the very kind and courteous gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] came to me and asked me whether that is not the case, and suggested that I call up the president of the Farm Loan Bank Board. I did that and talked to Mr. Stevenson, and as a result of the conversation with him I am satisfied that, no matter whether as a matter of law this bill covers the Territories, the Board is going to so construe it as not to have it cover the Territories. There are two ways of administering these things by these boards and administrative officers. One is to do things, and the other is to find some method by which they cannot be done. But I am not criticizing these officials.

In my conversation with Mr. Stevenson I asked him about the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii and whether they are covered. He said he did not know, and he strongly suggested that I do not present this amendment in the House but present it to the committee of the Senate. I wish I could. I wish I were a Member of both the House and the Senate, so that I could go over there and present things when I have not an opportunity to present them here. Unfortunately I am not.

This is not an amendment which will emasculate this bill. It will not vitiate the bill. It is not an amendment which will change the broad general purpose of the bill. It is an amendment simply to extend to the citizens of the United States in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii the same rights and privileges and benefits that are extended to the citizens in the United States proper. I know of no reason why the people in Alaska and Hawaii should be discriminated against, and I am satisfied there is no Member of the committee or of the House who intended to discriminate against them; but under the announced policy of the Board, the announced view of the Board upon the law as I received it from Mr. Stevenson yesterday, Alaska and Hawaii are going to be declared outside of this act if this bill passes without this amendment. We are simply asking for even-handed justice. We do not want anything special. I speak for Alaska, and the gentleman from Hawaii, of course, will speak for that Territory.

We are doing the best we can in Alaska, and we are subject to the evils of the depression just as you are in the United States.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. In other words, all that Alaska and Hawaii ask, as Territories of this country and as parts of this Government, and all that the citizens of these Territories ask, is to be given the same privileges that we have. Is that what you want?

Mr. DIMOND. Yes, sir; precisely.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Equal protection and equal benefit of the laws?

Mr. DIMOND. Precisely.

Mr. LANZETTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. LANZETTA. Does not the gentleman think the Island of Puerto Rico should also be included?

Mr. DIMOND. I think Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the District of Columbia should be included. I did not include them in this amendment today for fear somebody would make a point of order against it, because on yesterday the House voted down an amendment which included all of them. Therefore I was compelled to confine myself today to the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, so that my proposed amendment would not be subject to a point of order.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is the gentleman willing to accept an amendment to his amendment, to include the island of Puerto Rico?

Mr. DIMOND. If it does not kill the amendment which I have offered, I would be agreeable to it.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. If it is beneficial to one, it is beneficial to the other.

Mr. DIMOND. I would prefer that the gentleman would offer his amendment later to include the others, so as not to possibly make this amendment subject to a point of order.

Mr. STEAGALL. I would suggest to the gentleman that as far as I am personally concerned, while I cannot speak for the entire committee, still I think I would be justified in saying that not any member of the committee will object, but, speaking for myself, if the gentleman will accept the amendment to his amendment which has been tendered, I shall not oppose its adoption, and I will make no point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alaska has expired.

Mr. DIMOND. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. I now accept the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LANZETTA]. I do that upon the assurance of the chairman of the committee that the entire thing will be accepted. I understand, as a matter of good faith, it will go through and there will not be any point of order raised against it. If there is any danger of that, of course, I should reject it, but I am relying on the good faith of the Members here. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANZETTA to the amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND: After the word "Alaska" insert "Puerto Rico."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the amendment offered by the Delegate from Alaska.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alaska, as amended.

Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment, as amended, for the information of the House.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND, as amended by Mr. LANZETTA.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: On pages 14 and 15, strike out all of section 6.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, section 6, in these days of economy, provides for no less than $250,000 for what? Just for propaganda. I say, at a time when we are causing the severance from service in this country of many thousands of civilian employees by the so-called "30-year compulsory retirement provision", causing a great deal of dismay and suffering among those civilian employees, on the score of economy, we have no right to spend a quarter of a million dollars for what is nothing more nor less than propaganda. I say that in all earnestness to the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency. If they want publicity for what there is to be done under the bill, the newspapers will open column after column to the members of this corporation. If they want publicity over the radio, the broadcasting companies would willingly grant those facilities to spread the gospel of this law.

There are chambers of commerce, there are boards of trade, there are churches and fraternal organizations who would all gladly give time and effort to make known to the people of the various communities the benefits of this act. I am amazed that there should be asked this vast sum of money for this purpose. Perhaps it is necessary to make known to the people of the land what this is all about. It was necessary to do the same thing when we established the Federal home-loan bank, the mother act, but you did not provide for one cent of appropriation for propaganda when you set up the 12 regional home-loan banks or the Federal Home Loan Board. Just see what an avalanche of publicity the members of that Board received.

The chairman of the Board went up and down the length and breadth of this land; he spoke over the radio; he appeared in pulpits and on rostrums, and where not, telling the people what this was all about. His colleagues did the same thing. I know there emanated from each of the banks what was known as home-loan clearance committees, composed of public-spirited citizens in the various communities, who willingly gave of their services to tell the people of their communities what this home-loan bank was and what were the purposes of the act. Those home-loan clearance committees are still in existence. There are hundreds of them throughout the length and breadth of this land. Why cannot these Federal savings and loan associations and the Home Owners Mortgage Corporation avail themselves of those hundreds of home-loan clearance committees, hundreds of advisory boards, the Lions Clubs, the Kiwanis, the Rotary Clubs, to do what can be done for nothing, rather than expend $250,000 in these days of stress and difficulty from public funds?

I hope, indeed, that my amendment will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York, living in a thickly crowded region, I think, does not understand the conditions that this proposal means to meet.

As I pointed out yesterday, there are about 1,500 counties in the United States without any thrift institutions. There are in them no such conditions as those of which the gentleman speaks. There is nobody familiar with the way to start a thrift association. The situation is just the opposite of what it is in the communities where there are savings banks and building-and-loan associations. The effort of which the gentleman speaks was to induce such banks and associations to take advantage of the home loan bank law.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Are there no newspapers in these counties? Does not the radio reach into these communities?

Mr. LUCE. Very many of them are without any daily paper.

Mr. CELLER. Are there not daily and weekly papers, and farm journals?

Mr. LUCE. The expenditure proposed is not to advertise. The purpose is to incite, by any method that can be found the public-spirited citizens in a community now without any thrift institution to take steps to organize thrift institutions. Doubtless the gentleman is aware that even now after the mutual-savings-bank idea has been spreading for a hundred years, it has gone but little beyond the seaboard States, and that the idea of a mutual savings bank is novel to great areas of the country. The building and loan associations likewise have developed in only 10 or 15 of the States to any great degree.

What we are seeking to do here is to help the people of these 1,500 counties to help themselves; and certainly no more useful effort can be undertaken than to encourage and help the creation of thrift agencies in all parts of the land.

Mr. CELLER. I agree with the gentleman that we should do everything in our power to help organize these thrift agencies, but at this time a quarter of a million dollars is entirely too much for this purpose. The act creating the Federal home-loan bank system contained no such provision, yet the system has spread far and wide throughout this country without the expenditure of money.

I am as familiar as the gentleman is with the wide-open spaces despite the fact he and I live in crowded cities, but I do know that there are public-spirited citizens all over the land who would willingly render their services to spread propaganda for this work. I do not think we need to spend this money for this purpose.

Mr. LUCE. I can say only, Mr. Chairman, that the judgment of those who framed the bill was to the contrary.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York has misconceived the purpose of the appropriation contained in section 6 of this bill.

It is not intended that the corporation shall hire newspaper space or time on the radio, but the idea is that they will send men into different communities, such as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has described, to urge the organization of thrift associations. It is nothing more nor less than a recognition of the importance of these thrift associations to the home-building movement of this country.

I may say that the building and loan associations of this country, which the gentleman from Missouri said were the special recipients of the benefits of the home-loan bank bill, are doing and have done more to build homes and thereby making our country a country of home owners, than any other institution we have. Something like 8,000,000 homes have been financed and built in this country by home financing institutions. Out of the 36,000 homes built last year more than 19,000 were built and financed by home building and loan associations.

The object of this appropriation is to encourage and build up in these communities that have no thrift association, institutions that will encourage the home-owning and home-building idea, which is the real foundation and stability of our country.

This is a small amount of money to contribute for the purpose not of propaganda but for hiring men to go into communities to organize thrift institutions that will result in more home building.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REILLY. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. There is nothing, so far as I can see from a reading of the language of the last portion of the section that the money may be spent without regard to the provisions of any other law governing expenditures of public funds which says that the heads of this organization may use those funds to buy space in newspapers, magazines, or purchase radio facilities. There is nothing to prevent it.

Mr. REILLY. I take it, the judgment of the corporation will be to send experts out to help communities organize thrift and savings institutions.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it has been charged during the consideration of this bill that some of us who offered amendments in good faith have been trying to strike out vital portions of the bill. The amendment that I offered and which was defeated by the speech of my good friend the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LUCE, who told the Members of the House it would cost $22,000,000,000, was offered in good faith.

It is true that if every man in this country who has a mortgage on his home appealed for recognition under this act it would cost such an amount, but I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that if every corporation and everyone entitled to recognition under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act appealed to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for relief, it would cost $100,000,000,000, or possibly twice that amount. We could not answer the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts, as the time had expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will yield later.

The gentleman from Massachusetts knows as well as I that only a small portion of the people eligible are going to take advantage of this act.

I think the most dangerous part of this bill is that section wherein appear the words which provide that the bonds shall carry upon their face a notation that they are Government instrumentalities. This gives an opportunity to the high-powered salesmen to go to the innocent investor and say: "Here is a Government obligation. Read what it says on its face." You know all the Government does in respect to the bonds is to guarantee the interest. I think you are making a grave mistake when you leave this provision in the bill. It should be stricken out.

I am going to vote for this bill with the hope that when it gets to the Senate we will get a real relief bill which will prevent distressed home owners from losing their homes because they cannot refinance their obligations.

I have an amendment at the desk similar to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to strike out this section. It is a willful waste of public funds to appropriate $250,000 to send men into communities for the purpose of getting them to organize associations to take advantage of this act; more jobs at the taxpayers' expense at a time when we are, by reducing expenditures, separating thousands of faithful employees from their positions.

If the local communities are not sufficiently interested to organize their own associations, why not let them stay out? There is absolutely no reason why you should waste this $250,000 of public funds, and this section should be taken out of the bill.

I have constituents, and many of them, and I am in the same position as other Members, who are looking for jobs, but I am not trying to get them jobs at the expense of the public or by taking funds out of the Public Treasury when there is no necessity for it.

I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. STEAGALL. I have asked the gentleman to yield in order that I may ask, to meet his wishes and the wishes of the committee, unanimous consent to amend the bill on page 5 by striking out, after the word "subsection", the language down to and including the word "and" in line 3.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is the amendment which I offered and I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. STEAGALL. This strikes out the provision which declares that the bonds are the instrumentalities of the Government and should so state on their face.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is the amendment I offered after all time had expired. I was unable to explain to the Committee the purpose of my amendment, which I would have done if I had had the opportunity.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may we have the request stated again?

Mr. STEAGALL. To strike out, on page 5, line 1, all after the word "subsection" down to and including the word

"and" in line 3. I will state for the information of the committee that the language stricken is "shall be instrumentalities of the United States and shall so state on the face thereof." The amendment would eliminate this language from the bill.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. If we go back to section 4, page 5, would that throw all of section 4 open to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be necessary to obtain the unanimous consent of the Committee to do that, of course.

Mr. GOSS. Then other amendments could be offered to that section?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the request, if the Committee returns to that section of the bill it would be for the purpose only of offering the amendment stated by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I may say to the Committee that the language contained in the amendment suggested now by the gentleman from Alabama was stricken out in committee, but remained in the bill by mistake.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, and I hope the Committee will bear with me just a moment. We have recently discovered that the Board handling the home-loan business has ruled that if a municipality or a county or a taxing district has defaulted on its bonds, not a single home owner in such a community can receive one of these loans. We find that only eight States in the Union can have every one of its districts come under this bill. I want the Committee to also give permission to my colleague from Florida to reoffer his amendment, which would correct this ruling of the Board.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will let each proposition be handled on its own merits.

Mr. STEAGALL. If the gentleman will permit, I may say to my friend from Florida that the Board in the very necessities of the situation has never passed upon, and could not have passed upon, any such question under this bill. This is new legislation and is entirely apart from the original home loan bill, and, of course, no such ruling could have been made.

Mr. GREEN. Will not the same Board handle this fund?

Mr. STEAGALL. And the primary purpose of this legislation is to grant relief by taking care of taxes and other assessments and liens on property for home owners who find themselves in the very difficulties to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. GREEN. Will not the same Board handle this bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; but it is a different bill.

Mr. GREEN. The same Board will handle the bill, and I may tell the gentleman that they have only recently made this ruling, and there are only seven States that come within this ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the Committee is whether or not unanimous consent shall be given to return to section 4 of the bill for the purpose of considering the amendment stated by the chairman of the committee. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I object.

Mr. GREEN. The gentleman's State is one of the States I referred to and he is objecting to this for his own State.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. Chairman, as I said yesterday, I have the highest respect for the judgment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], who is a member of this committee; and may I say I have also the highest respect for my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY], who spoke in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]; but we will observe in the proceedings here today some disposition at least on the part of members of the committee to accept amendments, and we will observe, I take it, when this bill goes to the Senate, that other amendments will be in order.

I think this amendment is highly proper.

I merely wish to make this observation: The interest rate in the farm mortgage bill is not satisfactory nor is the interest rate in this bill satisfactory to me personally; the interest rate to both farmers and city home owners should be lowered; but my personal consideration in the matter is not an objection to the bill in its entirety nor to the purpose it seeks to accomplish. But I do want to protest vigorously against the appropriation of $250,000 for the purpose stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts and by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY]. I think the time has come when we ought to put a stop to appropriating public funds for that purpose. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CELLER) there were 41 ayes and 76 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 1, after the word "of", strike out "$250,000" and insert in lieu thereof the sum of "$100,000."

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, I agree with the gentleman from New York that this is a worthless part of the bill. I think it is a waste of money that ought not to be tolerated now. If it has any good purpose, it can be accomplished with much less money than the amount appropriated in the bill. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars in this day is equivalent to one half million dollars 2 years ago.

I agree with the contention of the gentleman from New York that if this can be organized and if it is to be of any service, the communities will avail themselves of it without having this propaganda by persons going around drawing big salaries from the United States Treasury and accomplishing nothing.

There is somebody back of this thing that wants that $250,000. [Laughter.] I imagine they are high-pressure gentlemen that can go out and make the country believe that they are getting United States securities, when they are getting not that but are getting, unless this succeeds well, paper that is not worth 75 cents on the dollar.

I do not believe in appropriating Government money to fool the people. I do not know, but I believe there is not a man on this floor who would pay hard cash to buy the bonds provided in this bill. If there is a man let him stand up. I would not do it, and you would not do it; it is not right to impose on the public by sending out high-pressure salesmen and have them sell these securities to the innocent public who do not know anything about it.

You are saying that these are Government instrumentalities, and these high-pressure salesmen go out and say, "The United States Government is back of this—look on the face of it and you will see that it is." I do not think money should be taken from the Public Treasury for any such purpose.

If these associations can be organized in the country, they will encourage all of this; but let us not take the money out of the United States Treasury and spend $250,000 to accomplish what little could be accomplished under this provision of the bill. You can certainly do this with $100,000. With $100,000 today you can hire a lot of slick-tongued folks to go out and peddle this propaganda.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. Yes.

Mr. FULMER. In order to say to my friend that the Federal Farm Board in trying to sell the Marketing Act to the country hired some alleged experts at $6,500 a year and expenses to do that, and they spent a good lot of the $500,000,000, and it was just like putting that much money into a rat hole.

Mr. GLOVER. Yes; and these high-powered gentlemen have sold about $30,000,000,000 worth of securities in this country that are not worth anything.

Mr. LOZIER. Is it not true that if there is any merit in this section, any justification in the expenditure of this money for this purpose, $100,000 would be more than adequate until the next session of Congress convenes, and then, if it is found more is needed, the amount can be increased?

Mr. GLOVER. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Who is going to compose this board that is going to make these home loans?

Mr. GLOVER. The gentleman will have to find out. I do not know.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. If there are to be three Democrats on there—

Mr. GLOVER. Oh, I do not know whether it is Democratic or Republican. I do not enter into cheap politics in a discussion of this kind.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. But I object to having a board of our own party criticized in that way.

Mr. GLOVER. Oh, we have had inaccuracies on both sides of the Chamber. I am trying to keep ourselves from digging a pit into which we may fall and be criticized for it hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GLOVER) there were—ayes 90, noes 67.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Before we relinquish all opportunity to pass on the suggestion made by the chairman of the committee, I am exhibiting here a facsimile reproduction of a joint-stock land bank bond, that was issued by the Joint Stock Land Bank of Detroit, Mich. If you will examine the bond you will notice that it states on its face:

shall be deemed and held to be an instrumentality of the United States.

That is the language of the bill that we are considering at the present time. These bonds recite upon their face that they are to be instrumentalities of the United States. If you will take the bond and turn over to the back side, you will observe in very small print this statement:

This bond is issued under authorization from the Federal Farm Loan Board and is secured by United States bonds or approved first mortgages on farm land.

Now, when a high-pressure salesman comes around to sell you one of these bonds he will say, "This is an instrumentality of the United States Government. Look at it! Read it for yourself! It states so right on the face of the bond."

But you do not often closely examine the small print on the rear side of a bond. The result is, you are buying something that you think is a Government bond or something that is backed by Government bonds, when, as a matter of fact, it may be backed by a mortgage that is not all too secure. This opens the way for fraud. It opens the way for difficulty for investors, and that fact was made patent in the hearings before the Senate Subcommittee on Finance in connection with the refinancing of past-due obligations on farms and homes that were held in January of this year.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not just now. The vice president of the First Trust Joint Stock Land Bank of Chicago appeared before the committee and made this statement:

I think probably if Congress had foreseen the situation, they would have worded that a little bit differently, if they thought that we were to reach the situation where we now are and the situation we are in at the present time.

The testimony before that committee shows that substantial business men and bankers in this country were hoodwinked by the language on the face of the bond. I say to the committee here and now that it will be a sad reflection upon the judgment and discernment of this Committee if they fail to go back, on the recommendation of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and see that the language that is printed on these bonds is not corrected so that the investors may not say they have been hoodwinked by the language written into this instrumentality by the Congress of the United States. I say let us heed well, and I say to the gentleman who made objection to the request of the committee, that he should withdraw the objection, because here is evidence that business men and small investors alike were hoodwinked by the language on the bond, and it cost untold thousands to the investors of this Nation.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I offered an amendment today, on page 5, to add the words "and direct obligations of", which would have made them direct obligations of the United States Government, but that was defeated.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But that does not do any good unless we go back to the recommendation of the Committee on Banking and Currency; and we will rue the day if any man in this Committee, because of his own selfishness, refuses to withdraw his objection and see that that correction is made. [Applause.]

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. EVANS. I have received letters from constituents of mine recently wherein they state that they bought these bonds, believing they were Government bonds, and later found out they were not.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Is it not also true that the people of the United States who hold mortgages now that have some value will be induced to take these bonds, believing they are backed by the United States Government, when they are not?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Exactly. It requires no words of persuasion on my part. I have shown you a facsimile of the kind of bond that will be issued under the terms of this act, and it shows how people can be led into a species of fraud by that kind of language.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, it ought to be recorded here that the cause of all this is a decision of the United States Supreme Court that these bonds are instrumentalities of the Government.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Then something should be done about it, because here is evidence that people have spent their money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. I desire to ask unanimous consent to return to section 4 to offer an amendment to strike out the language indicated on page 5 after the word "subsection", down to and including the word "and" on line 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] asks unanimous consent to return to section 4 for the purpose of striking out the language indicated on page 5. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out in line 1, on page 5, all the language after the word "subsection" down to and including the word "and" in line 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEAGALL: Page 5, line 1, after the word "subsection", strike out all down to and including the word "and" in line 3.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Do I understand this is an amendment to that section?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I desire to submit an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the unanimous-consent request was solely for the purpose of striking out this language, and that was agreed to by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The unanimous-consent request was to return to section 4 for the purpose of considering an amendment on page 5, as indicated, and therefore the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] is recognized and the amendment will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. O'MALLEY: Page 5, line 3, after the word "thereof", strike out "and shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any district, Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEAGALL. The point of order is that the amendment which has just been read does not relate to the amendment offered under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I do.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that the House in Committee of the Whole has already passed upon a similar amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first hear the gentleman from Wisconsin on the point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Alabama, seeks to strike out the words that would make these bonds instrumentalities of the United States or allow them to be construed as being instrumentalities of the United States.

My amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama is to strike out the further part of the section which makes these bonds exempt from taxation.

I am entirely opposed to any more tax-exempt bonds of the United States being released upon the public by Congress; and I believe that if we are to decide here that these are not to be instrumentalities of the United States we likewise remove all reason why these bonds should be exempt from taxation.

I believe upon this basis my amendment is entirely germane and that it should and can be a part of the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman from Alabama, the chairman of the committee, reiterated what is a delusion. His unanimous-consent request was merely to return to the page. He then made a motion to strike out certain language which is a mere amendment which may be amended in any way that is germane.

The gentleman from Wisconsin then offered an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama to strike out additional language. This is the situation at the present moment. The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin clearly is in order at this time, the unanimous-consent request having been granted.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAY. Since the section has been returned to, would my amendment to the section which was once passed on now be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not. The unanimous-consent request was to return to the section to offer a particular amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is the situation precisely.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, the unanimous-consent request was to return to page 5 to offer a certain amendment. Until the Committee is advised as to that amendment they are not passing on the proposed amendment. They have passed on the unanimous-consent request before they knew what amendment was to be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The request was coupled with a statement of the purpose in returning to the section, which was to offer an amendment. The Clerk so noted the language at the time and the request was put to the House as one embodying this purpose. Therefore, the only question before the Chair is the germaneness of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, has the Chair ruled upon the germaneness of my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the first point of order. The gentleman from Connecticut raised the additional point of order that a similar amendment had already been passed upon by the committee.

Mr. GOSS. Today.

Mr. MILLARD. Today, said amendment having been offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STOKES].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state that the suggestion made by the gentleman that the matter has already been passed on is just one additional reason why the Chair holds that the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama is not germane and therefore not in order.

The point of order is sustained as to both points raised by the gentleman.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield that I may submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. McGUGIN. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I was very much impressed by the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, who spoke a few minutes ago. No matter what phraseology we put in this bill when these bonds go out to the public as tax exempt, with the Government guaranteeing the payment of the interest, it is going to follow as night follows day that the buying public will believe these are obligations of the Government. We all know that down the road these bonds are not going to be good as to principal 100 cents on the dollar, because the security back of them is bound to be mortgages which are in distress at the very time they are exchanged for these bonds.

This brings us to the point of how helpless we are and how hopeless is our task in what we are trying to do under this bill. There are about $10,000,000,000 of these mortgages very much in distress, and it is going to require about $10,000,000,000 to take care of them.

We might as well face realities as they are and not try to dodge them. Is anyone going to say that the Government should bear the responsibility of meeting the entire $9,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 of these mortgages? It seems to me we should be honest with the people of this country and not lead them into these false hopes. I do not believe the Government of the United States can take care of the mortgages of this country. There are too many of them. There are about $10,000,000,000 of this class of city mortgages, perhaps $15,000,000,000 altogether, and $9,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 of real-estate mortgages.

The truth of the thing is I do not believe these mortgages can ever be paid by the Government or by the people under present conditions. I do not believe they ever can be paid until we can raise the price level so the people themselves are able to pay their debts. If the price level is raised, then this means, I believe, that the one program which is essential for Congress to enact is to give the President, as quickly as possible, the power he has requested pertaining to the control of money. [Applause.]

This is a source from which we may obtain relief. There is another reason why I want this power lodged in the White House as quickly as possible. The truth of the matter is that if it is not lodged in the White House quickly the pressure which is coming upon Congress to pass bills such as this will be increased and when the people in the country find they will not work, it is going to mean that Congress will have to pass specific measures pertaining to inflation in order to meet such obligations. There will be the soldiers' bonus and there will be a specific issue of money to take care of city mortgages, farm mortgages, public works, and what not, which will probably lead to fifteen or twenty or thirty billion dollars, which will mean unbridled inflation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was about to ask the gentleman from Kansas, in view of the prospect he has painted of inflation or the revaluing of the dollar or reducing its gold content, what he thought would happen in such an event to the bonds provided for under this proposed act and under the Farm Mortgage Act.

Mr. McGUGIN. If they are payable in dollars, they will be payable in whatever kind of a dollar is in circulation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is very interesting.

Mr. McGUGIN. I will say to my friend from New York if I were opposed to any inflation I would crave an opportunity today to put this responsibility in the hands of the President, because I would know that if it is left with the Congress the inflation will be unbridled in a few months. You conservatives who are opposed to inflation and would prevent the transfer of this authority to the President, if you could, would only bring the crash down upon yourselves because of the inflation that is bound to come if we leave things to their natural course. The pressure that is going to be upon Congress and the people will not be for controlled inflation such as the President is in position to control, but will be an uncontrolled inflation and an unbridled inflation. If you want to save this country from uncontrolled inflation, put the power in the hands of the only authority that can control it, the President of the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that there has been a new section adopted in the course of the consideration of the bill and therefore, without objection, the numbering of the sections will be changed accordingly.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I ask the Clerk to report.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to amend has precedence over a motion to rise. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HEALEY: Page 15, line 10, after the word "false", strike out "or whoever willfully overvalues any security."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order we have already passed that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The section to which the amendment is applicable, as well as the succeeding section, has been read. The point of order is sustained.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DRIVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5240) to provide emergency relief with respect to home mortgage indebtedness, to refinance home mortgages, to extend relief to the owners of homes occupied by them and who are unable to amortize their debt elsewhere, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, to increase the market for obligations of the United States, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman against the bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. I am.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McFADDEN moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instructions to report it back forthwith, with the following amendments, and on that motion demands the previous question:

Amendments offered by Mr. McFADDEN on motion to recommit: Page 4, strike out, beginning with line 3, down through line 13 on page 5 and insert:

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue bonds of the United States in an amount not to exceed $2,000,000,000, and such bonds shall be transferred to the corporation by the Secretary of the Treasury at such times and in such amounts as the Secretary of the Treasury and the corporation determine to be necessary for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this section. Such bonds shall be subject to all the conditions and limitations prescribed with respect to bonds which are now authorized to be issued under the various Liberty bond acts, as amended and supplemented, including the provisions with reference to the method of issuance, the form, denominations, redemption, conversion, maturities, time, and method of payment of principal and interest, circulation privilege, refunding, and exemption from taxation, except that the rate of interest on such bonds shall not exceed 2 percent per annum. The sinking fund provided in section 6 of the Victory Liberty Loan Act, as amended, is hereby authorized to be made available for the retirement (subject to all the conditions and limitations contained in such section) of bonds issued under this subsection. For each fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year 1934, until all bonds issued under this subsection are retired, there is authorized to be appropriated, for the purposes of such sinking fund, in addition to amounts otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to 2½ percent of the aggregate face value of the outstanding bonds issued under this subsection. There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to make interest payments on such bonds."

Page 5, line 16, strike out "issued by" and insert "transferred to."

Page 9, line 10, strike out "its bonds" and insert "bonds transferred to it."

Page 9, lines 16 and 17, strike out "retire and cancel the bonds and" and insert: "pay to the Secretary of the Treasury such sums as will enable him to pay the interest on and to retire and cancel bonds transferred to the corporation and to retire and cancel the."

Page 9, line 24, after "States", insert: "and so much of the amount so paid as may be necessary shall be used by the Secretary of the Treasury to retire and cancel the bonds transferred to the corporation under subsection (c)."

Page 7, line 2, strike out "5 percent" and insert "3 percent."

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 383, nays 4, not voting 44, as follows:

[Roll No. 26]

YEAS—383

Abernethy	Dingell	Kemp	Randolph
Adair	Dirksen	Kennedy, Md.	Rankin
Adams	Disney	Kenney	Ransley
Allen	Dobbins	Kerr	Rayburn
Allgood	Dondero	Kinzer	Reece
Almon	Doughton	Kleberg	Reed, N.Y.
Andrew, Mass.	Douglass	Kloeb	Reid, Ill.
Andrews, N.Y.	Doutrich	Kniffin	Reilly
Arens	Dowell	Knutson	Rich
Arnold	Doxey	Kocalkowski	Richards
Auf der Heide	Drewry	Kopplemann	Richardson
Ayres, Kans.	Driver	Kramer	Robertson
Bacharach	Duffey	Kurtz	Robinson
Bacon	Duncan, Mo.	Kvale	Rogers, Mass.
Beam	Dunn	Lambertson	Rogers, N.H.
Beck	Durgan, Ind.	Lambeth	Rogers, Okla.
Beedy	Eagle	Lamneck	Romjue
Belter	Eaton	Lanham	Rudd
Berlin	Edmonds	Lanzetta	Ruffin
Biermann	Elcher	Larrabee	Sabath
Black	Ellzey, Miss.	Lea, Calif.	Sadowski
Blanchard	Eltse, Calif.	Lee, Mo.	Sanders
Bland	Englebright	Lehlbach	Sandlin
Bloom	Evans	Lehr	Schaefer
Boehne	Faddis	Lemke	Schuetz
Bolleau	Farley	Lesinski	Schulte
Boland	Fernandez	Lewis, Colo.	Scrugham
Bolton	Fish	Lewis, Md.	Sears
Boylan	Fitzgibbons	Lloyd	Secrest
Brennan	Fitzpatrick	Lozier	Seger
Briggs	Flannagan	Luce	Shallenberger
Britten	Fletcher	Ludlow	Shannon
Brooks	Focht	Lundeen	Shoemaker
Brown, Ky.	Ford	McCarthy	Simpson
Brown, Mich.	Foss	McClintic	Sinclair
Brumm	Foulkes	McCormack	Sirovich
Brunner	Frear	McDuffie	Sisson
Buchanan	Fuller	McFarlane	Smith, Va.
Buck	Fulmer	McGrath	Smith, Wash.
Bulwinkle	Gasque	McGugin	Snyder
Burch	Gavagan	McKeown	Somers, N.Y.
Burke, Calif.	Gibson	McLean	Spence
Burke, Nebr.	Gilchrist	McMillan	Stalker
Burnham	Gillespie	McReynolds	Steagall
Busby	Gillette	McSwain	Strong, Tex.
Byrns	Glover	Maloney, Conn.	Stubbs
Cady	Goldsborough	Maloney, La.	Studley
Caldwell	Goodwin	Mansfield	Sullivan
Carden	Goss	Mapes	Summers, Tex.
Carley	Granfield	Marland	Sutphin
Carpenter, Kans.	Gray	Marshall	Swank
Carpenter, Nebr.	Green	Martin, Colo.	Swick
Carter, Calif.	Greenwood	Martin, Mass.	Taber
Carter, Wyo.	Gregory	Martin, Oreg.	Tarver
Cartwright	Griffin	May	Taylor, Colo.
Cary	Griswold	Mead	Thom
Castellow	Guyer	Meeks	Thomason, Tex.
Cavichia	Haines	Merritt	Thompson, Ill.
Celler	Hamilton	Millard	Thurston
Chapman	Hancock, N.Y.	Miller	Tobey
Chase	Hancock, N.C.	Milligan	Traeger
Chavez	Harlan	Mitchell	Truax
Christianson	Hart	Monaghan	Turner
Church	Harter	Montet	Turpin
Claiborne	Hartley	Moran	Umstead
Clarke, N.Y.	Hastings	Morehead	Underwood
Cochran, Mo.	Healey	Mott	Utterback
Cochran, Pa.	Henney	Muldowney	Vinson, Ga.
Coffin	Hess	Murdock	Vinson, Ky.
Colden	Higgins	Musselwhite	Wadsworth
Cole	Hildebrandt	Nesbit	Waldron
Collins, Calif.	Hill, Ala.	Norton	Wallgren
Collins, Miss.	Hill, Knute	O'Brien	Wearin
Colmer	Hill, Sam B.	O'Connell	Weaver
Condon	Holdale	O'Connor	Weideman
Connolly	Holmes	O'Malley	Welch
Cooper, Ohio	Hooper	Oliver, Ala.	Werner
Cooper, Tenn.	Hope	Oliver, N.Y.	West
Cox	Howard	Owen	White
Cravens	Huddleston	Palmisano	Whitley
Crosby	Hughes	Parker, Ga.	Whittington
Cross	Imhoff	Parker, N.Y.	Wigglesworth
Crosser	Jacobsen	Parks	Wilcox
Crowe	James	Parsons	Williams
Crowther	Jeffers	Patman	Wilson
Culkin	Jenckes	Peavey	Withrow
Cullen	Jenkins	Peterson	Wolcott
Cummings	Johnson, Minn.	Pettengill	Wolfenden
Darden	Johnson, Okla.	Peyser	Wolverton
Darrow	Johnson, Tex.	Polk	Wood, Ga.
Dear	Johnson, W.Va.	Pou	Wood, Mo.
Deen	Jones	Powers	Woodruff
Delaney	Kee	Prall	Woodrum
De Priest	Keller	Ragon	Young
Dickinson	Kelly, Ill.	Ramsay	Zioncheck
Dies	Kelly, Pa.	Ramspeck

NAYS—4

Bailey	Hoepfel	McFadden	Terrell
Ayers, Mont.	Bankhead	Brand	Buckbee
Bakewell	Blanton	Browning	Cannon, Mo.

NOT VOTING—44

Cannon, Wis.	Fiesinger	Major	Sweeney
Clark, N.C.	Gambrill	Montague	Taylor, S.C.
Connery	Gifford	Moynihan	Taylor, Tenn.
Corning	Hollister	Perkins	Tinkham
Crump	Hornor	Pierce	Treadway
DeRouen	Kahn	Smith, W. Va.	Walter
Dickstein	Kennedy, N.Y.	Snell	Warren
Ditter	Lindsay	Stokes	Watson
Dockweiler	McLeod	Strong, Pa.	Willford

So the bill was passed.

The following pair was announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. Blanton with Mr. Treadway.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I arrived too late. I was detained by a hearing in the committee room. If I had been present, I would have voted "aye."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. CRUMP, is absent on account of illness. If present, he would have voted "aye." Mr. BROWNING, of Tennessee, is absent on business of the House. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. PIERCE, is absent on account of illness. If here, he would have voted "aye."

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. WARREN, is absent unavoidably. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the following Members are unavoidably absent; if present, they would vote "aye": Mr. HORNER, Mr. CRUMP, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. WARREN, Mr. PIERCE, Mr. LINDSAY, Mr. MONTAGUE, Mr. GAMBRILL, Mr. CORNING, Mr. BROWNING, Mr. KENNEDY of New York, Mr. SMITH of West Virginia, Mr. DICKSTEIN, Mr. WALTER, Mr. DOCKWEILER, Mr. MAJOR, Mr. DEROUEN, Mr. SWEENEY, Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina, Mr. WILLFORD, Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin, Mr. CLARK of North Carolina, Mr. FIESINGER, Mr. AYERS of Montana, Mr. BRAND, and Mr. CONNERY.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SWEENEY, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina, is absent on pressing business. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the call bells did not ring and I did not arrive in time. If I had been present, I would have voted "aye."

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GIFFORD, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. TREADWAY, are unavoidably absent. If present, they would vote "aye."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York, the minority leader, is temporarily absent from the Chamber. He authorized me to say that if present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, the following Members are unavoidably absent; if present, they would vote "aye": Mr. WATSON, Mr. McLEOD, Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee, Mr. BUCKBEE, Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania, Mr. BAKEWELL, Mr. DITTER, Mr. HOLLISTER, Mr. MOYNIHAN, and Mr. STOKES.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. STEAGALL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

H.R. 5240—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 days to extend their remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, the benefits accruing under bill H.R. 5240 to the home owners on whose property other tenants reside is too limited. The bill fails in its purpose with respect to this class, who are also commonly known as "home owners." We must realize that in most of the cities of the United States there are many persons who have invested all their earnings and savings in dwellings, small apartments, and tenements, primarily for the purpose of establishing a home. Some of the properties owned by this type of owner are, in many cases, tenanted by more than three families and partly for business purposes, such as stores, storerooms, and so forth.

In dealing with the problem of helping the small-home owner we should not concern ourselves too much with the number of families tenanted the property but rather with the value of the property and whether it represents a speculation or a desire on the part of the purchaser to have a place to live in. This question can readily be determined by the value of the property. Of course, we all know that a large apartment or tenement house is purchased with something more in view than the making of a home for oneself. On the other hand we must not lose sight of the fact that in most cities very few tenements or small apartments can be bought for less than $15,000, because the land values are very high and average between $6,000 and $10,000 per lot. It is because of the high land values that most of the dwellings, tenements, and small apartments, must, of necessity, have part of the property available for business purposes, in order to obtain a return sufficient to carry the heavy charges on the property.

Many so-called "moderate private houses" and "small apartments" cost much more than $25,000, and the purchaser of this type of property, who invests his life savings and buys it primarily for the purpose of making it his home, should not be considered in a different light from his rural neighbor who purchases a one-family house for his home.

I know, from my own knowledge, that this type of home owner has been hard hit since 1929. Many of his tenants have been unable to pay rent, but they, nevertheless, have been permitted to remain because of the friendly feeling existing between the owner and the tenant, from a long and intimate association.

In many cases, these owners, on the promise of payment have been requested by charity organizations to continue tenants, and I know that in many instances payments were not made and the tenants moved out owing substantial amounts.

Right now in New York City many tenants owe 6, 7, and 8 months' rent because the Home Relief Bureau in no case will pay rent every month. In most cases they pay rent every second or third month. These tenants who are the objects of charity have not been dispossessed, because to do so would practically mean a permanent vacancy; and the owner, rather than have a permanent vacancy, has contented himself with a rent payment every second or third month.

Because of these conditions the owner's income has been materially reduced, with the result that he has been delinquent and unable to pay interest and taxes, and many of them have lost their properties.

There is another and more serious problem which this type of home owner has been faced with during this depression, and that is the inability to obtain mortgage money. Large numbers have lost their properties on this account.

In the city of New York, for the past 2 years, savings banks and loan companies have refused to loan money on properties in districts commonly known as "tenement-house districts." They have even gone so far as to refuse to renew their own mortgages. In the cases where they did not foreclose they permitted the mortgages to remain open and callable at their will.

There are thousands of properties today, owned by this type of home owner, which are in immediate danger of being foreclosed, because it is impossible to obtain mortgage money to satisfy the expired mortgage. The owners are faced with the dark prospect of losing their homes and all their savings unless they receive some governmental aid.

Inasmuch as the purpose of this bill is also to help home owners of dwellings tenanted by other families, I feel that in order for this type of home owner to receive the help he so sorely needs, the valuation limit should be raised to $20,000, and I ask that my amendment be acted upon favorably by the Members of this House.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, in the bill now under discussion we are dealing with the most-cherished institution in America, in fact, in the world—our homes. The administrative majority is forcing us to vote on this question without permitting free debate on remedial and helpful amendments which are offered, thus preventing Representatives from presenting the viewpoints of their constituents on a problem as vital as this is to the welfare of the American citizen.

The measure under discussion is framed primarily to validate and legalize the defaulted investments of the bankers and loan associations of America. It permits these lending agencies to continue their unmerciful attack on the unemployed citizen whose home is encumbered with a mortgage. This measure is a very buoyant life preserver for the bankers and the loan associations of America while, at the same time, it is a lead sinker for the heavily mortgaged citizen whose hopes for relief decrease in exact ratio to the advantages granted to the lender.

It is firmly established by the debate which has thus far taken place that practically none of the tax-exempt bonds provided in this act will be sold to the public, but will be merely transferred to the mortgagee for the mortgage which will be turned over to the loan corporation. To be more specific, the mortgagee will thus be in a position to transfer the defaulted indebtedness of the home owner to the corporation and in return therefor receive a valid bond, on which the interest payments are guaranteed.

Recognizing the merciless character of the money lenders of America, as evidenced by the vast number of foreclosures which have already taken place, it is easily understood that the loan companies will not avail themselves of this provision unless, in their judgment, the existing mortgage on the property is of doubtful value to them, or at least not as good a risk as would be the bonds.

Not only will the loan companies receive 4 percent interest on these bonds—today they are not receiving interest or principal from the mortgagor—but they also, in addition, will be in a position to turn these bonds into the Federal Reserve System and thus obtain cash for bonds, which cash they may again relend to the public on new mortgages or on commercial activities, thus insuring them a double interest return.

The continued issuance of tax-exempt bonds, bearing such high rates of interest, will ultimately, if not soon curtailed, absorb the entire revenue of Government. The national interest on existing bonds approximates $700,000,000 which is an inordinate burden on the taxpayers.

The $2,000,000,000 of bonds proposed under this bill have as security the mortgages which are based on the value of the home. Therefore, instead of issuing bonds carrying 4 percent interest and turning them over to the bankers and loan companies on which they will immediately receive currency from the Federal Reserve System, it is more appropriate in the interest of the taxpayer that the Government itself issue these bonds, based on the security of the mortgage and home, deposit them with the Treasurer of the United States, and, through the Comptroller of the Currency, issue currency to the value of these bonds, and thus redeem the mortgages directly from the mortgagee.

If a plan of this nature is adopted, the interest rate could be reduced to as low as 2 percent or less, which would be an admirable advantage to the impoverished, mortgaged home owner, and all profits accruing therefrom would redound to the credit of the United States, rather than to the credit of the loan companies as will occur if we issue 4-percent tax-exempt bonds to their credit.

If it is not desired to issue bonds to deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury as indicated, sufficient funds to pay the mortgagees to the extent of $2,000,000,000 or more could be easily obtained by the liberalization and extension of our present Postal Savings law. If the limit of deposit is removed and the depositor is given a negotiable receipt for his deposit when made, billions of dollars will come out from hoarding and be deposited in the Postal Savings Department. There is today over $1,000,000,000 on deposit in the Postal Savings fund which the Government lends to the bankers at 2½ percent. It is my contention that the interest of the American people, the distressed and impoverished farmer and home owner, is paramount to that of the bankers. With a liberalization of the Postal Savings laws, the deposits in the Department would aggregate billions of dollars within a very short period.

Therefore, rather than to lend these Government Postal Savings funds to the bankers of America at 2½ percent, the Government could and should lend this money directly to the American citizen, to the farmer, and mortgaged home owners at the same low rate of interest, viz, 2½ percent, as today applies in the lending of these funds to the bankers.

The bill under discussion is weak in its construction inasmuch as it provides for only approximately 50 percent of the homes in America which are in mortgage default. Consequently it is safe to assume that at least half of the mortgaged homes in America which are in default, especially those where the mortgages are not held by bankers or loan companies, will be carried on to foreclosure since it is apparent to anyone who will read the bill, or who has heard the discussion, that this bill is nothing other than an extremely buoyant life preserver for the bankers and loan companies of America, and a sop to the impoverished and unemployed American citizen who is heavily mortgaged and who desires to maintain and retain his home.

In view of the facts as indicated herewith, I vehemently protest the passage of a bill which has for its prime objective the salvation of those who, through undue and faulty extensions of credit, have brought our financial structure to its present plight and who are the very first to cry for relief, which this bill seeks to give them to the exclusion of first protecting the interest of the mortgagor.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the strength of a nation consists in the homes of its people. This debate recalls to our minds the tribute which William Pitt, the great commoner, delivered in Parliament to the cottage of the British people. He stated, as I recall, that that home may be frail, the roof may shake, the wind may blow through it, the storms may enter, the rain may enter—but the King of England cannot enter; all his forces dare not cross the threshold.

However, the saddest phase to me of the panic which has ravaged our country is the fact, as recently established, that grim poverty and unemployment have entered the home of the American people and caused the loss of the homes of 5,000,000 of our citizens by mortgage foreclosure or tax sale. This is to these people a real tragedy when we consider the sacrifice and self-denial it means to the average American workingman to acquire a home of his own; and after he has done so the precious associations that hallow about that home, which becomes the center of the affections of his wife and his children, to all of whom that home is probably their dearest possession, and to have it taken away from them, and for them to be evicted after they have made payments upon it for a long period of years is, as I stated, a tragedy, and is also a serious menace to our Government and to our institutions.

The purpose of this bill is to render available the sum of $2,000,000,000 to restore, redeem, rehabilitate, and save the homes of many of the American people, and, Mr. Speaker, when we save the homes of the American people we save America.

Mr. LEHR. Mr. Speaker, ever since word went out to the country that it was part of the President's program to re-finance home mortgages as a part of the general emergency program of the administration I have received a number of requests from constituents in my district asking for information in reference to this subject. From the nature of the requests and the information given to me by these constituents, I am satisfied that the only practical relief which can be furnished them would be by actual refinancing of their mortgages with money. The very keystone of the arch of the American Nation is the home, and the community which has a large number of home owners has always been the most conservative and loyal community that we have in our country. Therefore it seems to me that we should do everything possible within our power to assist and aid the man who is desirous of owning a home for himself and his family. You show me a community that is composed largely of home owners, and I will show you a community that is happy, contented, and, under normal conditions, prosperous and on a solid foundation.

During the last few years of our so-called "inflated prosperity" a great drive was put on all over the country for people to purchase their homes, and to this extent the heads of families made every possible sacrifice in order to acquire a home in which to rear their children as patriotic American citizens. They went into debt way beyond their means under conditions as they now exist, and unless these home owners, the men and women who constitute the very backbone of our American people, are given help of a real substantial nature, the loss to these people in the future is going to be tremendous. In fact, it has already, during the past 3½ years, been terrific. So much has been said as to the relief that was to be afforded this class of our people, which includes myself, that I anticipated the consideration of this measure and its enactment into law with the greatest of pleasure, because I felt that as an emergency measure this was going to be one of the most important measures to come before the Congress. But I am frank to say that I am disappointed with the bill as it has been presented. I know that because of the publicity that has already gone out to the American people, and which will go out to the American people, that the great majority of our people will feel that they, as individual home owners who are still in debt on their homes, and some of them in an amount exceeding its present-day value, will be able to make application and procure the money from the Government to take up the present mortgage or pay off the contract and substitute therefor a new mortgage, running direct to the Government, conditioned on the payment of a lower rate of interest and the principal to be deferred over a long period of years.

If that were only true! But, alas, it is not so; the only relief which I can see in this measure for the individual home owner is that if he can get his mortgagee or his contract vendor to accept these Government bonds in lieu of the present mortgage or the contract, then he will be benefited, because, of course, this measure does give the home owner a lower rate of interest, and does permit him to pay off his obligation over a longer period of years. And, of course, it is going to be of benefit to those banks and building and loan associations and other mortgage institutions which will prefer to hold the Government bonds instead of the mortgages or land contracts, and so, because of this relief, although it is limited, I am in favor of the proposal.

The statement was made on the floor by one of the enthusiastic supporters of H.R. 5240 that this bill—will provide direct, necessary, and urgent relief to millions of home owners in the United States, who are today threatened with the loss of their homes and the equity which has taken years to acquire.

I only wish that the optimistic views of the gentleman who thus expressed himself will be realized. I very seriously doubt it. I know that when the Federal Home Loan Bank Act was passed by the last session of the Congress the same optimism was expressed in reference to what that piece of legislation would accomplish, and yet to the best of my information and belief, there was not a single solitary individual home owner in the State of Michigan who received any relief as a result of that bill, and but very little help or assistance was received by the building and loan associations of my own State of Michigan.

I make this statement in order that my position in reference to this bill may be thoroughly understood, and in the hope that those who will have the immediate and direct charge of its administration will so liberalize the rules and regulations surrounding its administration that the quickest relief and the greatest relief possible can be given to the men and women of this Nation who today are in danger of losing their life savings which they have invested in that which we have always been taught to cherish so dearly—the home.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, we are falling into a loose practice which is not only a violation of the rules but which—like most departures from correct procedure—may subject Members of the House to serious embarrassment. Frequently of late, at the close of a yeas-and-nays vote, Members have secured recognition to announce how colleagues who failed to answer when their names were called would have voted if present. I feel free to refer to the subject because I failed to vote on the bill just passed. The bells failed to ring, and I was a minute late in reaching the floor.

The rule prohibiting such announcements has been repeatedly affirmed by decisions of the Chair. I recall that when a Member proposed to announce how he would have voted if present in the Sixty-third Congress, James R. Mann, of Illinois, characterized it as "wholly improper", and Speaker Clark sustained the objection and declined to recognize for the purpose with the emphatic comment that it was out of order. And each succeeding Speaker has affirmed that decision.

And there is a reason, Mr. Speaker. The rules of the House are based on equity and common sense, and that is particularly true in this instance. The rules do not permit a Member to be recorded unless he is present and answers when his name is called, and they do not permit him to vote by proxy. This practice in effect nullifies both provisions of the rules and places him on record on the announcement of a colleague.

But the injustice of the practice to other Members of the House is, perhaps, the greatest objection. Such absentees are always paired, and the announcement of their position on the question automatically records the other party to the pair on the opposite side of the question regardless of how he would have voted if present.

As a matter of fact such announcements are a reflection on all Members who fail to vote, as it infers less interest in the proceedings and less attention to the question at issue than that exhibited by the Member whose position is announced.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the publication of such announcements in the RECORD encourages delinquency. When a Member can enter his appearance in this manner and be recorded by proxy on important roll calls he has less hesitancy in absenting himself. Something like 40 Members were included in a recent announcement of this character. If permitted to grow, we may soon have a situation where a majority of the membership may leave their vote and their conscience in the keeping of a colleague while they attend to more inviting matters.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. With pleasure.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Can the matter be corrected by making a point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the matter can be corrected by making a point of order.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, is not the only way in which such a statement can be made, to first obtain unanimous consent to make a statement?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. And then if he gets unanimous consent, he can say what he desires to. Unless he gets the floor in that way, he is out of order. Is not that true?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands it.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly aware of the past custom and practices of the House. I agree with what the gentleman from Missouri has said to the effect that this is a rather unusual procedure. I have been making these announcements because they have been made here heretofore. I really thought that very few minutes' time would be consumed not only in making the announcement that I make, but in making the announcement that other Members have made. The Republican whip has been making similar announcements. I admit that the gentleman from Missouri is correct in his interpretation of the rule and the past practice of the House.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Would it not be better form if gentlemen want to have their positions stated, to have the names submitted to the desk here and included in the RECORD without their taking up the time in making the announcement?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not controvert that; but I merely rose to say what I have said in explanation of what I did awhile ago.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of the time consumed. That is immaterial. It is a matter of maintaining the integrity of the proceedings of the House and protecting the rights of absent Members. It is the custom, as everyone knows, for the clerks at the pair desk to pair every Member who does not vote, whether he asks to be paired or not. All Members who do not answer on roll call are paired without consulting their wishes or inquiring as to their attitude on the question on which the vote is taken. After a Member is so paired, if announcement is made as to how the Member with whom he is paired would have voted if present, he is thereby placed on record on the other side of the question. The possibilities of such a situation are at once apparent.

Mr. BACON. Is there a specific rule of the House against it, or is it the practice of the House? Is it contrary to the rules or to the practice of the House?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Both. The rules do not provide for it and the practice of the House does not permit it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the rule:

Upon every roll call the names of the Members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, in which case the name of the State shall be added; and if there be two such Members from the same State, the whole name shall be called, and after the roll has been called once, the Clerk will call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair unless the Member's name has been noted under clause 3 of this rule.

Clause 3 of the rule is the provision for an automatic roll call.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL MONDAY

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. We are agreeable, of course, to adjourning over until Monday. Can the gentleman give us any information as to what the program on Monday will be?

Mr. BYRNS. I know of nothing except the farm-relief bill, which I understand probably will be passed by the Senate today. If that is so, it would be the expectation of the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to call it up on Monday and ask unanimous consent that it be sent to conference.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There are no suspensions that the gentleman knows of?

The SPEAKER. It is not suspension day.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There are several gentlemen who would like to talk under general debate, and I am wondering if the gentleman has given any thought to that.

Mr. BYRNS. If we have no further business other than I have mentioned, I do not think the House will object. Of course, that is a question for unanimous consent.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course, the House may resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, that is a question of unanimous consent for the House. I assume there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that he was in error in the previous announcement. Monday is suspension day.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Did I understand the Chair to say Monday is suspension day?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Are there any suspensions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of none.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, was my request for adjournment over until Monday agreed to?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the request. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next?

There was no objection.

SHALL SILVER PRESERVE OR PAPER DESTROY THE GOLD STANDARD?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, while there are doubtless many contributing factors to our present unhappy state, such as tariffs, wars, excessive armaments, the dislocation of capital through machine production, and international debts, the conviction that our monetary system is largely at fault is so prevalent that we will not willingly suffer it to continue unchanged.

The measures so far adopted by Congress have centered about two ideas: First, to force more rapid circulation of the money already in existence; and, second, to expand credit. To accomplish the first our Federal Reserve bank made heavy purchases of Government bonds; the public-building program was radically enlarged; great expenditures for charitable relief have been made, and now we are engaged in reforestation and other desirable but not necessary projects. All of these measures may have done some good; it is hoped that they will work no permanent harm.

Our second line of effort has been to force the expansion of credit. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the home-loan bank, the farm-mortgage refinancing bill, and our recent law authorizing the Federal Reserve bank to accept as a basis for the issuance of currency almost anything in the nature of an indebtedness. In their turn each has been hailed with loud acclaim but for some reason they have not produced the desired result. They have not started the factories to work; they have not increased the price of farm produce; they have not restored purchasing power. The new issue of Federal Reserve bank notes has received practically no use.

While this is all very disappointing, it is not difficult to understand. A country whose National, State, and private debts exceed the whole national wealth hardly needs an increase of indebtedness. Manifestly, it needs a radical decrease of indebtedness or an increase in wealth, either real or fictitious, by reducing the units of monetary measure. Until we get rid of these debts in some way, that confidence in the future which is necessary to trade can never be established. A manufacturer will not sell to a purchaser whom he suspects of being heavily in debt. An honest purchaser will not buy when he doubts his own capacity to pay. Since our debts exceed our wealth, manifestly it is impossible to liquidate those debts from capital. They are now and will remain a lien on future earning capacity. As long as our earnings must be largely dedicated to paying interest and taxes, they cannot be used to purchase the produce of our factories and farms. As long as this great pall of debt hangs over us, a restoration of purchasing power and of vital and necessary confidence is impossible.

This loss of confidence has driven men to seek to convert their wealth into money and then to hoard. They no longer desire the ownership of commodities; they seek only the possession of money. This is largely responsible for the destruction of commodity prices and the enhancement of the value of gold. Another important factor in the unexampled increase in the value of gold has been the demonetization of silver throughout the European possessions in Asia. It is as impossible to compel a river to flow uphill as to liquidate these debts with commodities at their present price level.

There are two ways by which these debts can be escaped: First, by bankruptcy; and, second, by an artificial manipulation of the monetary unit. During the last 3 years we have given bankruptcy a very thorough trial. Outside of historical periods of war, pestilence, and famine, the last 3 years probably stand alone for the suffering, destruction, and heartaches they have produced.

Yet as we have slowly and painfully reduced our debts by endless bankruptcies, our Nation, the States, and smaller units have been forced to expand credit and increase indebtedness to care for our needy. At the end of 3 years we are now probably as heavily burdened by debts as in 1929, in spite of all our bankruptcies. With the constant shrinking of the price level, furthermore, these debts are daily growing more onerous.

Those mortgagees, bondholders, and money hoarders who do not wish to see the value of their possessions reduced by a change of the monetary unit, and who favor a continuance of deflation by bankruptcy, can expect either a continuance of the experience of the last 3 years for an indefinite period or a social upheaval which at one stroke will wipe out all present values. The experiences of France and Russia show us that human beings will not needlessly endure suffering interminably.

Whatever other remedies may also be needed, a monetary change also is imperative. It is the only way out.

Shall we, under our constitutional power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, increase the value of the gold ounce and thus reduce the amount of gold in a dollar? This will enable us to issue more dollars with the same gold reserve, and enable the debtor to pay his debts with dollars of smaller value. It will enable the owner of commodities to receive more dollars for those commodities and thus facilitate the paying of debts.

This has many obvious advantages which have been ably presented by the so-called "Committee for the Nation." But it has many disadvantages. It would needlessly enhance the value of gold of which the United States and its most desirable future markets produce very little, i.e., the Orient and North and South America. Half of the world's gold production comes from Africa, owned by our European competitors. This step would mean partial repudiation of all our National and State bonds, now payable in gold coin of present weight and fineness. We would then have no complaint against Russia, France, and other nations who hold their word apparently of little value. It would destroy confidence in our bonds and militate against the price of future issues.

At one great jump it would establish us on a fixed, higher price level with the inevitable exploitation of labor during the lag in production. When this level is reached, we would immediately begin another industrial cycle which would reproduce our present situation and in a few years necessitate another inflation of gold, another shaking of confidence, another exploitation of labor. In brief the measure is a palliative, an anodyne, not a remedy.

Shall we let the Bureau of Engraving print us into prosperity? Many nations have done so before. It was always a glorious experience while it lasted. But each new issue in the past has only necessitated a larger one later. Under Gresham's law our sound money would soon disappear either in hiding or by export, and our international trade, after the first boom, would almost vanish. Our paper money would shrink in value as did our greenbacks and continental money; and when the inevitable reckoning comes, when we painfully climb back to specie payment as we must, we will be repaying 100-cent dollars for paper ones which yielded us 30-cent value or less at the time of issue. The mortgagor, bondholder, and hoarder will then receive his compensation with compound usury and the inflationary spree will leave the rest of us with the inevitable headache.

Shall we adopt a monetary system with a varying gold reserve depending on the commodity price index, the so-called "pneumatic, rubber, nonskid dollar"? It sounds all right in a pamphlet of propaganda. It is endorsed by respectable authority. But would you wish to sign a lease for a period of years not knowing whether your rental was to be paid in dollars worth 50 or 150 cents? Would international transactions be on a healthy basis? In short, would people enter into contracts at all based upon such a dollar as a consideration? It is far more probable that we would enter an era of bartering so many grains of gold for a quantity of service or commodities.

What other course is open? Manifestly we wish to escape both from our present evils and from such types of inflation. To do so we must protect and conserve the gold standard. We must obtain reasonable inflation sufficient to supply our present needs and to produce future relief. An inflation with an inescapable control based not upon the whim of governmental officials and politicians but upon the producible quantity of a rare metal.

When we are tinkering with money let us try as few innovations as possible. Let us use a medium to which practically all the world, civilized and partly civilized for ages past, has been familiar. When we must experiment let us first try those measures which, if they fail, will cause no damage. Let us use a medium which will improve and not cripple our international trade; a medium which will benefit us and our own best markets, not those of our competitors.

Such a proposal is contained in a bill now before this House. It provides for the use of silver as an auxiliary metal in our monetary reserve. On the security of this silver, paper currency is to be issued redeemable by the quantity of silver bullion which the paper currency could purchase on the market at the time of redemption. There is no attempt at a resurrection of the impossible 16 to 1 ratio of redemption. To attempt to fix, by law, a ratio controlled alone by supply and demand is as useless as to control appetite by law or regulate the ratio of the diameter to the circumference of a circle by legislative fiat.

From the discovery of America to the present time the actual production ratio of silver to gold is approximately 13 to 1, but the relative demand for these metals in the arts and trade is a far different matter. Under Alexander Hamilton we established a legal ratio of 15 to 1 and immediately discovered our mistake when France adopted 15½ to 1, and gathered to herself our gold. If we really desire an expanding and contracting monetary system controlled by a bimetallic base, let us let the market price of silver be the elastic medium.

A glance at a graph of price levels since 1900 will clearly show that silver has fluctuated in remarkable unison with all commodity prices. Why not use this normal condition to expand and contract currency to procure a commodity price level controlled by the supply and demand of the commodity affected, not controlled, as now, largely by the supply and demand of the monetary measure? When prices are low silver will be cheap. Under the Fiesinger bill, H.R. 1577, it will then be purchased in large quantities and currency issued. This will relieve the demand on gold, and prices in general along with silver will rise. When such a price level is reached, as fairly to measure the relation between the commodity supply and demand, silver purchases will cease, or silver may even be sold at the enhanced price. Then if a price decline occurs, produced by monetary shortage, silver will be repurchased and normal trade facilities restored.

If this experiment fails, we can suffer no loss, our gold reserves will not be disturbed, our bonds and national credit preserved. Silver is now so low in price that, should we desire to abandon the experiment and sell our supply, the loss will be negligible, if any. We will have no disastrous losses to suffer, such as we experienced in redeeming our Revolutionary currency and our greenbacks. We will have a constant stable quantity of gold back of every dollar, or the gold value in silver. No rubber pneumatic nonskid dollar here.

We can afford to settle our troublesome war debts by accepting silver from our European allies, if necessary, at a price above the market because our use of silver as money will automatically enhance its price. We will lose nothing and our allies will receive an appreciable reduction in their debt. They cannot pay us in gold. We will not accept their commodities. Through their possessions in Asia they control large quantities of silver. Why not accept this obvious solution of a most puzzling problem?

Our international trade will be immediately stimulated. For centuries silver has been the accepted money in the Orient. No one knows the quantity of the metal hoarded by these people. Yet, with the fall of silver prices, they cannot pay for our cotton, wheat, and manufactured goods. Restore the price of silver and our farm problem, growing largely out of the closing of their market, will be materially improved.

Eighty-five percent of the world's silver is produced in North and South America, our neighbors, friends, and natural market. Why not enhance the value of this commodity and enrich our own customers instead of revaluing gold to the undeserved enrichment of those who for years through the manipulation of gold exchange have exploited us?

But we are told that we should not take this step until we receive the sanction of an international conference. Our experience with international conferences in general is that the only agreements arrived at are either unfavorable to us, or if not, they are promptly repudiated.

We have attempted earnestly in the past to have a world agreement on silver, but those nations who controlled gold, who appreciated the advantage of manipulating exchange, would have nothing to do with silver, which did not yield so readily to manipulation. We have been pushed off with many promises; but when the time for conference arrived, there was no one present. What possible advantage can we gain by waiting for a renewal of these disappointments?

We are told that without such a conference the United States will be flooded with silver. Nothing could be less worthy of fear. In the first place, 70 percent of the world's production of silver is a byproduct of copper, lead, and zinc mining. It is controlled by the quantities of these produced. Also in the whole world there is approximately 7,000,000,000 ounces of silver. If we got it all at present prices, we could issue less than $3,000,000,000. If the price of silver would rise to its proper place, at about four times its present price, we should have discontinued its purchase long before. There is not a remote possibility of the Orient's releasing even a large portion of its silver when it assumes greater value as a monetary agency.

In short, the whole thing is an experiment backed by the successful experience of mankind for centuries past. Its very trial will have a beneficial effect upon the mental attitude of the people of the world. If it fails, it will entail no loss; if it succeeds, it will enrich us and our friends, not our competitors and exploiters. It will stimulate foreign trade; it will facilitate the liquidation of international debts. It will preserve our word and our credit. It will stabilize gold as money and destroy it as our instrumentality of robbery and oppression.

INVESTIGATION OF MOTION-PICTURE INDUSTRY

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (H.Res. 121, Rept. No. 58), for printing under the rules:

House Resolution 121

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of House Resolution 95, and all points of order against said resolution shall be considered as waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Rules, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution to its adoption or rejection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] may address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to take just a few moments to correct a false inference that has gone forth through a certain magazine in this country concerning the stand of my State of Iowa upon the question of alcohol-blend gasoline.

I notice in a recent copy of the Texaco Star, published during the months of March and April, a statement to the effect that the legislature of my State had gone on record as opposed to a 10-percent blend bill. That statement is true, but the inference gathered from it is false. I want to condemn the oil companies, corporations, and trusts who are in opposition to such relief legislation for the benefit of the American farmer for taking such an attitude and drawing such a conclusion from the action of the Iowa Legislature on that measure.

The reason my legislature opposed the passage of that 10 percent bill was that the members feared the surrounding States would not pass a similar type of legislation. They were, generally speaking, in favor of such form of legislation. I happen to be, through my membership in that body during two sessions, personally acquainted with almost every man and woman in the house and senate, and I know that to be a fact.

I have with me documentary evidence of the fact. I have one of the original enrolled copies of a joint resolution adopted by the house and senate of the State of Iowa asking the Congress of the United States to take some action along the line of legislation that will encourage the use of a 10 percent alcohol blend of gasoline. I have taken just this few minutes of your time to point out that certain trusts, monopolies, and oil interests in this country are endeavoring to mislead the Congress of the United States, through the distribution of this magazine into your offices, concerning the stand which my State has taken upon that legislation, that I personally believe will be of material benefit to the farmers of this country.

I will have more remarks to make upon that subject later. I thank you very much. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PIERCE, at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Oregon, on account of serious illness.

To Mr. FERNANDEZ, for 1 week, on account of important official business.

To Mr. WALTER, at the request of Mr. HAINES, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. KEE, for several days, on account of important business.

PREMIER MACDONALD'S ADDRESS AT PILGRIM DINNER—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech made by Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald before the Pilgrim Society in New York City.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Premier J. Ramsay MacDonald before the Pilgrims Society, at New York City, Wednesday, April 26, 1933:

Mr. President, Your Excellency, and gentlemen, I have been introduced to you tonight in words all too warm in their praise, and you have responded with a hearty hospitality which, though very striking, is, I must say, only the ending of a series of welcomes which the warm-hearted American people have shown me since I landed on your shores at the end of last week.

The Pilgrims exist for one purpose and for one purpose only; that is to keep hands stretched across the Atlantic. Ah, my friends, I wonder if even you can estimate to its full value what that means.

May I venture to say this, that at this moment, and, so far as one can speak, for many and many a year to come, no greater blessing can come upon the nations of this world than that Great Britain and America should remain in affectionate relationships.

Alliances—I do not want them, nor do you. An alliance is a bargain. Of what use is a bargain except for hampering purposes when hearts are beating in harmony, when minds are looking to the same goal, and when the determination of the best is guiding feet toward that goal?

COOPERATION OF FREE NATIONS

That is the cooperation I want—the cooperation of free nations; the cooperation of peoples who can talk candidly to each other; the combination of sums when common respect and common confidence determine a common policy.

Anglo-American relations, I hope, will always be that, because that to you, to us, and to the world at large is going to yield the most precious results.

I would like to take this opportunity on behalf of my daughter and myself to send a parting message of good will to the American folks, the American folks who speak our language, who are inspired by geniuses that both of us can claim as ours—Shakespeare, Milton—a great political philosophy of liberty, independence which you may have asserted against us, and whilst you took it we blessed you for the service you did to us.

Runnymede—what shall I say, Bunker Hill?—shall I think of them as being engraven side by side in the annals of the American people and in the annals of the British people who have remained at home?

What a precious example, lifting us both out of a narrow nationalism and enabling us to breathe the genial and the generous air of free men and free women, inspired by moral ideals which they desire to apply to the solution of the practical problems of life.

OLD AND FIRM FRIEND

When I arrived at the White House I shook hands with a host who happened to be your President, as a guest who happened to be the Prime Minister of Great Britain. When I left this morning I shook hands with a host and a President who, in the brief interval of a long week-end, had come to be regarded by me as an old and firm friend.

Your President hinted at the more personal contact and diplomacy. The world will never be able to do without that now. We were all very stilted and dignified gentlemen who never could regard ourselves as being out of uniform. Does it surpass the seas—personal handshakings—a determination to put difficulties in the middle of a table and to look at them all around in conversation using all the power of personality to help both sides out of the entanglements?

Personal confidence, personal contact of that character, has become absolutely essential if we are to successfully meet the intricate problems that now become the great problems of the world.

Today, how many are the influences of destruction? How many mouths whisper into your ears stories, ideas, suggestions, that make for disruption? You and I, my friends, you, the Pilgrims Society, as one who occupies some little position, have to lay our heads together, have to lay our minds together, have to lay our consciences together, to repeal those influences of disruption and to put into their place influences of cooperation and mutual helpfulness.

NOT TO BE SOLVED IN A DAY

The business that has brought us together on this occasion is a very difficult business. We can talk quite clearly, but it is not going to be solved in a day.

Your President was perfectly right in suggesting to you that this is not one of the ordinary crises that nations go through. I am not at all sure, my friends, but that when you and I are dust and when our grandchildren and our great-grandchildren look back upon these days through which we are living and striving to straighten out, it will not be an old chapter in our mutual histories that will be taken down by them to read of that story. It will be the beginning of an old and a new volume all together. The world's great age begins anew.

Ah, how much you and I hope that those grandchildren and great-grandchildren of ours can add to what the golden years have returned. But whether that may be so or not, there we are—hosts and guests—pledged, I believe, pledged as deeply as honest men can pledge themselves, that by the blessing of God and by our use of our own courage and common sense, our great-grandchildren will be able to add that line about the returning golden age. It is an old problem.

It is as old as the world. It is a problem of how to keep cupboards full. It is the old problem of how human beings with a mind that can think, with a conscience that can pass judgment on what is right and what is wrong, how such high forms of creation may be able to keep peacefully evolving into greater and greater liberty, and higher and higher happiness. If they are thwarted, what can happen?

SOCIETY IS A FAMILY

The human being who is educated, and who has a keen sense of right and wrong, who can feel grievances, and by the very fact that he feels grievances he is differentiated from the brute creation—we must take him as our partner, we must make him feel that society is a family and that the rules of the family hold good there. We must ask him to give his services.

The society of the future is to be no place for loafers. The society of the future is to be no place for men and women who enjoy without giving service. But the society of the future must provide that men and women who are anxious to give service which will entitle them to an honest and an honorable living—the society of the future must give them the opportunity to do that service. That is the problem we are up against today.

And again, as your President said, it is not a national problem. If I had had time to go out to the West, to have talked, say, to your farmers, your farmers puzzled, with their hearts overcast with gloom because when the harvest ripens and is gathered in it gives them no equivalent; your farmers, facing nature closer than any of us do, find there is no mistake with nature; that the seasons follow each other as God provided; that the corn sprouts; that it gets into ear; that the ear ripens and that the threshing follows; and nevertheless he looks upon a home not happy in prosperity but full of distress.

If I had gone to him, what could I have said to him? I could have said, "My friend, come to Lancashire with me, come to Yorkshire with me where the miners are, and every problem that you have is precisely the same as the problem that we are facing there."

America, one of the things that your President and I mused over in those hours after the old day had gone and the new day had already been born—one of the things that we mused most over was that your problems are our problems. So far as that is concerned, there might have been no Atlantic at all, and no American Revolution, in that we are a family, whether you like it or not.

It is therefore an international problem. It is not an accident. What has been happening to give you problems of enormous unemployment has been happening with us, has been happening with France, has been happening with Germany, and so on. And what has brought me to America at the present moment is to discuss with the President as to how American experience, American brains and intelligence, and American business capacity could join with ours and try to make our people happier, better, and put more sunshine and happiness and peace into their lives.

We want to turn our backs upon the past. We have had our wars, we have had our waste, we have had our escapades. I hope your children will be generous in their judgments upon us.

Turn our backs upon them. Let us look to the future, and when we meet in this international economic conference, which I hope will be very soon then, my friends, we don't sit at opposite sides of a table.

I want you to sit at the same side of the table with us and others, other enlightened nations, other nations that do appreciate their duty to the individual, and with courage and yet with reason and common sense, but with courage, face those problems and produce constructive proposals for overcoming them.

THINGS HAVE DETERIORATED

There is another great question. I was here before and I talked to you about it. It is not solved yet. The mills of the gods grind slowly. One of the burdens, I think, that has been put upon our backs is to have a patience, steadiness, and a loyalty to the good that will enable us not to get impatient when the mills of the gods do grind slowly.

We also talked about disarmament.

Well, things have deteriorated a little, I think, since I was here 4 years ago—not because of what you have done and not because of what we have done.

What I say to you now is this: Keep the faith—keep the faith—we shall win, you and we. Those declarations we made, those professions that we made, those aims that we put before us to secure peace on this earth and an abiding good will to all men—they will win. And there is no reason why we should not see that victory during our own lifetime.

I do not know who invented the expression "A war to end war." I would like to speak very plainly, even if you will accuse me of being rude. But whoever invented that was a fool.

The one certain thing about war is that it makes another one equally certain. In all peace treaties that are imposed upon the vanquished there is a secret clause. Statesmen may say there is not. There is, although the statesmen have never seen it.

The secret clause is the date of the next war. That is inevitable unless the nations of broad, generous minds—deep, penetrating minds that see the tooth lying glittering away below the surface—use the opportunity of a militarist peace to create a spiritual peace. And that is what we are engaged in trying to do at the present moment.

My friends, the thought of all these things is good. It is good to us all that we should take counsel together. Even if it brought us no benefit except this: That friendship, the most precious thing between individuals, is also the most precious thing between nations. It broadens, it lightens. It deepens the happiness of life. To feel secure sitting under your own fig trees—none daring to make you afraid—isn't that the foundation of real life, of worship, and of all the wonderful things that we have inherited by the simple reason of our birth and our appearance of this earth?

TIES OF FRIENDSHIP VERSUS ALLIANCES

But it is more than that. It is a very good thing, as I have hinted, for all the other nations of the earth that we, too, not in the alliances—I repeat it—not bound together by documents that are written and sealed and filed at the League of Nations, or kept in secret in our Foreign Offices. Not that sort of thing. That belongs to the past, which has always failed to carry out the spirit of those documents.

Let's put documents on one side. Let us put signatures on one side. Let us substitute for them the less tangible but the more real friendship based upon a complete understanding of each other, a friendship which will allow a quarrel, a friendship which will allow a difference of opinion, a friendship which will not be broken if we were to vote against each other in the League of Nations, a friendship that suffers long and is kind because it is based upon a complete understanding which enables us to do just like individuals do—look into each other's eyes, express sentiments hard and honest and cruel as any Scotsman can—and immediately afterward show by a merry twinkle in the eye and a smile that almost twinkles at the edges of one's mouth that the moment of wrath has passed and that the sun is shining upon our relationships again. That is my idea of an Anglo-American friendship and cooperation.

My friends, I am awfully sorry to leave you, but it reminds me of a story. I think I will venture it.

There was a fellow countryman of mine who, like so many of my fellow clansmen, was about to pass under the uncongenial hands of the public executioner. And Dougall spent the last night in jail playing cards with his jailers.

When the morning came, Dougall was still laying down his cards. The knock came on the door, and Dougall was informed that the time had come. And Dougall said, "Go away. Let me finish my game." Dougall was told it was impossible, and Dougall, rising up like a gentleman, apologized to his partners in the card game that he was not able to finish the game, and the words he used were—"Time awaits me."

I say to you, "The ship awaits me."

My operation is not so tragic as the operation that my fellow countryman was about to undergo, but I am inclined almost to use his language, which expresses my great regret that I have to leave you whilst the night is still young. It is only just 10, but I have to turn my back upon you, and when I awaken tomorrow morning I shall be far out at sea.

But, my friends, do believe me when I say this—when I give you assurance of this—I may be able to come back, or I may not. Who can read what is written upon those scrolls kept in the dark? But should I come back or should I not—and I speak for my daughter as well—we shall never forget the quiet, the genial, the so touchingly eloquent welcome that we got in the White House from your President and right along the way down to the pleasant, smiling-faced girl who stood on the pavement to wave us a god-speed as we went past—that, finished up by this very distinguished company, this very representative company, this company which is determined to give us a good send-off and show us how generous, how good, and how helpful is the heart of the American people. Thank you very much.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p.m.) the House, pursuant to its order, adjourned until Monday, May 1, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

29. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a bill to authorize credit in the accounts of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. SABATH: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 121. Resolution providing for the consideration of House Resolution 95; without amendment (Rept. No. 58). Referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2890) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Ashton; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H.R. 5314) granting an increase of pension to Clarene E. Orr; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GRANFIELD: A bill (H.R. 5326) to authorize the erection of an addition to the existing Veterans' Administration hospital plant no. 95, at Northampton, Mass., and to authorize the appropriation therefor; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5327) to sell the present post-office site and building at Springfield, Mass.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5328) providing that 100 percent of the annual gross receipts, including money-order fees, be credited for the annual classification of post offices; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H.R. 5329) creating the St. Lawrence Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdensburg, N.Y.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. IGLESIAS: A bill (H.R. 5330) to amend the act of March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. LLOYD: A bill (H.R. 5331) to provide a separate promotion list for the Judge Advocate General's Department of the Army, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin: A bill (H.R. 5332) to establish minimum-wage requirements for workers employed in the production or manufacture of articles shipped, transported, or delivered in interstate or foreign commerce; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. DIRKSEN: A bill (H.R. 5333) to provide for the construction of a post-office building and courthouse at Peoria, Ill.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MOREHEAD: A bill (H.R. 5334) to amend the third clause of section 14 of the act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. 359; U.S.C., title 39, sec. 226); to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. WITHROW: Joint Resolution (H.J.Res. 166) directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate and report to the Senate and to the House of Representatives the cause or causes for the high prices of agricultural implements and machinery; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BURKE of California: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 167) awarding Distinguished Service Medals to Tony Siminoff, Oliver F. Rominger, and Robert E. Beck, veterans of the Philippine insurrection; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CELLER (by request): Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 168) to prevent interstate commerce in certain commodities and articles produced or manufactured in industrial activities and under conditions which produce unfair competition and restraints of trade and are injurious to the general welfare, and to regulate interstate transportation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLGOOD: A bill (H.R. 5335) granting a pension to Andrew J. Watts; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROWN of Michigan: A bill (H.R. 5336) for the relief of Bridget Patton; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRUNNER: A bill (H.R. 5337) for the relief of Michael Bello; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5338) granting insurance payments to Hugh H. Newell; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska: A bill (H.R. 5339) for the relief of Era A. Ryan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DOCKWEILER: A bill (H.R. 5340) for the relief of Jacob Kaufman; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5341) for the relief of Harrison Brainard, alias Harry White; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5342) granting a pension to Julia C. Messamore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5343) granting a pension to Dell V. Trisler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRANFIELD: A bill (H.R. 5344) granting a franking privilege to Grace G. Coolidge; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5345) for the relief of George A. G. Dearborn; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5346) for the relief of John E. Springer; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5347) for the relief of Myles McDonagh; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5348) granting a pension to Mary R. Currier; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5349) for the relief of Clara Easter; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5350) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Thomas Lougharan to the position and rank of first-class sergeant in the Army of the United States and immediately retire him with the rank and pay of a first-class sergeant; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5351) for the relief of Robert Francis Connell; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5352) granting a pension to Angele Dragon; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5353) authorizing the President to order Charles Southgate, Jr., before a retiring board for a hearing of his case, and upon the findings of such board to determine whether or not he be placed on the retired list with the rank and pay held by him at the time of his discharge; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HART: A bill (H.R. 5354) for the relief of the estate of George H. Mertz, deceased, of Saginaw, Mich.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H.R. 5355) for the relief of Lillie Krogh; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LLOYD: A bill (H.R. 5356) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to loan to the city of Olympia, State of Washington, a bronze tablet on the U. S. cruiser Olympia; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. McREYNOLDS: A bill (H.R. 5357) for the relief of Alice M. A. Damm; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PEYSER: A bill (H.R. 5358) for the relief of the Sultzbach Clothing Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H.R. 5359) granting a pension to Fannie Drain; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5360) granting a pension to Annie Hankal; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5361) granting a pension to Charlie Jones; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

775. By Mr. ANDREWS of New York: Resolution of Board of Supervisors of Erie County, N.Y., favoring passage of bill to aid small-home owners; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

776. Also, petition of judges and police executives of Erie County, N.Y., favoring passage of House bill 8378; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

777. Also, resolution of Niagara County (N.Y.) Committee of the American Legion, vigorously opposing any movement favoring recognition of Soviet Russia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

778. Also, resolution of Niagara County (N.Y.) committee of the American Legion, protesting any cut of Regular Army personnel or elimination of National Guard or citizens' military training camps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

779. Also, resolution of Niagara County (N.Y.) committee of the American Legion, favoring repromulgation of Executive order of March 2, 1929, with reference to civil-service status of veterans; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

780. Also, resolution of Niagara County (N.Y.) committee of the American Legion, protesting against discontinuance of Veterans' Administration office at Buffalo, N.Y.; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

781. By Mr. BAKEWELL: Petition of sundry citizens of the State of Connecticut, protesting against the passage of the plan for involuntary severance from the Federal service of all employees of 30 years of service; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

782. By Mr. BEITER: Petition of Veterans' Association of the Seventy-fourth Infantry, New York National Guard, Buffalo, N.Y., urging appropriation for attendance of the National Guard in armory drills and summer camp; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

783. Also, petition of George F. Lamm Post, No. 622, Auxiliary, the American Legion, Williamsville, N.Y., protesting against the recognition of communistic Russia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

784. By Mr. CRAVENS: Petition of Fayetteville Chamber of Commerce, Fayetteville, and Frank H. Fredeman, president Federation of Federal Employees, Little Rock, Ark., protesting against the proposed $34,000,000 additional cut in Veterans' Administration appropriations; to the Committee on Appropriations.

785. Also, petition of C. A. Lick, president Weldon, Williams & Lick, Fort Smith, Ark., protesting against passage of Black bill, S. 158; to the Committee on Labor.

786. Also, petition of Local Union No. 2110, United Mine Workers of America, endorsing Black bill, S. 158; to the Committee on Labor.

787. By Mr. GOODWIN: Petition of Leon S. Miroff, Sol. Glazer, S. Friedman, Samuel Zinnar, Daniel Harris, and some 263 other residents of Sullivan County, N.Y., urging me to raise my voice in Congress in protest against the barbarities visited by the Hitler regime upon the Jews in Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

788. By Mr. JAMES: Resolution of the City Commission of the City of Ironwood, Mich., heartily endorsing House bill 4801 to release the States, Territories, municipalities, and political subdivisions from the obligation to repay relief funds received under title I of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

789. By Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: Resolutions from the Central Labor Political Committee of Duluth, Minn., memorializing Congress to issue money and establish the value thereof; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

790. Also, resolution from Farmers Educational and Co-operative Union of America, supporting relief for the farmers; to the Committee on Agriculture.

791. Also, resolutions commending the Swank-Thomas and Wheeler silver bills; to the Committee on Agriculture.

792. Also, petition of farmers and citizens of Ghent, Minn., requesting the use of petroleum products to be blended with ethyl alcohol; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

793. Also, resolution from Post No. 228 of Waseca, Minn., urging economy in the mail lines; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

794. By Mr. KENNEY: Petition of American Legion, Department of New Jersey, that the time is ripe when the building of our Navy to treaty strength will greatly strengthen our efforts to forward the cause of peace in every council of the Nation in which we take part; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

795. Also, petition of the American Legion, Department of New Jersey, by the executive committee, this 22d day of April 1933, that the New Jersey Senators and Congressmen be urged to use every possible effort to have the Lakehurst Naval Air Station retained as a lighter-than-air base, and that the former Los Angeles be recommissioned and used as a training ship for enlarging the personnel for this branch of our defensive forces; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

796. Also, petition of the American Legion, Department of New Jersey, opposing any reduction in the present personnel of our armed forces and any curtailment in the operation of our armed forces, as the American Legion feels that our armed forces even now are not adequate; and that the American Legion of New Jersey use every effort to oppose any further cut in the personnel of our armed forces or in the operation of said armed forces, and to oppose strenuously the elimination or curtailment of the citizens' military training camps and Reserve Officers' Training Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

797. Also, petition of the Elizabeth Parcells Devoe Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, Leonia, N.J., sending to the White House their urgent prayer to build up, rather than further reduce, the existing defense forces of training and equipment for the safety of our Nation, its people, and the Government itself; to the Committee on Appropriations.

798. By Mr. LESINSKI: Petition of banking commissioners and banking associations' officials and representatives of 14 States, urging fair and sound banking legislation for the purpose of strengthening banking in general; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

799. Also, petition of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, urging Federal insurance of bank deposits in National and State banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

800. By Mr. LEWIS of Colorado: Resolution of the Twentieth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, requesting that the Congress of the United States make the appropriations for the mineral-leasing division of the Geological Survey sufficient to enable the division to function efficiently for the protection of the oil, gas, coal, and nonmetallic mineral resources of the Western States; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

801. By Mr. LUDLOW: Petition of residents of Indianapolis, Ind., opposing compulsory 30-year retirement from the Government service; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

802. By Mr. McFARLANE: Petition of Pat Carrigan Post, No. 120, American Legion, Wichita Falls, Tex., urging the Congress of the United States to enact into law at once the Patman bill for immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

803. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of Brooklyn Real Estate Board, Brooklyn, N.Y., favoring the passage of the home-mortgage refinancing legislation, with an amendment of $20,000, be made on homes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

804. Also, petition of Edward Quittner, New Rochelle, N.Y., favoring the Sirovich resolution, for an investigation of the motion-picture industry; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

805. By Mr. SUTPHIN: Petition adopted by the American Legion, Department of New Jersey, praying for the continuance of the naval air station at Lakehurst, N. J.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

806. Also, petition adopted by the American Legion, Department of New Jersey, advocating building of our Navy to treaty strength for the purpose of forwarding the cause of peace; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

807. Also, petition adopted by the American Legion, Department of New Jersey, urging the maintenance of a strong national defense; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

808. Also, petition adopted by the New Jersey State Association of Postal Supervisors, protesting against an amendment to the Retirement Act, attached as a rider to the independent offices appropriation bill, demanding compulsory retirement of certain employees; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 1, 1933

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D.D., offered the following prayer:

In the midst of the beauty of this, another day, give us thankful hearts, O loving Heavenly Father, that as we hold within our grasp the reins of many complicated tasks we may bring to our work a deepened interest, vibrant with the very joy of life. Upon our Nation, our President, Vice President, the Members of Congress, and all who share in the responsibility of government, bestow Thy blessing, and to those among us so recently overborne with sorrow vouchsafe the abundance of Thy peace and holy comfort.

Grant to each one of us here that, seeing the spirits of the moments yet unborn, we may stand sponsor for each moment as it comes, holding it in reverent hands for baptism at the sacred font of God. We ask it all in the name and for the sake of Him who, in redeeming the time of life's little day, revealed to us the glory of Thy eternal morning, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 5240) to provide emergency relief with respect to home-mortgage indebtedness, to refinance home mortgages, to extend relief to the owners of homes occupied by them and who are unable to amortize their debt elsewhere, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, to increase the market for obligations of the United States, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (S.J.Res. 13) authorizing the Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, to release claims of the United States upon certain assets of the Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California and others in connection with collections upon a certain judgment in favor of the United States against the Pan American Petroleum Co. heretofore duly entered, and it was signed by the Vice President.

THE JOURNAL

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the Journal. The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Friday, April 28, when, on motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Keyes	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	King	Robinson, Ark.
Austin	Costigan	La Follette	Robinson, Ind.
Bachman	Couzens	Logan	Russell
Bankhead	Cutting	Loung	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	McAdoo	Shipstead
Barkley	Dill	McCarran	Smith
Black	Duffy	McGill	Steiwer
Bone	Erickson	McKellar	Stephens
Borah	Fess	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bratton	Fletcher	Metcalf	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Frazier	Murphy	Townsend
Bulkeley	Glass	Neely	Trammell
Bulow	Goldsborough	Norbeck	Tydings
Byrd	Gore	Norris	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Nye	Van Nuys
Capper	Harrison	Overton	Wagner
Caraway	Hayden	Patterson	Walcott
Carey	Johnson	Pittman	Walsh
Clark	Kean	Pope	Wheeler
Connally	Kendrick	Reed	White

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is necessarily detained from the Senate. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. REED. I wish again to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DAVIS] on account of illness.

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. OVERTON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. LONG] is necessarily detained from the Senate. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF MUSCLE SHOALS PROPERTY

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, April 28, 1933.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D.C.

SIR: I have just noticed the following part of an amendment to S. 1272, current session, introduced on the 17th instant by Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska. The bill deals with the Tennessee Valley development:

"And provided further, That the President is hereby expressly authorized to select attorneys and assistants for the purpose of making any investigation he may deem proper to ascertain whether, in the control and management of Dam No. 2, or any other dam or property owned by the Government in the Tennessee River Basin, or in the authorization of any improvement therein, there has been any undue or unfair advantage given to private persons, partnerships, or corporations, by any officials or employees of the Government, or whether, in any such matters, the Government has been injured or unjustly deprived of any of its rights."

Since I am individually responsible for all acts done on the Tennessee River improvement by Federal authority during the past three and a half years, I am well aware of what has been done there. Being conscious of no wrongdoing at all and confident that I have personally and otherwise protected all of the interests of the United States at Muscle Shoals and on the Tennessee at all times, I believe that this amendment does great injustice to deserving and honorable public servants by bringing them in public suspicion and leaving them there at a critical time when their services are needed.

I am unwilling to wait for the investigation that this amendment proposes; it may never happen and will not remedy the harm done. The Senate has able lawyers fully capable of handling this matter, and of saving the Government the hire of lawyers and assistant lawyers.

It seems strange that at this late day that those who have built this Wilson Dam, who have guarded it through 10 years of controversy, who have preserved it in fine condition, free from any incumbrances whatsoever, and who have furnished every scintilla of data on which this much-advertised Tennessee development is based, should now, even though inadvertently, be brought under the suspicion of wrongdoing.

The time to investigate is now. If mud there be to dry out, let it be dried while the fire is hot and I am here to assist. All of the facts of the case should see the light of day, and before any further steps are taken in this matter.

I request an immediate and open investigation of the matter of this amendment by the appropriate committee of the Senate, and an opportunity to be heard.

Respectfully,

LYTLE BROWN,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, at 2 o'clock the Muscle Shoals bill will come before the Senate. The amendment referred to by General Brown is one that will be offered by me during the consideration of the bill. It provides for an investigation by the President of the United States. General Brown is anxious to have the matter investigated by a Senate committee and is fearful of delay.

In anticipation of the adoption of the amendment when it is offered during the consideration of the bill, I am going to ask that the letter be referred to the President of the United States. If the amendment shall not be adopted when reached and debated, I will withdraw the request. Of course, I have no objection to any other plan the Senate may desire to pursue, but General Brown, so far as I know, has not been accused of anything, neither has any other worthy citizen, and he will have ample opportunity, as he suggests, to help in the investigation. I hope he will help.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska to refer the letter to the President of the United States? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPORT OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the secretary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, submitting, pursuant to law, a report of the activities and expenditures of the Corporation for the month of March 1933, together with a statement of loans authorized during that month, showing the name, amount, and rate of interest in each case, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

FUNCTIONS OF THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT (S.DOC. NO. 48)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a report of the functions and activities conducted under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department, the statutory authority therefor, the total annual expenditures thereon, and also a list of employees receiving compensation at the rate of $5,000 or more per annum, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FUNCTIONS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR (S.DOC. NO. 47)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Labor, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a report of the functions and activities conducted under the jurisdiction of the Department of Labor, the statutory authority therefor, the total annual expenditures thereon, and also a list of employees receiving compensation at the rate of $5,000 or more per annum, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FUNCTIONS OF THE TARIFF COMMISSION (S.DOC. NO. 51)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a report as to the functions of the Commission, the statutory authority therefor, and the total annual expenditures thereon, also a list of employees receiving compensation at the rate of $5,000 or more per annum, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed with illustration.

FUNCTIONS OF THE AMERICAN BATTLE MONUMENTS COMMISSION (S.DOC. NO. 50)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the American Battle Monuments Commission, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a report as to the functions and activities of the Commission, the total number of employees, the salaries and wages paid, and other expenditures required for administration and for the field office under the jurisdiction of the Commission, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FUNCTIONS OF EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION (S.DOC. NO. 49)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Chairman of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a report of the functions and activities conducted under the jurisdiction of the Commission, the statutory authority therefor, and the total annual expenditures, also a list of employees receiving compensation at the rate of $5,000 or more per annum, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to pass an act permitting cities, counties, and States to deposit their bonds with the Federal Government in exchange for currency

Whereas the special privilege now enjoyed by banks throughout this country to have the Federal Government issue currency in exchange for its bonds is discriminatory as against cities, counties, and States; and

Whereas this discrimination has the effect of curtailing the cash resources of the various cities, counties, and States throughout this country; and

Whereas if this privilege were extended to cities, counties, and States of this country, it would tend to wipe out for all time the curse of the interest burden of the public debts of such cities, counties, and States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to pass an act permitting cities, counties, and States to deposit their bonds with the Federal Government, and to have the Federal Government issue currency thereon; be it further

Resolved, That a properly certified copy of this resolution be sent to each of the following officials: To the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Chief Clerks of both Houses of Congress, and to each Senator and Representative from this State in the Congress of the United States.

C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, R. A. Sneed, secretary of state of the State of Oklahoma, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true copy of enrolled Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 22 (by Fischl):

A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to provide relief for the oil industry, the farmers, the unemployed, business, and the people generally by providing an adequate tariff or tax on oil that will place the domestic-oil industry on a competitive basis with imported oil as shown by the reports of the Tariff Commission.

The original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of State. Done at the city of Oklahoma City, this 27th day of April A.D. 1933.

[SEAL]

R. A. SNEED, Secretary of State.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 22 (by Fischl)

A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to provide relief for the oil industry, the farmers, the unemployed, business, and the people generally by providing an adequate tariff or tax on oil that will place the domestic-oil industry on a competitive basis with imported oil as shown by the reports of the Tariff Commission

Whereas business generally, not only in Oklahoma and the Southwest, but throughout all the oil-producing States, affecting over 22,000,000 people, has been directly depressed by the long distressed condition of the oil industry, and which depressed condition has now become very serious; and

Whereas excessive importations of foreign oils continue to flow into our country, constantly increasing in volume, until the flood has reached alarming proportions; and

Whereas in the year 1932, in Oklahoma alone the total production of crude oil was over $215,000,000 less than for the year 1929, which tremendous loss would have been saved had there been a tax or a tariff of $1.03 per barrel on crude oil, thereby placing domestic oil on a competitive basis with importations, as shown by the latest report of the Tariff Commission; and

Whereas the rentals and annual royalty income, mostly paid to farmers, have been reduced millions of dollars yearly, which increasing loss continues to add to their already unbearable burdens; and

Whereas the schools of Oklahoma have suffered severely in the loss of nearly six millions of dollars in gross production tax in the single year of 1932, compared with the gross production tax received in 1929; and

Whereas not only have the farmers and the schools sustained severe losses, but also banking, transportation, manufacturing, industry, utility, and every type and character of business have been adversely affected by the distressed condition of the oil industry and by the great loss in purchasing power due to the taking of our domestic markets by the importations of cheap foreign oil; and

Whereas the general unemployment situation has been very greatly aggravated by the thousands of oil-field workers, geologists, land men, lease men, scouts, and office employees forced out of employment, and by the thousands now unemployed but formerly employed by businesses dependent on the oil industry, the third largest industry in the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oklahoma (the house of representatives concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to give relief to the distressed oil industry, and thereby to the Nation generally, by immediately levying an adequate tax or tariff upon imported petroleum and its refined products that will enable our domestic-oil industry to meet importations of foreign oil and its refined products on a competitive basis as shown by the report of the Tariff Commission; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the presiding officers of the legislative bodies of the other oil-producing States with the request that they transmit similar memorials to Congress; and that a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, and to the President of the Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each of the United States Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Oklahoma.

Passed the senate the 18th day of April 1933.

Passed the house of representatives the 22d day of April 1933.

JOHN A. MACDONALD,
Acting President of the Senate.
TOM ANGLIN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Correctly enrolled.

CLAUDE LIGGETT,
Chairman Committee on Engrossing and Enrolling.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorials of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce:

TERRITORY OF ALASKA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY FOR THE TERRITORY.

I, Karl Theile, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of House Joint Memorial No. 4 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1933, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the Territory of Alaska at Juneau, the capital, this 17th day of April A.D. 1933.

[SEAL]

KARL THEILE,
Secretary of Alaska.

House Joint Memorial 4 (by Mr. Baronovich)

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in regular session assembled, respectfully represents:

Whereas practically the entire native population and a large percentage of the whole population of southern Alaska are engaged in commercial fishing and have their entire capital invested in it; and

Whereas the Bureau of Fisheries of the United States, under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved June 26, 1906, and June 6, 1924, and acts amendatory thereto, are charged with the administration of the said laws and with the conservation of the fisheries of Alaska, and under the power given them have issued orders governing fishing that are sometimes ambiguous and technical; and

Whereas the said acts provided penalties for breaches thereof or violations of any of the orders issued thereunder. These penalties permit fines of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment of not more than 90 days, or both, upon conviction in the criminal court, and, in addition, the seizure and forfeiture of boats, gear, or appliances under the admiralty law, where the trial is before the judge alone. No provision is made for the release of these boats or paraphernalia, on bonds or otherwise, pending the disposition of the case; and

Whereas a practice has arisen whereby the agents of the said Bureau of Fisheries immediately seize the boats, gear, or appliances as soon as a breach of the law is suspected, and the accused is then notified by the said agents that if he, they, or it, as the case may be, will agree to plead guilty to offense charged and pay a fine designated by the said agents, that the boats, etc., will be released upon the said plea of guilty being made to a charge that would be filed in the criminal court and paying the fine agreed upon, otherwise the said boats, etc., would be held for disposition by the admiralty court; and

Whereas this practice is unjust and un-American, since it deprives the accused of the right guaranteed by the Constitution to appear and answer and the right to a speedy trial by jury on the charge presented, and compels the innocent to either accept the alternative of admitting a crime of which he was not guilty or paying the penalty for the said crime by losing the use of his property for a period likely to cover the whole fishing season, thereby limiting his means of earning his living:

Now, therefore, your memorialist respectfully prays that section 6 of the act of Congress approved June 6, 1924, be amended to provide that no boats, gear, or other appliances used in fishing shall be seized until the accused has been tried and convicted of the crime charged against him.

Passed by the house March 30, 1933.

JOE McDONALD,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

C. H. HELGESEN,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Passed by the senate April 4, 1933.

ALLEN SHATTUCK,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

AGNES F. ADST,
Secretary of the Senate.

Certified a true copy.

C. H. HELGESEN,
Chief Clerk of the House.

TERRITORY OF ALASKA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY FOR THE TERRITORY.

I, Karl Theille, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of Senate Joint Memorial No. 5 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1933, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the Territory of Alaska, at Juneau, the capital, this 21st day of April A.D. 1933.

[SEAL]

KARL THEILLE,
Secretary of Alaska.

Senate Joint Memorial 5 (by Messrs. DeVane and Lomen)

To the Congress of the United States, the Department of Commerce, the Bureau of Fisheries, and the Delegate to Congress from Alaska:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully represents that—

Whereas the present law governing the fisheries of the Territory of Alaska (White Act) passed June 6, 1924, prohibits commercial fishing for shipment out of the Territory of Alaska in or within 500 yards of the mouth of any river in the Territory of Alaska except the Karluk and Ugashik Rivers; and

Whereas the Yukon and Kuskokwim Rivers are navigable for more than 2,500 miles, and along their banks are scattered a population of several thousands of people consisting of native Indians and whites, and many of these native Indians and white settlers in the Yukon and Kuskokwim Rivers have established permanent homes and live the year round in their respective homes, making a living off the country by trapping, fishing, prospecting, and small-scale mining; and

Whereas every year there is caught and dried for dog feed more than 100,000 king salmon from these two rivers, formerly used as food for dogs used as means of transporting mail and for general transportation purposes; and

Whereas, because of the advancement of the aviation industry, and the fact that airplanes are used almost entirely for the transportation of mail and for general transportation of passengers and supplies along the Yukon and Kuskokwim Rivers, there is no further use for dogs and dog teams as a means of transportation generally, this fish, which is caught and prepared for use within the Territory of Alaska as feed for these dogs, is unsalable and of no value; and the trails have become blocked with snow, because of general use of airplanes by traveling public and are of little or no use to the permanent residents for travel by dog teams. Thus has been eliminated to a large extent the use for dog teams in these two valleys; and

Whereas regulations now in force under the White law permit the taking of 50,000 king salmon 500 yards off the mouth of the Yukon River, which said mouth is designated by markers at Nilak and Tin Can Point, which points are on the open sea; and

Whereas the fishing under this regulation last season resulted in only 4,739 king salmon packed out of the 50,000 allowed because of the fact that fishing in the waters allowed under said regulation required the owning or securing of a sea-going power boat and fishing gear suitable for fishing in the open sea, and represented an investment of at least $20,000, and that of the 4,739 fish taken last season 4,412 of them were taken by one man, who is the only person with proper boat and gear adjacent to the place where fishing is allowed; and

Whereas the taking of 50,000 king salmon 500 yards outside the mouth of the Yukon River has not resulted in any economic relief to the people of the Yukon River who are permanent and bona-fide residents of the Yukon Valley, because of the fact that they are unable to fish in the designated waters due to lack of equipment suitable for such fishing; and

Whereas in addition to the 50,000 fish allowed to be taken from the mouth of the Yukon many thousands of fish just as equal in quality are caught inside the mouth of the Yukon and cannot be prepared for human consumption because of the prohibitions of the present laws and regulations, which fish are far in excess of the requirements for local use and are dried under present conditions wasted; and

Whereas the average income of the native Indian and the permanent white population of the Yukon and Kuskokwim Rivers has become greatly reduced through the low prices and poor catches of furs, and the income of many families has been wiped out entirely through the use of airplanes for the transportation of mail, passengers, and supplies, and want and destitution are prevalent among the native and white inhabitants of these sections; and

Whereas the Grand Igloo of Pioneers of Alaska by resolution has condemned the present wasteful practice of drying king salmon for dog food, and the Ninth and Tenth Sessions of the Alaska Territorial Legislature have memorialized the Congress of the United States praying for relief, and the platform on which the present Delegate to Congress from Alaska and a large majority of the Alaska Territorial Legislature were elected demanded this relief; and

Wherefore your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska in eleventh session assembled, most urgently request—

That the White law be amended to permit the native Indians and permanent white inhabitants of the Yukon and Kuskokwim Rivers to catch and pack king salmon for export from the Territory of Alaska in limited quantities and under suitable regulations to prevent depletion of the supply, and that the regulations permit cooperative or community canneries and cold-storage facilities for mild curing the fish so taken.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Passed the senate April 13, 1933.

ALLEN SHATTUCK,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

AGNES F. ADSIT,
Secretary of the Senate.

Passed the house April 19, 1933.

JOE McDONALD,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

C. H. HELGESEN,
Chief Clerk of the House.

A true copy:

AGNES F. ADSIT,
Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

TERRITORY OF ALASKA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY FOR THE TERRITORY.

I, Karl Theille, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of House Joint Memorial No. 3 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1933, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the Territory of Alaska, at Juneau, the capital, this 17th day of April A.D. 1933.

KARL THEILLE,
Secretary of Alaska.

House Joint Memorial No. 3 (by Mr. McCutcheon)

To the President and the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in eleventh regular session assembled, present to you the following facts:

Whereas there are vast areas of agricultural and mineral lands in Alaska susceptible of development which will maintain a permanent population so necessary to the welfare of the Territory; and

Whereas the lands referred to are still inaccessible and undeveloped, due to the lack of vehicular roadways; and

Whereas the development of the farm and mineral lands will tend greatly to the material well-being, not only of the people at large but of the Government constructed and operated railroad; and

Whereas the Federal Government has already extended aid to all of the States of the Union and the Territory of Hawaii for the construction of highways jointly with such States and Territory; and

Whereas Alaska has in the past contributed generously from its own funds in the construction and maintenance of roads; and

Whereas Alaska is willing to cooperate on any equitable basis with the Federal Government in the matter of Federal aid for highways: Now, therefore,

We, your memorialists, believing that the general welfare of the Territory can thereby be greatly improved, earnestly pray that the Federal Aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916, be extended to the Territory of Alaska;

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Passed by the house April 4, 1933.

JOE McDONALD,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

C. H. HELGESEN,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Passed by the senate April 10, 1933.

ALLEN SHATTUCK,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

AGNES F. ADSIT,
Secretary of the Senate.

Certified a true copy.

C. H. HELGESEN,
Clerk of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Senate of the Territory of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

TERRITORY OF ALASKA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY FOR THE TERRITORY.

I, Karl Theille, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of Senate Memorial No. 1 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1933, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the Territory of Alaska, at Juneau, the capital, this 21st day of April A.D. 1933.

[SEAL]

KARL THEILE,
Secretary of Alaska.

Senate Memorial 1 (by Mr. Campbell)

To the President of the United States, the United States Senate, the House of Representatives, and the Delegate from Alaska:

Your memorialist, the Territorial Senate of the Territory of Alaska, in eleventh regular session assembled, hereby most earnestly and respectfully represents:

Whereas it appears to be the present policy of the Federal Government to cause a general and material reduction in wages and/or salaries paid its officials and employees in the services of the Federal Government in the Territory of Alaska; and

Whereas there are many Federal officials and employees residing in sparsely settled districts of Alaska, far from any direct line or lines of transportation; and

Whereas for reasons above stated no official schedule of the cost price of living in Alaska has been or can with anything like accuracy be given with the information and data at hand or available at this time; and

Whereas the cost of living, anywhere in Alaska, is much greater than it is in any State of the Union because and for the reason of its isolation and the cost of transportation: Wherefore

Your memorialist prays that the President and Congress will, before making or authorizing any material reduction in wages or salaries of its officials and employees in the Territory of Alaska, cause an investigation of the true conditions and a schedule price of the cost of living in Alaska to be officially studied and determined and the salaries of Federal employees in the Territory of Alaska to be adjusted from the findings of this survey.

Passed by the senate April 20, 1933.

ALLEN SHATTUCK,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

AGNES F. ADSIT,
Secretary of the Senate.

A true copy:

AGNES F. ADSIT,
Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the Territory of Alaska, which was ordered to lie on the table:

TERRITORY OF ALASKA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY FOR THE TERRITORY.

I, Karl Theile, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of House Resolution No. 1 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1933, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the Territory of Alaska, at Juneau, the capital, this 21st day of April A.D. 1933.

[SEAL]

KARL THEILE,
Secretary of Alaska.

House Resolution 1 (by Mr. Green)

Whereas there is pending in the Congress of the United States a bill to establish a bimetallic system of currency, employing the use of gold and silver, to fix the relative value of gold and silver, and to provide for the free coinage of silver, and for other purposes; and

Whereas it is believed that the prosperity of the people of the United States depends largely upon foreign markets for the products of the farms and factories; and

Whereas foreign nations which could use these products are unable to buy them on account of the shortage and maldistribution of gold and the depreciation of their currencies as measured by gold; and

Whereas many of the leading nations of the world have abandoned the gold standard and are unable to settle adverse trade values in gold; and

Whereas the commodity price levels of today are so much lower than the price levels at the time when practically all of the existing debts, both public and private, were contracted; and

Whereas, if the present commodity price levels continue, the payment of the aforesaid debts will be impossible; and

Whereas it is believed that legal provisions for the remonetization of silver as set forth in the Wheeler bill (S. 2487) now pending before Congress would rehabilitate the purchasing power of people everywhere, create a world market for the products of our farms and factories, and thereby bring about a rise in the price of commodities thus enabling all debtors to meet their obligations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the eleventh session of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, now in session—

1. That we hereby petition the Congress of the United States to give favorable consideration to the Wheeler bill, S. 2487, now referred to and in the hands of the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate to the end that relief may be afforded to all industries and all classes of society through the stabilization of the currencies of the world.

2. That certified copies of this resolution be sent to the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Alaska Delegate in Congress.

Passed by the house April 13, 1933.

JOE McDONALD,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

C. H. HELGESEN,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Certified a true copy.

C. H. HELGESEN,
Clerk of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the House of Representatives of the General Court of Massachusetts, favoring the passage of legislation for the tariff protection of the fishing industry, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See resolutions printed in full when presented today by Mr. WALSH.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate three petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Louisiana, praying for a senatorial investigation of alleged acts and conduct of Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate two memorials and several letters and telegrams in the nature of memorials of sundry citizens, all in the State of Louisiana, endorsing Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, condemning attacks made upon him, and remonstrating against a senatorial investigation of his alleged acts and conduct, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram from Walter B. Rheineck, of Romeville, La., setting out copy of a telegram to John M. Parker, of St. Francisville, La., relative to the action of certain Democratic Senators in voting to defeat President Roosevelt's inflation plan, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Los Angeles, Calif., protesting against the use of the "pauper's oath" in connection with relief work, as a seemingly un-American practice, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens, being postal employees of Oklahoma City, Okla., praying for the passage of legislation providing for compulsory retirement of all classified Civil Service employees, upon the completion of 30 years' service, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial of the Philadelphia Freight Brokers, Forwarders, and Customs Brokers Association, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for mandatory retirement of civil employees of the Customs Service who have served for 30 years or more, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the American Russian Institute, San Francisco, Calif., favoring the immediate recognition of the Soviet Government of Russia and the establishment of trade relations with that Government, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from J. R. Edwards, of J. R. Edwards & Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, calling attention to an alleged error in the securities bill now pending, on page 23, line 7, article D, under "Exemptions", relative to stock dividends, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KEAN presented a resolution adopted by Elizabeth Parcells Devoe Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Leonia, N.J., favoring the maintenance of the defense forces of the Nation, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a memorial of members of the International Relations Club of McPherson College, McPherson, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for the construction of 30 warships and the expenditure of $230,000,000 for that purpose, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WALCOTT presented letters and telegrams in the nature of memorials from Branch 47, of Bridgeport, and Branch 35, of New Haven, National Association of Postal Supervisors; the Subs Organization of the Post Office, of Bridgeport; the Federation of Federal Employees, of Hartford; and the Supervisors Association of the Post Office, of Hartford, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the passage of the 30-year compulsory retirement provision relating to Federal employees, which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented the petition of members of the Political Equality Club, of Meriden, Conn., praying for the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition and papers in the nature of petitions from the League of Women Voters, of Westport; the Bridgeport Section, National Council of Jewish Women, of Bridgeport; members of the United Church of Bridgeport, and sundry citizens, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the passage of legislation to prohibit the exportation of arms or munitions of war from the United States under certain conditions, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Veterans' Council, of Waterbury, Conn., protesting against cuts in appropriations for the Army and Navy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Jackson Heights Community Council, of Queens County, New York City, N.Y., opposing the passage of the so-called "Federal home mortgage relief bill" in its present form, as not being adequate to meet the prevailing situation, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Syracuse, N.Y., branch of the National Woman's Party, favoring the passage of the so-called "Copeland-Dickstein equal nationality bill", which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Young Men's Board of Trade, of New York City, opposing the ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty with Canada, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Civic Association of Hollis Crest, Inc., of Hollis, L.I., N.Y., favoring the passage of legislation for the relief of small-home owners, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, R. A. Sneed, secretary of state of the State of Oklahoma, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true copy of Enrolled Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 25, by Briggs, Stewart, MacDonald, and Nance, of the senate, and Henderson and Kight, of the house.

A resolution memorializing Congress, urging the passage by Congress of an act appropriating funds for Federal-aid highway construction, to be distributed among the various States of the Union for the relief and to provide work for the unemployed, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of State.

Done at the city of Oklahoma City this 28th day of April A.D. 1933.

[SEAL]

R. A. SNEED,
Secretary of State.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 25 (by Briggs, Stewart, MacDonald, and Nance, of the senate, and Henderson and Kight, of the house)

A resolution memorializing Congress, urging the passage by Congress of an act appropriating funds for Federal-aid highway construction, to be distributed among the various States of the Union for the relief and to provide work for the unemployed

Whereas the Congress of the United States now has before it for consideration certain measures designed to and providing for the appropriation of moneys to be distributed to the various States for the relief and to provide employment for the unemployed; and

Whereas among other things said acts contemplate the appropriation of a large sum of money for the construction of public improvement, including highways; and

Whereas under present existing conditions the greatest number of people in the history of the United States have no employment and are without means of earning and providing support for themselves and families; and

Whereas the conditions in the State of Oklahoma at the present time are more acute and distressful than ever in the history of said State, in that many thousands of heads of families have been and are without employment or the ability to find employment unless funds are made available to carry on public-improvement projects; and

Whereas the earning power of the citizenship of the State of Oklahoma has so depreciated until at the present time and for the past 2 years owners of taxable property are facing the loss of their property and homes by reason of their inability to pay the taxes and lift the mortgage burdens thereon; and

Whereas by reason of said conditions the collection of funds and revenues of the State of Oklahoma have fallen so far short of anticipated receipts that there are now outstanding and unpaid warrant obligations of the State and its various subdivisions aggregating more than $40,000,000, and by reason thereof the banks of the State and Nation have evidenced their unwillingness to further invest funds in warrants, and the State has, therefore, found itself in a condition necessitating and requiring the legislature to make provision in some manner to relieve the said condition; and

Whereas in order to meet the demands in the administration of the affairs of the government the fourteenth session of the Oklahoma Legislature has been forced to divert a portion of its revenues to the payment of said outstanding unpaid warrant indebtedness by the passage of house bill no. 416 of the said Fourteenth Oklahoma Legislature, thereby reducing the amount of available funds with which to purchase materials and employ labor in the construction of highways; and

Whereas through the construction of highways under the supervision of the Bureau of Good Roads, Department of Agriculture, of the United States Government, the State of Oklahoma has heretofore greatly profited by reason of the improved type and class of construction necessarily required to meet Federal-aid specifications and establishing standards which has resulted in a higher and better type of highway construction, both as to State and Federal aid highways in this State; and

Whereas a continuation of said program is greatly desired on the part of the legislative branch of government, and in fact is deemed essential and necessary to the future welfare, convenience, and prosperity of the citizens of said State; and

Whereas it is the desire of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Fourteenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma that highway construction continue under the supervision of the Federal Bureau of Good Roads, and with their cooperation, in order that the high standard of construction may be maintained, and is also essentially necessary to the prosperity of the State and the relief of the unemployed; and

Whereas although the State of Oklahoma through the aforesaid legislative act has diverted a portion of its highway revenues through apparent necessity, the same was enacted as a temporary measure and will be repealed and the funds thus diverted replaced at the earliest possible date; and

Whereas it is the desire of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma that the State fully cooperate with the Congress of the United States and the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Good Roads, in carrying on an extensive comprehensive program of construction of highways to relieve the unemployment and distressful financial condition in this State and other States as well: And for said reasons be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring therein). That the Congress of the United States is urgently requested to immediately pass the proposed Federal-aid construction appropriation bills and render available much-needed relief in the form of Federal-aid funds to be distributed to the various States in proportion to the needs and conditions; and be it further

Resolved. That Congress be urged to continue the policies of Federal supervision of the construction of all highway projects, whether under regular appropriation or emergency relief appropriation in order that the high standard of construction may be maintained and the funds thereby expended result in permanent and lasting improvement; and be it further

Resolved. That the terms and conditions for the distribution of said funds be so provided that the State of Oklahoma and other States which have been forced to temporarily divert a portion of its revenue from highway construction will not result in loss of Federal-aid funds, and that said funds be distributed under agreements equitably providing for future State fund replacements or expenditures in lieu thereof; and be it further

Resolved. That copies of this resolution be forwarded to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives of United States Congress from Oklahoma, and that they be requested to cause the same to be exhibited in the permanent records of both branches of the Congress of the United States, and copies hereof be forwarded to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the Chief of the Bureau of Good Roads, of Washington, D.C., and that the same be brought to the attention of the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, by the forwarding of a copy thereof to the Secretary to the President.

Passed the senate the 21st day of April 1933.

Passed the house of representatives the 21st day of April 1933.

ROBERT BURNS,
President of the Senate.
S. H. SINGLETON,
Acting Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Correctly enrolled.

CLAUDE LIGGETT,
Chairman Committee on Engrossing and Enrolling.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma and ask that the title thereof may be read and the resolution referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the title thereof was read, as follows:

Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress that it is the sense of the members of the Oklahoma Legislature that the Government of the United States should perform its solemn promise and place American agriculture on the basis of equality with other industries by providing an adequate system of credit, and that adequate legislation to that end should be adopted at the earliest possible date.

PROTECTION OF THE FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and appropriately referred resolution sent to me by the secretary of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, urging protection and relief for the fishing industry.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, BOSTON,
House of Representatives, April 26, 1933.

Ordered, That the House of Representatives of the General Court of Massachusetts respectfully represents to the President and the Congress of the United States the necessity of according to the fishing industry of this country reasonable tariff protection and such other protection and relief as may be necessary in order that said industry be preserved and the American standard of living for the workers engaged therein be maintained; and be it further Ordered, That copies of this order be forwarded forthwith by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, and to the Members thereof representing this Commonwealth.

Adopted.

FRANK E. BRIDGMAN, Clerk.

A true copy.
Attest:

F. W. COOK,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

FITZSIMONS GENERAL HOSPITAL, ADAMS COUNTY, COLO.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the Senate of the State of Colorado recently adopted a memorial with reference to the proposed closing of Fitzsimons General Hospital in the vicinity of Denver. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 18 (by Senator Houston and Representative Rogers)

Whereas it has been brought to the attention of the general assembly that the War Department of the United States, acting under authority of a recent act of Congress, is contemplating the transfer of many patients now receiving hospitalization and medical treatment at the Fitzsimons General Hospital, located at Aurora, Adams County, Colo., to other smaller Government hospitals located in various parts of the United States; and

Whereas such action would, if carried out as now contemplated by the War Department, result in a very substantial decrease in the number of patients cared for at said Fitzsimons General Hospital and would further result in a substantial reduction of the military and civilian personnel employed at said general hospital; and

Whereas the removal of said patients to other smaller Federal hospitals would, in all probability, result in the effecting of no economies in the carrying on of the work of hospitalization and medical treatment of ex-service men entitled thereto, but, on the contrary, such action would probably result in increased cost to the Federal Government in the carrying on of such work, for the reason that the overhead expenses of such smaller institutions would necessarily be increased in a greater amount than the overhead expenses of said Fitzsimons General Hospital would be reduced as the result of such transfer of patients; and

Whereas the patients now being hospitalized and treated at said Fitzsimons General Hospital ought not, in justice, to be removed therefrom to hospitals in other parts of the country, for the reason that because of the equable and salubrious climate of Colorado said general hospital is more advantageously located for the treatment of diseases and ailments than any other Federal hospital in the United States and the removal of said patients to other hospitals where the climate is less favorable as a curative agent would be highly unjust to said patients; and

Whereas in reliance upon the location of said Fitzsimons General Hospital as a permanent institution in Adams County, Colo., various industries, such as dairying, merchandising and dealing in hospital supplies, have been established, enlarged, and stimulated in the vicinity of said hospital and in the city and county of Denver, and the decimation of the patients and personnel of the said hospital would result in the serious impairment of the local market for such products and supplies to the detriment of a large number of citizens of said vicinity and of the city of Denver; and

Whereas the site for said general hospital was donated to the Federal Government by public subscriptions of many thousands of dollars furnished by the citizens of Denver and of other parts of Colorado upon the representation by the Federal Government and upon the expectation on the part of said citizens that said general hospital would be established and equipped for the care and treatment of 1,100 or 1,200 patients and would remain as a permanent institution upon the site so donated, and the removal of a substantial number of said patients now at said hospital and the consequent substantial reduction of the activities thereof would be a breach of faith upon the part of the Federal Government with the people of Colorado, who furnished such site for its establishment: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, That in behalf of the patients now being treated at said general hospital and in behalf of the citizens of this State, especially whose property rights and interest would be gravely jeopardized by the contemplated action of the War Department as above set forth and in behalf of the citizens of Aurora, and of Denver, Colo., and of the State generally, protest be hereby made to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of War against the transfer of patients from said hospital to other hospitals and against any substantial reduction of any personnel, military or civil, at said general hospital, and that certified copies of this resolution of protest be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, the Surgeon General of the United States Army, and to the Senators and Representatives of Colorado in the Congress of the United States.

CURRENCY AND MONETARY CONTROL

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the National Grange and American Farm Bureau headquarters, urging the next step in currency and monetary control in the public interest.

It is my judgment that the administration and the Congress have taken the right step in providing for a controlled inflation at this time. But even more important is a permanent monetary control—such as Congress is expected to exert under the provisions of the Constitution to regulate the value of money—to insure a stable ratio between the dollar and the general commodity price level.

These alternating periods of inflation and deflation work a great injury to the great mass of our people. Periods of inflation work an injustice to creditors, to those who are thrifty and invest their savings. Periods of deflation ruin the producers and workers.

It is my judgment that after the dollar finds a level as the result of the controlled inflation in prospect, we then should proceed to create the necessary machinery, Government controlled, to stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar. I send the letter to the desk for printing in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 28, 1933.

To the Members of Congress:

No greater service could be rendered America at this critical time than to restore the purchasing power of our dollar to a level which will enable debtors to pay back the exact number of dollars they have borrowed, and then stabilize it at that point. The fluctuating value of the dollar is largely responsible for the tragic conditions confronting our people.

The lack of confidence, the fear, and the confusion of thought which make normal business revival impossible, are largely due to uncertainty as to what the purchasing power of the dollar will be a month or a year from today. This Congress can solve the problem.

The President's courageous program for inflation is the first step. Of even greater importance is the need for controlling and stabilizing the value of the dollar.

This can be done simply, accurately, and constitutionally by adding to the President's constructive proposals the stabilizing features of the Goldsborough bills, H.R. 5073 and 5160.

The whole Nation is demanding monetary stability. Debtors must have an honest means of meeting their debts without losing their all through bankruptcy. Finance requires stability before sound credit can again become available. Agriculture, labor, and business are dependent upon the stability of the purchasing power of the dollar for their very existence.

Congress should seize this opportunity to establish a stable and accurate medium of exchange, and thereby confer upon the country benefits of lasting and immeasurable worth.

Very respectfully,

THE NATIONAL GRANGE,
A. S. GOSS,

Chairman Executive Committee.
AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
EDW. A. O'NEAL, President.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR HOWELL

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 26, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 26), submitted by Mr. McNARY on March 14, 1933, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the Vice President in arranging for and attending the funeral of Hon. Robert B. Howell, late a Senator from the State of Nebraska, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. DILL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Charles Wyzanski, Jr., of Massachusetts, to be Solicitor of Labor, to succeed Theodore G. Risley, which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 1548) for the relief of Harry Flanery; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 1549) for the relief of Lt. Col. Harry Walter Stephenson, United States Army, retired; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BACHMAN:

A bill (S. 1550) granting a pension to Rue S. Jackson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 1551) granting a pension to Lemuel T. Wilson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DICKINSON and Mr. CLARK:

A bill (S. 1552) to amend the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1932 relating to the tax on gasoline; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 1553) for the relief of John Hamilton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 1554) to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 47) conferring upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma the power to retain jurisdiction and to hear, try, and give judgment in case no. 6091 law, entitled "Charles Pope Hollingsworth v. United States of America"; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 48) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Posheng Yen, a citizen of China; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DISTRIBUTION OF GRAIN BY AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution to authorize the purchase of grain and grain products for distribution by the American National Red Cross for the relief of distress, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 49) to authorize the purchase of grain and grain products for distribution by the American National Red Cross, for relief of distress, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make available out of the funds of the Corporation not to exceed $40,000,000 to be used by the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator, in his discretion, for the purchase of grain or grain products, which shall be delivered to the American National Red Cross to be used for the purposes and in the manner provided with respect to wheat and the products thereof in the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the distribution of Government-owned wheat and cotton to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress", approved July 5, 1932, the actual costs of processing, distribution, and administration to be paid out of amounts made available pursuant to this section. The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered, under section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to have outstanding at any one time is increased by $40,000,000.

PLANNING IN INDUSTRY BY PERMITTING COOPERATION

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am introducing a bill to encourage planning in industry by permitting controlled cooperation and protecting agriculture, labor, and consumers and to supplement the powers of the Federal Trade Commission.

During the debates upon the Sherman Act, Senator Sherman stated that his proposed bill would not apply to agricultural organizations or to labor. The courts subsequently disagreed with Senator Sherman.

When Congress adopted the Clayton Act, it believed that section 6 of that law exempted labor, agricultural, and horticultural organizations, but again the provision was not sufficiently clear to effect this purpose.

In the Capper-Volstead Act, Congress granted to agricultural cooperative marketing associations a partial exemption from the antitrust laws, coupled with governmental supervision of prices.

The purchasing power of farmers and labor must be restored, and for this purpose their right to collective bargaining must be fully recognized, and I have therefore endeavored to provide for the full exemption of agriculture and labor from the antitrust acts so as to enable them to hold their own with industry.

The anti-injunction bill was enacted by the last Congress because of its recognition of the fact that industry was unduly oppressing labor through the use of injunctions and the use of "yellow dog" contracts. I have provided in this bill that industrial units entering into permitted cooperative agreements must not use "yellow dog" contracts and must abrogate all existing ones.

In addition to the above provisions for the protection of agriculture and labor, the bill contains the following features:

First, Cooperative agreements in aid of economic planning may be filed with the Federal Trade Commission and may be approved after a hearing, if they are reasonable and economically sound and will not result in a selling price of the goods or commodities affected thereby in excess of a fair and reasonable price based on all fair and reasonable items of cost plus a fair and reasonable profit, taking into consideration the necessity of a fair and reasonable compensation to producers and distributors of average ability and efficiency and to labor, and will not depress wages or conditions of employment of labor or prices of agricultural products or raw materials, and will not result in oppression of competitors, labor, or producers of agricultural products or raw materials.

Second. The Commission shall retain jurisdiction over the subject matter of such cooperative agreements and over the persons entering into them, and a procedure is provided for the revocation of the approval.

Third. Full publicity for all proceedings is provided.

Fourth. The definition of "unfair methods of competition" and "unfair trade practices" is clarified and amplified.

Fifth. Trade-practice conferences are legalized.

Sixth. Penalties are provided for noncompliance with the orders of the Commission.

Seventh. The procedure before the Commission is generally amplified and clarified, and the number of Commissioners is increased from 5 to 9, to enable the Commission to handle its enlarged functions.

The bill does not contemplate governmental price-fixing of goods or commodities but recognizes that exorbitant prices and oppressive practices must not be permitted, and permits the approval of agreements voluntarily entered into, subject to governmental supervision, over the reasonableness of the prices to be charged and the practices to be resorted to.

I believe that this measure, if enacted, will give to honest industry the necessary privilege of cooperation and will at the same time protect the public and preserve the full intent and purpose of the antitrust laws, merely substituting cooperation in place of competition as the means to be used to accomplish the goal of reasonable selling prices for manufactured commodities without depressing the purchasing power of agriculture, labor, and consumers.

The bill (S. 1555) to encourage planning in industry by permitting controlled cooperation and protecting agriculture, labor, and consumers and to supplement the powers of the Federal Trade Commission, was read twice by its title.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask that a statement explaining a somewhat similar bill introduced at the last session may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement submitted by Mr. WALSH was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 25, 1932, p. 2605]

STATEMENT EXPLAINING THE BILL S. 3256

This bill is a complete amendment and amplification of the Federal Trade Commission Act in line with the almost universal demand as expressed by industrial organizations, by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and by the American Bar Association, and also in the President's message to Congress; but goes beyond most other suggestions in that it gives full protection to the public, declaring that the public interest requires fair compensation to producers and labor and a fair price to consumers.

The major features of the bill are:

First. Federal Trade Commission is empowered to give advance approval of cooperative contracts for curtailment of production and for other acts to avoid ruinous competition.

Second. The public is protected by prevention of unfair prices through such approved contracts.

Third. The antitrust laws are not repealed, but exemption is granted to approved acts. Approved contracts are declared legally enforceable.

Fourth. Approval to be revoked if it leads to unfair prices or is otherwise no longer in the public interest or if approval is secured by misrepresentation. Exemption from antitrust laws terminates upon revocation of approval.

Fifth. Penalty similar to penalty in Interstate Commerce Commission Act is provided for noncompliance with Commission's orders.

Sixth. Definition of unfair methods of competition and unfair trade practices is clarified and amplified.

Seventh. Trade-practice conferences are legalized.

Eighth. Power of Commission to conduct investigations is enlarged.

The bill also generally amplifies and clarifies the procedure before the Commission.

The bill is introduced in response to the almost universal demand for the stabilization of industry so as to enable producers to earn a fair profit and to pay fair wages to labor and to charge fair prices to consumers, without the hindrance of cutthroat competition, which industry claims has been imposed upon it by the antitrust laws.

The President in his message to Congress said, "In my message of a year ago I commented on the necessity of congressional inquiry into the economic action of the antitrust laws. There is wide conviction that some change should be made, especially in the procedure under these laws. I do not favor their repeal. Such action would open wide the door to price fixing, monopoly, and destruction of healthy competition."

This bill does not repeal the antitrust laws. These laws are left in full force, as they must be in order to prevent price fixing and monopoly to the detriment of the public.

Chambers of commerce and other industrial organizations have demanded advance Government approval of contracts for curtailment of production and for other acts to avoid ruinous competition, basing their demand on the proposition that under existing laws such contracts are prohibited and that this prohibition has led to overproduction in all lines of industry, which in turn has resulted in this depression with its accompaniment of unemployment, starvation, misery, and suffering.

The bill permits such advance approval by the Federal Trade Commission of contracts to curtail production, as well as many other forms of contract that may be necessary to the complete stabilization of industry, provided such contracts are in the public interest.

Industry admits that these contracts will replace competition by cooperation, and it is possible that in some instances these contracts might destroy healthy as well as unhealthy competition.

If my proposal contained nothing beyond the provision for such advance approval of cooperative contracts, it would "open wide the door to price fixing and monopoly", just as effectively as would the complete repeal of the antitrust laws.

This cannot be risked. The public interest demands fair prices to all. The public as producers must receive a fair compensation and as consumers must be able to purchase goods at fair prices. Neither excessively low nor excessively high prices are in the public interest. Both extremes are equally bad. My bill therefore states that the public interest requires a fair and reasonable compensation to producers of average ability and efficiency, and to labor, and a fair price to consumers, and forbids the use of an approved contract for the purpose of enhancing prices beyond a fair and reasonable price based on all fair and reasonable items of cost plus a fair profit.

The bill grants exemption from the antitrust laws to all approved contracts and all acts performed pursuant thereto, and makes such approved contracts legal and enforceable. It provides, however, for the revocation of the approval if prices are enhanced beyond cost and a fair profit, or if the contract is no longer in the public interest or if the parties misrepresented the facts upon their application for approval, and in case of revocation of approval, the exemption from the antitrust laws is lost.

To make the Commission more effective, a penalty for non-compliance with its orders is provided, similar to the penalty contained in the Interstate Commerce Commission Act; the definition of unfair methods of competition and unfair trade practices is clarified and amplified; trade practice conferences are expressly legalized; and the power of the Commission to conduct investigations is enlarged.

The bill also provides for the increase of the Federal Trade Commission from 5 to 9 members so as to enable it to handle its enlarged functions, and the Commission is authorized to divide itself into 3 divisions of 3 members each in the same manner as the Interstate Commerce Commission, each division to have the full powers of the board. In my opinion, this and the other changes of procedure which I have made will serve to expedite the work of the Commission and generally make it a more efficient instrument for the welfare of industry.

This bill does not contemplate compulsory Government regulation of prices of goods or commodities, but will check those industries which voluntarily apply for Government approval of contracts that might be prohibited by the antitrust laws; and these industries must, in return, agree to submit to Government jurisdiction over the reasonableness of the prices to be charged by them, so as to protect the public against unreasonably excessive prices.

In brief, realizing that industry cannot be stabilized by congressional edict, the bill permits industry to stabilize itself through cooperative agreements, and at the same time protects the public against the extortionate practices of monopolies.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE TENNESSEE VALLEY—AMENDMENTS

Mr. LOGAN submitted an amendment and Mr. BANKHEAD submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to Senate bill 1272, the Tennessee Valley development bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF—AMENDMENT

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 4606) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PURCHASE OF INSURANCE COMPANY STOCK AND BONDS—AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1094) to provide for the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of preferred stock and/or bonds and/or debentures of insurance companies, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PETROLEUM PRICES

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted a resolution (S. Res. 64, with accompanying papers), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 339, agreed to on February 25, 1933, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following to the end of such resolution: "(10) The Commission is hereby further directed to report particularly whether any of the practices heretofore in this resolution stated or facts disclosed in pursuance of this resolution relate to or constitute violation of the Federal antitrust laws."

ALCOHOL MANUFACTURED FROM CORN, ETC.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD submitted a resolution (S. Res. 65), which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby requested to investigate, through the agencies of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Chemistry and Soils, and Agricultural Engineering of the Department of Agriculture, the practicability and advantages to agriculture of using alcohol, manufactured from corn and other farm products, in motor fuel, and to report thereon to the Senate as soon as possible.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CHILD LABOR

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the emancipation of children from the serfdom of excessive toil is one of the unfinished tasks of civilization. In yesterday's Philadelphia Record, Frances Perkins, our fine Secretary of Labor, in a timely and impressive article on the subject of child labor, reaffirmed her support of that splendid cause—in part, by State action; in part, through ratification of the proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution. I ask leave to have the article of Secretary Perkins printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPEEDY ACTION URGED—SECRETARY OF LABOR DECLARES DEPRESSION OFFERS OPPORTUNITY TO ERASE EVILS

By Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor

A new belief that child labor may soon be eradicated from American industry has arisen from the economic depression.

With millions of adults unemployed, there is no need for young children to become wage earners. Public opinion cries out against employing them as it never has before, demanding that what few opportunities exist in gainful occupations be given to adult breadwinners.

Thus the movement to protect children against premature entrance into industry and to safeguard them in their first year or two of contact with it, which has been gaining momentum steadily through two decades, has received unexpected impetus. Today it is not only the socially minded person who says "Children ought not to work" but also the adult who covets the child's job.

ONLY ONE "DEFENSE"

Virtually the only honest voice raised in defense of the theory of child labor is that of the person who sees the child as the sole breadwinner of his family, and who argues that it is better for him to be earning a meager wage than for his parents and brothers and sisters to starve.

It would be far better to keep children under 16 out of employment entirely and to acknowledge a social responsibility for the maintenance of the families dependent upon them. Thus we should at least take the burden from those least able to bear it, and we might also reduce to a considerable extent the postponed costs which the present exploitation of adolescent workers is piling up against the future.

Child labor has been steadily decreasing since 1929, just as have all other forms of labor. Although there were still 2,000,000 children gainfully employed in 1930, at the time of the last census, the number has decreased since that date.

ASSURANCE IS NEEDED

However, unless preventive legislation is adopted throughout the country, it is by no means certain that when business picks up again many of these children will not go back to work.

In the past the employment of children has always paralleled the employment of adults, showing corresponding peaks and troughs from year to year as business fluctuated.

There is, moreover, a reverse side to this seemingly pleasant picture of declining employment among children. While the total numbers decrease, there is an increasing demand for child labor in certain lines of manufacturing, in the "fly-by-night" industries and sweatshops, which have sprung up as a by-product of the depression and contribute to the general breakdown of industrial standards.

Children have been driven into street trades, into industrial work, domestic and personal service, and industrialized agriculture, the very trades where conditions are most often undesirable and where, because they are unregulated, opportunities exist for serious exploitation.

In some Southern States, where the industrial crisis was not felt so promptly as in the North, there was an actual increase in the number of children under 16 reported at work in 1930 as compared with 1920. South Carolina, for example, showed an increase of 29 percent, Florida, 7 percent, and Georgia, 2½ percent.

The number of children under 16 in manufacturing industries, according to the census, had decreased by 63 percent since 1920, but the number of children in trade had decreased only 20 percent and in domestic and personal service only 15 percent.

INCREASE NOTED HERE

In many cities, such as New York, Detroit, Chicago, and Philadelphia, there has been of late a very large increase in the number of boys and girls employed as waiters and servants.

Most of the opportunities for children of 14 or 15 are today in domestic service, in canvassing, and in types of manufacture where the breakdown of standards is general. The latter, in fact, are responsible for figures in some northern cities showing actual increases in the number of child workers since 1929.

In the more desirable occupations, such as those of clerical workers, apprentices, and clerks, there has been a consistent decline. Apprenticeship figures for Wisconsin, the only State which has a supervised system of apprenticeship, show only 73 new indentures in trade in 1931 as compared with 755 in 1929.

STANDARDS ASSAILED

And in the States where a high standard of child protection exists by law there has been great pressure to break down standards. The actual need for profits, however small, have deflated wages and led to violation of age and hour standards, while at the same time budgets for factory inspections and the enforcement of child labor laws have necessarily been cut.

In certain industrial localities, especially those where the garment trades flourish, a return to sweatshop conditions, reviving the notorious evils of a past generation, has been widely deplored.

The Massachusetts Minimum Wage Commission, for example, last spring learned that 10 cents an hour, and in one case 5 cents an hour, were paid to girl workers in Fall River, and that hundreds were earning less than $5 a week.

SITUATION IN STATE

From another source we learn that nearly half the children under 16 were earning less than $3 a week in the clothing factories of Pennsylvania, and that more than a fifth were earning less than $2. In Scranton the median wage for a group of 14- and 15-year-old children was $4.94 for boys and $4.20 for girls.

Conditions are worse in the so-called "contract shops", but these in turn threaten the employers of good intention who see their business imperiled by the competition of unscrupulous rivals, and thus the whole industrial fabric is endangered.

Another class of occupation which causes grave concern is the commission job for boys, involving house-to-house canvassing, with the recitation of hard-luck stories in which they have been secretly coached. Domestic service is in some localities about the only work available to juveniles, but the New York Junior Placement Service in February refused to fill two thirds of the positions because of unsuitable conditions of wages and environment.

HEALTH IS MENACED

The menace to child health in this substandard employment adds another element of danger to the unwholesome picture. For children already suffering from malnutrition resulting from a lowered economic standard in the home, employment under such conditions may mean a sacrifice of vitality for the remainder of their lives and an additional burden on the Public Treasury. Yet in many towns no adequate physical examination is linked with the issuance of work papers.

The value of such examinations is demonstrated statistically in reports from Philadelphia, where in 1930 and 1931, before the depression had undermined the health of growing children, the number of 14- and 15-year-old boys and girls refused permits for reason of ill health was only one fifth of the total. By 1932 one third were not allowed to go to work because of poor physical condition.

Granted, then, that the time is ripe for more decisive action in the fight against child labor, the problem arises as to the best method to be pursued, and to this question child-labor authorities are at this moment giving their most careful attention.

AMENDMENT HAS VIGOR

The Federal child-labor amendment shows more vigor than it has for several years, and there is increasing sentiment in the separate States for the establishment of local legislative safeguards for their children.

The child-labor amendment was first accepted by Congress in 1924, after the second Federal child-labor law had been declared unconstitutional on the ground that it was an "infringement upon the reserved rights of the States." This proposed amendment to the Constitution reads:

"The Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the work of persons under 18 years of age."

SPEEDILY RATIFIED

The amendment was ratified almost immediately by five States—Arkansas, Arizona, California, Montana, Wisconsin—and in 1931 Colorado ratified the amendment. Then action by the States came to a standstill. Within the last few months, however, it has been ratified suddenly by four more—North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, and Washington—by legislators spurred to new concern for public welfare and that children should not work while grown men walk the street.

Ten States have now ratified and ratification resolutions have been introduced in as many more. Favorable votes must be obtained from 26 more, and here the friends of the amendment run up against the practical difficulty that most of the 1933 legislatures are on the point of adjourning or already have done so, and that the majority will not meet again for 2 years, unless summoned in special session.

Public indignation against the exploitation of the child laborer under the cloak of the depression was focused in the conference last winter, called together by the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor at the request of the president of the American Federation of Labor, and attended by representatives of the National Association of Manufacturers, the American Legion, and leading religious, educational, and civic-minded women's groups.

JOBS FOR ADULTS ONLY

This conference expressed its common belief that "in the economic crisis every available job should be given to an adult, in the interest of both the child and adult", and recommended the enactment of new State standards during the year's sessions of the various State legislatures.

The standards recommended were: 16 years as the basic minimum age for employment; 16 and 17 the "regulated" period; working hours for minors shorter than those allowed adults, but never exceeding 8 hours a day, and a minimum wage established for workers under 18, with double compensation allowed for injuries to minors under 18 in extrahazardous occupations.

In the hope that public opinion would respond to their call and that the necessary laws would be passed, the organizations represented at the conference agreed to work for adoption of these standards by the various State legislatures.

Utah was the only State in which the 16-year minimum age bill for employment was passed, although it was introduced in nine States, and in a dozen others there were similar measures looking toward the reduction of hours for child laborers.

ONLY TWO PASSED

Bills providing for minimum wages for minors and women, or for minors alone, were before the Legislatures of Connecticut, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Texas, and Utah, but so far New York and Utah are the only States in which such bills have been passed. Indiana passed a law granting double compensation to illegally employed minors.

This movement, thus hopefully begun, must be stimulated in the months to come, and public opinion, newly sensitive to the deplorable conditions surrounding the child workers, must not be allowed to sink into apathy.

Fortunately we have a leader to whom we look continuously for inspiration and example—Grace Abbott, Chief of the Children's Bureau, who for 15 years has been working untired and undiscouraged in defense of the Nation's children.

FIRST FEDERAL JOB

Her first Federal service was as Director of the Child Labor Division of the Children's Bureau, in which she was responsible for the administration of that first Federal child labor law, which forbade the interstate transportation of the products of child labor made in violation of Federal standards. This law and its successor were declared unconstitutional, thus leading to the passage of the proposed constitutional amendment.

In 1921 Miss Abbott became Chief of the Children's Bureau, and under her direction its services to parents, to children's agencies and institutions, and to State child-welfare departments have been invaluable, while day and night she has called attention to the evils of child labor and the necessity of safeguarding the health and the general welfare of the Nation's children, confident that, in the words of Theodore Roosevelt, who first urged upon Congress creation of the bureau she now heads, "Public sentiment, with its great corrective power, can only be aroused by full knowledge of the facts."

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 5240) to provide emergency relief with respect to home-mortgage indebtedness, to refinance home mortgages, to extend relief to the owners of homes occupied by them and who are unable to amortize their debt elsewhere, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, to increase the market for obligations of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

ALASKAN BOARD OF ROAD COMMISSIONERS

The bill (S. 743) to amend the act approved June 30, 1932, entitled "An act providing for the transfer of the duties authorized and authority conferred by law upon the Board of Road Commissioners in the Territory of Alaska to the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes" was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act approved June 30, 1932 (ch. 320, 47 Stat. 446; U.S.C., supp. VI, title 48, sec. 321c), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of the rules and regulations established hereunder shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined in a sum not exceeding $100 or be imprisoned for a period not exceeding 30 days, or both, and be adjudged to pay all costs of the proceedings."

DESERT-LAND ENTRIES

The bill (S. 157) to amend an act approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1548), entitled "An act to supplement the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1161), as amended by the act of March 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 458)", was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1548), entitled "An act to supplement the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1161), as amended by the act of March 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 458)", be amended to read as follows:

"That where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior with reference to any lawful pending desert-land entry made prior to July 1, 1925, under which the entryman or his duly qualified assignee under an assignment made prior to the date of this act has in good faith expended the sum of $3 per acre in the attempt to effect reclamation of the land, that there is no reasonable prospect that he would be able to secure water sufficient to effect reclamation of the irrigable land in his entry or any legal subdivision thereof, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, allow such entryman or assignee 90 days from notice within which to pay to the register of the United States land office 25 cents an acre for the land embraced in the entry and to file an election to perfect title to the entry under the provisions of this act, and thereafter within 1 year from the date of filing of such election to pay to the register the additional amount of 75 cents an acre, which shall entitle him to a patent for the land: Provided, That in case the final payment be not made within the time prescribed the entry shall be canceled and all money theretofore paid shall be forfeited."

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS

The bill (S. 604) amending section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes", approved December 29, 1916 (ch. 9, par. 1, 39 Stat. 862), and as amended February 28, 1931 (ch. 328, 46 Stat. 1454), was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, the bill has the approval of the Department of the Interior. A similar bill was passed during the last session of the Congress. It provides that, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, homesteads may be filed on lands upon which the production of oil has been reduced to a small quantity. We have one field in particular in Wyoming where there is a very limited production of oil, and the thought was that it would be well if the homestead entries were permitted to be made upon such lands. It is wholly discretionary with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KING. Will this in any manner interfere with the titles heretofore obtained by those who have entered upon the public domain?

Mr. CAREY. No; it simply permits the filing of homesteads for surface rights.

Mr. KING. Is it a recognition of the right of the Federal Government to retain the mineral deposits beneath the surface and to lease the surface?

Mr. CAREY. It relates only to the surface rights.

Mr. KING. Is it to apply to all public domain not otherwise entered?

Mr. CAREY. It would apply, but my purpose in introducing it was to take care of a situation in Wyoming, where there is a field from which there is a very small production of oil. The people who live there have almost ceased to operate the wells, and we thought it advisable that homestead entries be permitted upon those lands.

Mr. KING. Is it limited in its operation to the State of Wyoming?

Mr. CAREY. No; it is a general bill.

Mr. KING. I have had no opportunity to examine the bill.

Mr. CAREY. It is not limited to the State of Wyoming.

Mr. KING. I shall not object, but if upon examination I feel that there should be some further consideration, I shall ask the Senator to consent that it may be restored to the calendar for that purpose.

Mr. CAREY. That is satisfactory.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wyoming a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CAREY. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The second proviso of the bill reads:

That for the purposes of this section, lands withdrawn or reserved solely as valuable for oil or gas shall not be deemed to be appropriated or reserved.

Does that mean the homesteading of the lands would carry the oil rights except as to naval reserves?

Mr. CAREY. It has nothing to do with the naval reserves.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know it has not under the other proviso, but under the particular proviso which I have read does it mean that it carries oil and gas with the homestead rights?

Mr. CAREY. No; not those rights. It simply relates to the surface rights.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes", approved December 29, 1916 (ch. 9, par. 1, 39 Stat. 862), and as amended February 28, 1931 (ch. 328, 46 Stat. 1454), be amended to read as follows:

"From and after December 29, 1916, it shall be lawful for any person qualified to make entry under the homestead laws of the United States to make a stock-raising homestead entry for not exceeding 640 acres of unappropriated unreserved public lands in reasonably compact form: Provided, however, That the land so entered shall theretofore have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as 'stock-raising lands': Provided further, That for the purposes of this section lands withdrawn or reserved solely as valuable for oil or gas shall not be deemed to be appropriated or reserved: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to naval petroleum reserves and naval oil-shale reserves: And provided further, That should said lands be within the limits of the geological structure of a producing oil or gas field entry can only be allowed, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, in the absence of objection after due notice by the lessee or permittee, and any patent therefor shall contain a reservation to the United States of all minerals in said lands and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same."

LAND GRANTS IN WYOMING

The bill (S. 313) to amend section 5 of the act approved July 10, 1890 (28 Stat. 664), relating to the admission into the Union of the State of Wyoming, was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, to strike out "5" and insert "10", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act approved July 10, 1890 (28 Stat. 664), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That all lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be disposed of only at public sale, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of said schools. But said lands may, under such regulations as the legislature shall prescribe, be leased for mineral, grazing, agricultural, or other purposes, provided that the term of agricultural and grazing leases shall not exceed 10 years; mineral leases, including leases for exploration for oil and gas and the extraction thereof for a term not longer than 10 years; and leases for the development of hydroelectric power for a term not longer than 50 years; and such land shall not be subject to preemption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only."

Sec. 2. Anything in the said act approved July 10, 1890, inconsistent with the provisions of this act is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSPENSION OF ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

The bill (S. 7) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the numerals "1933", to insert:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply in the case of any claimant not entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1932: Provided further, That every claimant of any such mining claim, in order to obtain the benefits of this act, shall file, or cause to be filed, in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before 12 o'clock m. July 1, 1933, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this act, which notice shall state that the claimant, or claimants, were entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1932.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended as to all mining claims in the United States, including Alaska, during the year beginning at 12 o'clock m. July 1, 1932, and ending at 12 o'clock m. July 1, 1933: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply in the case of any claimant not entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1932: Provided further, That every claimant of any such mining claim, in order to obtain the benefits of this act, shall file or cause to be filed, in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before 12 o'clock m. July 1, 1933, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this act, which notice shall state that the claimant, or claimants, were entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1932.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOND AND STOCK PURCHASES BY RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The bill (S. 1094) to provide for the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of preferred stock and/or bonds and/or debentures of insurance companies was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, this measure is entirely too important to pass in this fashion. It provides for an appropriation of $100,000,000. While I dislike to object to anything offered by my friend the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], I will ask that the bill may go over, in order that it may be debated to some extent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, we are not passing bills by unanimous consent. One objection does not carry the bill over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule, it requires unanimous consent to consider a bill. A motion is in order to take it up notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well; I move that the bill be taken up for consideration, if that is necessary. I do not understand, however, that we are proceeding under unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, we are not proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement. If objection is made, the bill goes over; but the Senator can move at this particular time to proceed to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is calling the calendar under rule VIII. Where there is no objection, the bill may be considered and passed. If there is objection, any Senator may move to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (S. 1110) to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to refinance farm mortgages at lower rates of interest, to amend and supplement the Federal Farm Loan Act, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the text of the bill has become a part of the so-called "farm bill." I therefore ask that consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE WHALING INDUSTRY

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 15) extending to the whaling industry certain benefits granted under section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. CLARK. Yes; I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. McNARY. The whaling industry is rather an important one in Alaska and the Pacific Northwest. This bill simply makes the construction-loan fund of the Merchant Marine Act applicable to whaling vessels, the same as it is applicable to the merchant marine. It will assist that industry in carrying on this great American enterprise. It does not require any appropriation. It simply makes available the fund now available for the merchant marine.

The bill has the favorable report of the committee and the favorable report of the Shipping Board, and I hope the Senator will permit it to be considered and passed.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that I voted against reporting this bill out of the committee on the ground that it extends a subsidy, as I see the bill. I am opposed to subsidies, and therefore I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken about that. The bill simply permits this particular industry to apply for a loan.

Mr. CLARK. But that is equivalent to a subsidy, as the Senator well knows.

Mr. COPELAND. No; I do not think so, because this is an industry which, if encouraged, can meet its obligations. They have to put down 25 percent of the value of any construction they have and are permitted to borrow the rest from the Government on the security of the vessel; but the loan must be repaid, and that is the expectation. It is not a subsidy in the sense that the mail contracts are.

Mr. CLARK. Not in the same sense that the mail contracts are; but I think the Senator will agree that these loans have been repaid in a very small percentage of the cases in which they have been made. In other words, it is in effect a subsidy, although not nominally such.

Mr. COPELAND. Not a small percentage.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that this sort of loan not only goes to the ships themselves but it goes to the development of the American whaling industry. Unless we are going to repeal the law that permits money to be loaned to build ships, it will certainly be, it seems to me, a very great injustice to continue to refuse the whaling industry the chance to build itself up on the same terms that the merchant marine was permitted to do so, because there is a far better chance to repay the money out of the whaling industry than there is out of the merchant marine, in the condition it is in now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, does he know how much money has actually been returned by the shipping interests from these loans that have been made?

Mr. DILL. No; I am unable to give that information.

Mr. McKELLAR. My information is that it has been very little—practically none.

Mr. COPELAND. O Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken about that!

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator be good enough to get the figures and put them in the Record by the time this matter comes up the next time?

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be glad to do so. Let me say to the Senator that this is not for passenger ships.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know it is not.

Mr. COPELAND. This is not for lines of vessels. This is simply to encourage an industry which at this time, because of the demand for whale oil, can give employment and can establish a lagging industry—lagging because these people have not all the funds necessary to put it upon its feet. If we are going to help the railroads and the banks, certainly here is an industry which is entitled to exactly the same consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. We can certainly find a great many industries that are in the same situation if we look around us today. What I want to know, before we proceed to lend these funds to others, is what success we have had in having these funds repaid by those to whom we have already loaned them, and I should like to have the figures before I vote on this bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that I know how he feels about the lines of ships which we have supported and subsidized, but this is an industry entirely separate and apart from the shipping industry in the ordinary sense, and my judgment is that by passing the bill we will be encouraging a worthy industry and giving employment and assisting our country in that way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if no objection has been made, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 682) to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object to the consideration of this bill, I think it deserves more consideration than can be given at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H.R. 4220) for the protection of Government records was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 317) authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make advances to the reclamation fund was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill, as I recall, was incorporated in the so-called "farm bill." With that understanding I will ask that it be passed over until I can verify the impression which I have.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1272) to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. FESS. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

OTTO CHRISTIAN

The bill (S. 1288) for the relief of Otto Christian was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, let me state that this is one of a number of relief bills which have been reported from the Military Affairs Committee and which passed the Senate during the last Congress. All have been found to come within the rules generally followed by the committee in connection with such measures.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation from the Senator as to the reason for this special legislation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This bill gives an officer a chance for a hearing as to whether illness prevented him from passing an examination for promotion. The War Department itself says that the circumstances are such that he should have another chance.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to summon Otto Christian, late captain, Medical Corps of the Regular Army of the United States, before a retiring board for the purpose of a hearing of his case and to inquire into all facts touching upon the nature of his disabilities, to determine and report the disabilities which in its judgment have produced his incapacity and whether such disabilities were incurred during his active service in the Army and were in line of duty; that if the findings of such board are in the affirmative the President is further authorized, in his discretion, to nominate and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the said Otto Christian a captain in the Medical Corps and to place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for the officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said Otto Christian shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowance by the passage of this act.

DAN DAVIS

The bill (S. 531) for the relief of Dan Davis was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this is another of the bills which the committee examined carefully, and concluded that the circumstances justified its passage. The committee found that the faithful service rendered by the beneficiary of this bill was sufficient cause for the action proposed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has a similar bill heretofore been passed?

Mr. SHEPPARD. A similar bill has heretofore passed the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I notice that the person who is to be the beneficiary of the bill deserted from the military service of the Government. Are the circumstances such as to warrant removing the record of desertion and giving him a pension for life?

Mr. SHEPPARD. He had seen active service, had encountered a number of hardships, and deserted while ill, apparently not realizing the effect of what he was doing. That was what the committee found. They found extenuating circumstances connected with the matter; and we followed the usual rule under which we act in such cases.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who is familiar with the grounds on which exceptions are made, whether he has examined this bill and understands it to come within the rule he has invoked heretofore?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have not examined this bill. The next bill is one which I introduced, and that is recommended favorably by the War Department.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President—

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] introduced this bill, and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] reported it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is a case where this man enlisted in the Spanish-American War from North Dakota, served throughout that war with distinction, and received an honorable discharge. He reenlisted a couple of years later, and after some months became ill and deserted on account of the illness. He afterward tried to enlist in the World War and was kept out because of poor health. He thought it was because he had deserted. He went across into Canada, took his mother's maiden name, enlisted in the Canadian Engineers, and served 7 months overseas, receiving an honorable discharge.

Mr. WALSH. Was the dishonorable discharge given to him in the period of war?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; not during the war. It was right after the Spanish-American War. He reenlisted in June 1902, as I remember.

Mr. REED. And deserted in September 1902.

Mr. WALSH. Of course if a soldier has an honorable discharge during the war period, he has all the benefits of veterans' legislation. The only disadvantage sustained by a soldier who had an honorable service during the war, but who was dishonorably discharged after the war, is that he is not permitted to enter a soldiers' home.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Dan Davis, who was a member of Company L, Twenty-second Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 5th day of September 1902: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

MICHAEL J. MORAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 423) for the relief of Michael J. Moran, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Michael J. Moran, alias James Moran, who was a member of Troop F, Third Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 27th day of September 1876: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this bill is recommended by the War Department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE DALLES BRIDGE CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 804) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a right of way to The Dalles Bridge Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "authorized", to insert "and", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to grant to The Dalles Bridge Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Washington, its successors and assigns, a permanent right of way, in such location and under such terms and conditions as may be approved by the Secretary of War, over and across the Celilo Canal and other Government lands along the Columbia River near The Dalles, Oreg., for bridge and highway purposes, with full power to locate, construct, and operate a bridge, approaches and approach highways, and adjuncts: Provided, That the land shall not be used for other purposes and when the property shall cease to be so used it shall revert to the United States: Provided further, That the right to compel the removal of said bridge, approaches and approach highways, and adjuncts is hereby reserved in the Secretary of War, whenever he may determine the interests of the Government so requires, and which said removal is to be without expense to the Government as a condition of this grant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES J. JORDAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 707) for the relief of James J. Jordan, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "Corps", to insert "on February 19, 1901", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, James J. Jordan shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of the Thirty-third Company United States Coast Artillery Corps on February 19, 1901: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT A. MARQUARDT

The bill (S. 422) for the relief of Albert A. Marquardt was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will ask for an explanation of this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, a soldier of brilliant service in the World War was court-martialed for taking a raincoat and was dishonorably discharged. There were a number of raincoats hanging on the wall. This soldier had to leave quarters on a cold, rainy night. He took the coat for his own protection, with the idea of returning it. The committee felt, in view of his praiseworthy and at times daring service during the war, that he is entitled to this legislation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, may I read, for the benefit of the Senator from Utah, the last paragraph of the report of the officer in charge of the court martial?

In view of Lieutenant Marquardt's excellent record as an officer of the Three Hundred and Tenth Infantry in active service against the enemy, as well as the fact that this officer, at the age of 42 years, married, the father of four children, the owner of a farm, and eligible for a commission as chaplain, volunteered for service in the line of the Army, I join heartily in the recommendation that he be pardoned, restored to duty, and given an honorable discharge.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "no", to strike out "bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance" and insert "compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Albert A. Marquardt, who was a member of Company F, Three Hundred and Tenth Regiment United States Infantry, Seventy-eighth Division, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 4th day of November 1918: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR-TIME RANK FOR RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS

The bill (S. 593) to amend the act entitled "An act to give war-time rank to retired officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and/or Coast Guard of the United States", approved June 21, 1930, so as to give class B officers of the Army benefits of such act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania explain this bill?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in 1930 we passed a bill which, in effect, gave a brevet title, without increase of pay, to all officers honorably retired from the Army after service in the World War. In other words, if a regular was a brigadier general during the war, and after the war was put back to his regular rank of lieutenant colonel—to take a typical case—and was then retired, he would be entitled to be addressed as "Brig. Gen. So-and-so." It carried no privileges, no pay, no compensation or allowances of any sort; but it meant a good deal to the pride and self-respect of these officers.

It was discovered after the bill went into effect that those officers who were retired under the class B provision of our national defense law, without any reproach to them, without any turpitude or dishonor or malfeasance on their part, were ruled to be not entitled to the benefits of the act. There are 27 officers of the Army who were retired under the class B provision at a rank lower than they occupied during the World War. This gives those officers the right to assume that title.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not impose any financial obligation on the Government?

Mr. REED. Absolutely not.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, officers who were retired under the class B provision do not draw the same rate of retired pay that officers draw who were retired for length of service.

Mr. REED. That is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does this in anywise change that?

Mr. REED. Not in the least; no. There is a proviso in the law of 1930 that it shall not in any way be construed to increase the pay or allowances of these officers.

Mr. CONNALLY. What I mean, though, is this: An officer who retires after 30 years for disability gets three-fourths pay.

Mr. REED. That is right.

Mr. CONNALLY. An officer who is retired under the class B law, as it is called, does not get three-fourths pay, but he gets a percentage based upon the number of years that he was actually in the service.

Mr. REED. He would get the three-fourths pay only if he had been in the service for 30 years.

Mr. CONNALLY. This bill, then, will not disturb that?

Mr. REED. No; it will not disturb that at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. It will not increase the charge on the Treasury at all?

Mr. REED. Not one cent, I assure the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. What good does it do, then?

Mr. REED. It is a matter of pride.

Mr. CONNALLY. Just the rank? Is that all?

Mr. REED. Yes; it is merely a reminder of the higher rank which they held during the war.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to give war-time rank to retired officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and/or Coast Guard of the United States", approved June 21, 1930, is amended by striking out the words "except those retired under the provisions of section 24b of the act of June 4, 1920."

FRANCIS N. DOMINICK

The bill (S. 727) for the relief of Francis N. Dominick was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ROBERT J. SMITH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 772) for the relief of Robert J. Smith, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines Robert J. Smith shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on October 6, 1899: Provided, That no back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

ROBERT J. FOSTER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 166) for the relief of Robert J. Foster, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, to strike out the words "15th day of August" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "26th day of October", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Robert J. Foster, who was a member of Company C, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 26th day of October 1901: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROLANDO B. MOFFETT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 248) for the relief of Rolando B. Moffett, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Rolando B. Moffett, who was a member of Company H, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 30th day of September 1880: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

SAMSON DAVIS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 381) to correct the military record of Samson Davis, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out the words "Company A, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry", and to insert in lieu thereof the words "the Hospital Corps, United States Army", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Samson Davis, who was a member of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 29th day of August 1902.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think there has been a clerical error in that bill. It ought to carry the usual proviso. I move to add at the end of the bill the words "Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Samson Davis."

BERYL M. McHAM

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 558) for the relief of Beryl M. McHam, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the numerals "1920", to insert a colon and the words "Provided, That no pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Beryl M. McHam, who served in Company C, Twenty-sixth Regiment, and Company C, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, World War, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 7th day of July 1920: Provided, That no pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM BURKE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1204) for the relief of William Burke, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William Burke, who was a member of Company C, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 6th day of August 1901: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

LEONARD THEODORE BOICE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1287) for the relief of Leonard Theodore Boice.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that, again, fails to include the proviso. I move that there be added at the end of the bill the words—

Provided, That no pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that the officer referred to in this bill is dead, and that the object of the bill is to make it possible for his widow to receive an allowance of a few hundred dollars. If the amendment proposed by the Senator is added in this case, the purpose of the bill will be defeated.

Mr. REED. Then the amendment is worded incorrectly. It ought to include the words "excepting active-duty pay."

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. Without objection, the vote will be reconsidered, and the clerk will state the amendment as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to insert at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, excepting active-duty pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CURTIS JETT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 792) for the relief of Curtis Jett, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Curtis Jett, who was a member of Troop I, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private on July 23, 1898: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

SUPERVISION OF FOREIGN COMMERCIAL TRANSACTIONS

The bill (S. 882) to provide for the more effective supervision of foreign commercial transactions, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, this bill is one in which I am very greatly interested, and it is legislation urgently needed and required. However, on last Friday, I think it was, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] presented, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, a bill of similar import, which represents the administration's views. I do not want to interfere with the administration's program, although I desire that the legislation shall be hastened with the utmost celerity.

Inasmuch as the Senator from Florida is absent, I do not feel that I ought to press this particular measure of mine, which is of like character with that which he has presented. So I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF IN EXISTING BANKING EMERGENCY

The bill (S. 1425) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes", approved March 9, 1933, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COUZENS. Let that go over. The Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency is not in the Chamber at present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT

The bill (H.R. 4606) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this is a bill of huge proportions. It appropriates $500,000,000. I do not imagine the able Senator from New York desires to have it considered at this time. Indeed, I do not think that in the remaining time during the morning hour we could give proper consideration to the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that this bill is almost identical with a bill which the Senate has already approved, after a discussion covering a period of 3 days. I can state briefly the reason why it is here.

Mr. McNARY. I think it is similar technically, or in language, but it carries an additional appropriation of $500,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; this identical bill, with one or two minor amendments which were made by the House, has already passed the Senate. The reason why it is back here again is that when the Senate bill reached the House a point was made that since it provided for a bond issue the bill ought to originate in the House. Therefore the same bill was reintroduced in the House, was passed there, and is back here. Under those circumstances I did not think it would lead to any discussion here at all, because the amendments do not relate to the substance of the bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. The Committee on Banking and Currency compared this measure very carefully with the bill which originally passed the Senate, as the Senator from New York states, and there is really only a minor difference as to the difference in the method of distribution of the $500,000,000 among the States. I think the amendments can be easily explained in a very few minutes, because the whole field has been covered before.

Mr. McNARY. When I read the bill hastily on the calendar I thought it was for an additional appropriation.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; it is a bill which we discussed here; and the only change which might be regarded as a substantive change is that the original bill provided a fund of $200,000,000, which was to be distributed by the so-called "matching process"; that is, whenever a State had expended a certain sum over a period of 3 months, to that State was to be advanced one third of that sum out of a $200,000,000 fund. Then the $300,000,000 fund was to be regarded as an emergency fund, to be given to the States in addition to the one third if need were shown. Instead of $200,000,000 being appropriated for matching purposes, the fund was increased to $250,000,000, and the emergency fund was decreased from $300,000,000 to $250,000,000. Outside of that the changes are minor. I really did not think it would lead to any debate or discussion of any kind, because the Senate by a very substantial vote approved the legislation some days ago.

Mr. McNARY. Does this bill have a unanimous report from the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. WAGNER. It has been unanimously reported from that committee.

Mr. McNARY. It does not increase the financial load to the Government?

Mr. WAGNER. No more than we increased it in the original measure.

Mr. McNARY. I mean, it does not increase the obligation over and above that which was considered by the Senate previously, some weeks ago?

Mr. WAGNER. No; it is the same sum exactly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oregon will not object to the consideration of the bill, for the further reason that the funds available for this purpose under the old act are rapidly diminishing, and it is imperative that additional funds be made available. In view of the fact that the Senate committee has recommended certain minor amendments, it becomes necessary for the bill to go back to the House, and it may be necessary to have a conference. In view of the fact that we have already thrashed out all of the major issues contained in the legislation, and the Senate has acted, I trust the Senator will let us take it up this morning.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not going to be particularly stubborn about the matter. I simply want to know how we are proceeding. I am advised that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is to offer a very substantial amendment to the measure. I do not want to have the bill considered if there are to be several amendments offered.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I had a request to offer a minor amendment to the bill. It is not so very important, I think, but it is worth while, I presume. It was to include the Virgin Islands under section 7, to insert the words "Virgin Islands" after the words "Puerto Rico", so as to make that section read:

SEC. 7. As used in the foregoing provisions of this act, the term "State" shall include the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands; and the term "Governor" shall include the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to that, but I am advised that the Senator from Arizona intends to offer an amendment. Should the bill be taken up, and an amendment be offered, it would be too late then to request that it go over. If there are to be amendments offered of a substantial character, in view of the necessary absence of some of the Members of the Senate on this side, I should have to object to the consideration of the bill this morning until we had an opportunity to study the amendments to the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I inquire whether there is any other Senator who proposes to offer an amendment to the bill? I think the Senator from Arizona is the only one who desires to do so. I might say to the Senator that, with my knowledge of procedure in the Senate, if this bill were coming up for the first time, I would not even suggest that it be considered in this short period of time; but we have discussed the bill in all its details.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arizona is to offer an amendment, I suggest that he let us know what it is.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I can state very briefly that the proposal I intend to offer is to permit the American National Red Cross to continue, as it has been doing in past years, the distribution of flour made from wheat or other grain products. It will not take me more than 10 minutes to explain the proposal to the Senate, and the Senate could vote on it immediately.

Mr. McNARY. That may be true; it may be a very worthy project, and personally I probably would have no objection, but there are Members on this side who would like to consider the amendment before it is voted on. It involves the expenditure of $40,000,000. Let me say to the Senator further that there is no more Government wheat left. All of that which heretofore has been a reservoir from which we have taken the wheat and turned it over to the Red Cross has been disposed of.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I am sure it would not take more than 20 minutes to dispose of the matter. I can very briefly state what the amendment provides, and the Senate can vote on it at once. I think the Senate is perfectly competent to pass on it right now.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that, but the point I am making is simply this: Whatever my views may be, I could not permit a vote on this $40,000,000 proposition, which has never been before the Senate, with so many absent from the Senate at this hour. It is not a fair way to legislate.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In view of the serious consequences which may follow the suggested objection of the distinguished Senator from Oregon, will not the Senator from Arizona generously consider withholding his amendment, and offering it as a separate bill? The need for action is urgent. The enactment of this measure should not be delayed another day.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, if it is the judgment of the three authors of the bill that I should do that, of course I will follow their suggestion.

Mr. WAGNER. I join in the request to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not considering that amendment only. I object to consideration of the measure with so many absent. If the Senator wants to offer the amendment and let the bill go over until tomorrow during the morning hour, that would meet my suggestion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator who has the floor will yield, I want to add to the appeals already made to the Senator from Arizona that he permit us to get this bill through this morning, because of the urgent need of supplementing the funds available. So far as any individual Senator can do so, I promise the Senator that I will be glad to assist him in getting consideration for his bill, but I think the proposal should be in a separate bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator from Oregon, then, that at the request of the three authors of the bill I will not offer my amendment if he will permit the bill to come up.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the statements of the Senator from New York and others that the bill conforms to the legislation which formerly went through the Senate, I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments. The first amendment of the committee was, on page 3, line 16, to strike out "not to exceed $8,500" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "to be fixed by the President at not to exceed $10,000", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby created a Federal Emergency Relief Administration, all the powers of which shall be exercised by a Federal Emergency Relief Administrator (referred to in this act as the "Administrator") to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Administrator shall receive a salary to be fixed by the President at not to exceed $10,000, and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses within the limitations prescribed by law for civilian employees in the executive branch of the Government. The Federal Emergency Relief Administration and the office of Federal Emergency Relief Administrator shall cease to exist upon the expiration of 2 years after the date of enactment of this act, and the unexpended balance on such date of any funds made available under the provisions of this act shall be disposed of as the Congress may by law provide.

Mr. BRATTON. I desire to ask the Senator from New York a question with reference to this bill. I am moved to do so by reason of a telegram received from a constituent in New Mexico who is deeply interested in it. The telegram reads:

If newspaper statements correct, bill substituted by House would make exclusive basis allotment Federal relief funds to October 1 the ability of the State to put up $3 for every dollar allotted by Federal Government. This absolutely impossible New Mexico. If this provision retained, would mean thousands of people hungry in New Mexico coming months.

Does this bill contain a provision to that effect?

Mr. WAGNER. It does not. It is not limited to a matching fund.

Mr. BRATTON. I did not so understand the bill but "to make assurance doubly sure", I desired to obtain an expression from the Senator from New York who is one of the authors of the proposed legislation.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, before this amendment shall be adopted I desire to ask what is the reason why it is necessary to strike out the salary limitation and to increase the salary from $8,500 to $10,000?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I may say in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Alabama that, in the first place, this bill contemplates very important administrative functions to be performed by the person selected to administer the act. In other words, he is going to exercise a wide discretion over a fund amounting to $500,000,000. Therefore, it seemed to the members of the committee that to fix the salary at $8,500, which would in turn be subject to a 15 percent cut under the general economy act, would reduce the salary to the point where it might be impossible to get the type and caliber of person who certainly ought to be selected to discharge such an important administrative function as is provided for in the bill. Therefore the committee raised the figures from $8,500 to $10,000, which, subject to a 15-percent cut, would make a net salary of $8,500 per annum.

Mr. BLACK. So that I understand, then, the Senator's idea is that there should be one employee at $10,000, which would really make a net pay of $8,500?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. That is doubtless correct, but I desire to ask the Senator if he does not think it would be wise, by reason of various complaints which have come to many Senators about salaries, to limit the $10,000 salary to one rather than to leave it wide open?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not understand that it is left wide open. If the Senator will note the language as proposed to be amended, he will find that it reads:

The administrator—

That is, the person referred to all through the bill as the person who will be appointed to administer the act—shall receive a salary to be fixed by the President at not to exceed $10,000.

Mr. BLACK. Is there any further limitation?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 4, if the Senator will refer to lines 6 and 7, he will see that the bill permits the administrator to fix the compensation of certain officers and experts, and the salary limitation is placed at not to exceed $8,000 per annum.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, why does the committee think that we could not get a man to administer this proposed law without raising his salary to $10,000?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator ought to say raising it to a net sum of $8,500.

I may say to the Senator that, of course, probably persons might be obtained for work of this kind who would not expect any salary at all. On the other hand, there are persons, as the Senator knows, who have no private income, and the committee felt that in the administration of a fund so large as this we would want to secure the best-equipped person to carry on the work, and that, in the end, in order to get the right person, it would be well worth the difference, say, between $7,000 and $8,500.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin must know that there are literally hundreds—I think, thousands—of men who ordinarily get large salaries but who today would be delighted to have an opportunity to get a salary of $8,500 with a 15 percent cut; men of outstanding ability; men of large administrative experience. It seems to me we are setting a bad precedent in these hard times when we provide salaries of $10,000 a year. I do not see any need of it. We shall have coming before us pretty soon a railroad bill providing for a coordinator who will try to reorganize the railroads of the United States. I have consistently fought in the preliminary discussion of that legislation to keep down any high salaries. I do not believe at this time we are justified in paying high salaries, and I do not see any need of the Senate committee's amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington speaks of a $10,000 salary, and once more I want to point out that it will be a net salary of $8,500. Furthermore, I may say in response to the Senator's suggestion that there are hundreds, if not thousands, of persons who could be obtained to administer this proposed act; but it embraces a special field, and the person undertaking to administer it should be one who has training, experience, and character. We felt that the President ought not to be hampered in the selection by providing a salary below $8,500. It was the judgment of the committee that that was not an exorbitant salary for a person charged with the tremendous responsibilities which will be imposed upon the administrator under this bill; and to insist upon a reduction of $1,500 in the salary of the official who is to be charged with administering a fund which reaches $500,000,000, it seems to me would be certainly pennywise and pound foolish.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, we passed a bill here last Friday at one gulp authorizing an unlimited number of $10,000 jobs in connection with the administration of the farm bill. It seems to me, as the Senator says, it would be pennywise and pound foolish to be raising that point at this time in the case of one official charged with the administration of as important and large a fund as is provided by the pending bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I may say for myself in behalf of the other Senators who have been interested in this proposed legislation that it has been our constant desire from the beginning, as a careful reading of the bill will show, in every possible way to limit and cut down the cost of administration in order that the largest amount of this money should ultimately reach those who are in distress. We have provided that all except a few experts shall be under the Civil Service. We have done everything we possibly could to circumscribe the administrative cost. We fixed a very infinitesimal percentage as the total limit beyond which the administrative cost should not go. I hope the Senator will permit the President to have a sufficient amount of leeway to enable him to get the right man for this job, for if there ever was a bill drawn on the theory that it must have competent administration it is this one.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether it is not true that we also carefully examined the possibility of securing some rarely qualified administrator, even discussing that subject with representatives of the President? We have always had in view securing the services of an administrator who would most efficiently function under this proposed act and who, by virtue of his experience, could save far more than any salary that could be paid him.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I see no occasion to raise the salary of $8,500 fixed by the House in this bill passed by it and now being considered by the Senate. The House fixed the salary at $8,500 per annum. The Senate is endeavoring to raise it to $10,000. I believe in these times when Congress is at least making an effort toward effectuating economy that we should force some of it on the higher salaries.

I was against the idea of giving unlimited salaries in connection with the bill which we passed last week. This is not the day of high salaries in any line of endeavor, but some want to maintain high salaries for a lot of officials. To me it does not seem consistent that we should constantly be trimming small salaries, that some Senators should be constantly nagging at the veterans of the country, many of whom are getting only $12.50 a month, and cutting off their compensation, or reducing it in other instances 25 percent or 30 percent, and denying them the privilege of hospitalization when bedridden. Yet when it comes to the salary of some official, such as the one provided for in this bill, it is proposed to give a big salary just as though the country were prosperous and that everything was going along well and lovely in this country. As a rule, those who want to give big salaries even during the time of depression can predominate. But I submit the policy is all wrong.

I hope the Senate will cut down the salary to $8,500 a year, which is the amount fixed by the House, and, if we do that, in all probability, the same person will occupy the position who otherwise would. I have often in the Senate seen claim made that we could not get an efficient person unless we fixed his salary at ten or twelve thousand dollars per annum, and I will guarantee, if a check be made of such cases, that in 75 percent of the instances the same person occupied the place at the increased salary. Yet some would have us think that we are going to lose their efficient and wonderful services unless we add $1,000 to $2,000 more to an already high salary, considering the depressed condition of our country.

This item involves only one salary, and that in itself does not amount to much, but the question of the principle involved and the question of the attitude of Congress in dealing with other financial matters bulk large. I do not know how it is in most of the States, but back in my State I do not find that the people approve of high salaries not being reduced or that those drawing them should not make equal contribution in any reduction that may occur while all kinds of minor and inconsequential items of expense are trimmed to the very bone.

I hear a great deal from my State about 8 and 10 and 15 thousand dollar salaries that some here insist in maintaining. I dare say other Senators do not; that their people are well satisfied to keep up the high salaries and to cut the lower salaries and cut off the soldiers from many benefits previously enjoyed. Are they? Are they? I get a different sentiment expressed from the people that I happen in part to represent. I hope the item will remain just as it is in the House bill. The salary there fixed was ample. You can get the best men in the country now for $5,000 or $6,000 per annum.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President—

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield the floor.

Mr. McNARY. The House provision called for $8,500 per annum?

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. And the committee increased it to $10,000. Was that because of the 15 percent reduction in the economy bill?

Mr. WAGNER. That, of course, influenced the committee in fixing the higher maximum.

Mr. McNARY. So that the net amount of money that would go to the official would be $8,500?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; that is really what the House fixed, and I assume that the House did not take into consideration the 15-percent reduction. I think it was in their minds to make the compensation equal to the salary of Senators and Members of the House.

Mr. McNARY. It occurs to me that the amendment adopted by the Senate committee conforms to the intention of the House.

Mr. WAGNER. That is my view of it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WAGNER. I will be through in a moment. There is very little, Mr. President, that can be added to what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has stated, except that I think the Senate appreciates that we are imposing upon the administrator under this bill one of the most difficult tasks imaginable. As a matter of fact, we have got to have somebody in the office who has not only ability but has had experience in the distribution of relief funds, for here is involved the task of distributing throughout the country as a gift from the Federal Government $500,000,000. The one who administers this fund has got to have knowledge of the conditions in various localities, of the needs, and of the social problems involved. I have made inquiry as to what the States are paying to the experts employed by them, and I will say that most of the States have not permitted politics to interfere with the administration of relief funds and they have employed experts, men who have made a study of the social problems involved, to head their relief committees, and four of the States are now paying higher salaries for the administration of merely State funds than we are proposing to pay the one who shall have placed upon him the tremendous task that we are imposing upon the administrator of this proposed act. So I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to say a word or so in support of the amendment. Let me remind the Senator from Florida that when the economy bill was passed during the last Congress all salaries were limited to $10,000, with the exception of salaries paid to members of the Cabinet. As I recall, the only exception was the Director of Veterans' Administration. The Banking and Currency Committee inquired into the matter when this bill was pending before the committee and became convinced that it was the intention of the House that the Administrator should be paid a salary of $8,500. By the language of the bill he is given discretion to appoint State administrators to handle the funds covered by the bill. Unlike the former act, which provided for loans, it is provided now that there shall be direct advances. I think if we can visualize the duties and the importance of the position of administrator under this bill, having in his control and discretion $500,000,000, we can agree that the salary of $8,500 provided by the bill is not excessive.

As to the other employees, provision is made that in no case shall any employee other than the director receive a salary in excess of $8,500. The 15-percent cut will apply to the $8,500. That means that the assistant to the administrator cannot receive more than $7,225. I think under the circumstances the committee is wise in fixing the salary as it is provided in the bill, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I think there is greater justification for this particular increase, more than in nine tenths of the other cases where salaries, in spite of any opposition, have been fixed by Congress in excess of $8,000, $9,000, or $10,000. Still I do not approve of the policy of maintaining a high standard of salaries for those in the higher positions and not cutting their salaries proportionately when we consider the necessities and the needs of the families of the country in the Government service who are drawing the smaller salaries, say, $1,200 to $1,800 per annum. I have contended here upon several occasions that a person who receives a salary of $2,000 a year and has a cut of $325 from that salary can much less afford that reduction than a person who is getting a $12,000 a year salary can afford a reduction of $2,500 or $3,000 per annum and still have left a salary of $9,000 or more. That is the basis of my contention.

Of course, some do not believe in the idea of increasing the percentage of cut as we reach the larger salaries. They would have them continue to draw, say, from $7,000 to $12,000 annually. I believe we should adopt such a policy as that. In the Government's distress I believe those able to pay should pay most. I think that the salaries, generally speaking, fixed during prosperous times were quite liberal, far more liberal to those receiving the higher salaries than to those who received the smaller salaries. During my 16 years of service in the Senate I have found it far more difficult to obtain an increase of $50 or $100 a year for a person receiving a salary of $1,500 to $2,000 a year than it has been to secure an increase from $10,000 to $12,000 or $15,000. As a rule, the $8,000 and $10,000 and $12,000 salaries are readily and quickly increased. A suggestion of an increase in such a salary has gone through like the machinery had been perfectly oiled in advance. However, I opposed many of them. In prosperous times, when there was some agitation favoring a minor increase in the smaller salaries, there would be debate and contention for 2 or 3 or 4 days in the Senate, and the little fellow would do well to get an increase of $60 to $100 per annum.

I agree that in this particular instance there is more justification for the increase than ordinarily, but we have all seen many instances where salaries of $7,000 or $8,000 or $10,000 are paid to people who were not previously receiving more than $3,000 or $4,000. I have seen agitation in the Senate and I have seen legislation enacted following statements to the effect that we had to pay larger salaries to obtain the services of certain people upon certain boards or in certain bureaus, and then we have seen those positions as a rule filled by people who previously were not receiving half the salaries fixed by the Government. I am contending against the general principle that in this time of depression and distress, in this time when the Government has deemed it proper even to take away in some instances a part of the very small compensation paid to soldiers, to withdraw hospitalization from the soldiers in many cases. In such times we should guard well and wisely the question of dealing with the higher and larger salaries. Do not cry economy, economy, and then have no economy in legislating on the big, fat salary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, on page 4, line 2, after the word "and", to insert "subject to the provisions of the Civil Service laws, appoint, and, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, fix the compensation of", so as to make the clause read:

(b) The Administrator may appoint and fix the compensation of such experts and, subject to the provisions of the Civil Service laws, appoint, and, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, fix the compensation of such other officers and employees as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act—

And so forth.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, does this mean that everybody employed by such an organization has to be on the Civil Service rolls or one who has previously been discharged and is still on the Civil Service rolls?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I explain the situation? This is the language in the bill exactly as it passed the Senate originally. When the bill was up for consideration in the House an amendment was offered striking out the words which are now in the bill, and the result was that everything was thrown under the Civil Service. The language as now written in the bill will require all persons in a clerical capacity to be taken from the Civil Service roll, but would permit the administrator to appoint whatever small number of experts he may need without regard to the Civil Service. In other words, the amendment is less restricted than the text of the bill provided as it passed the House.

Mr. DILL. My understanding is that unless the statute specifically exempts employees authorized they must come under the Civil Service.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true.

Mr. DILL. The experts are still not exempt.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; they are. The administrator may appoint and fix the compensation of such experts.

Mr. DILL. But it does not say the experts are not subject to the Civil Service Act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The way the language is drawn I believe it does, if the Senator will read it carefully. This is the language commonly used. It is very clear that they are not to be subject to the Civil Service requirement, because the affirmative declaration is that all others are to be so subject, and this makes the exception. As the bill passed the House everybody had to come under the Civil Service provision.

Mr. DILL. Under an Executive order issued by former President Hoover the selection of new employees from the Civil Service came not from new lists by examination but from former employees who had been discharged. What is being done here is to compel the Board to take employees who have been dropped from the rolls of other departments. That is the effect of it.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not know whether that is the effect or not; but even if it is, I do not think it would be a serious objection, would it? If originally the employees acquired their position through a competitive examination and then through the economy program they have been discharged, I should think they ought to have a prior right. However, I do not think we provide here one way or the other.

Mr. DILL. That condition exists under the Civil Service Executive order issued by the President. I think these special organizations ought not to be hampered by the Civil Service. They are temporary in their nature and exist only for a short period. I think it is a serious mistake to hamper the men in charge of these special organizations by compelling them to follow the Civil Service plan. We have not done it with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation generally. We have not done it with various other organizations.

Mr. WAGNER. I am not so sure that we should not have done it.

Mr. DILL. We could not have done any worse, I agree; but the whole theory is that in these temporary organizations the officers ought to be free to choose men for the particular positions.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I simply want to go on record as in favor of all Government employees being under the Civil Service. The incompetency of many temporary Government departments is due in large part to the fact that they are not under the Civil Service. If we want competent employees, we are more likely to get them through the Civil Service than through favoritism or political influence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 6, after the word "act", insert the words "but such compensation shall not exceed in any case the sum of $8,000", so as to make the sentence read:

The Administrator may appoint and fix the compensation of such experts and, subject to the provisions of the Civil Service laws, appoint, and in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, fix the compensation of such other officers and employees as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, but such compensation shall not exceed in any case the sum of $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency is, on page 4, line 16, after the word "purpose", to insert the following new sentence:

The Administrator may, in his discretion, appoint a State administrator in any State or States where in his judgment more effective and efficient cooperation between the States and Federal authorities may be secured in carrying out the purposes of this act, and shall prescribe rules and regulations for that purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee. In line 16, after the word "discretion", I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the words "appoint a State administrator" and insert in lieu the words, "under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, assume control of the administration", so as to read:

The Administrator may, in his discretion, under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, assume control of the administration in any State or States—

And so forth. The first thing the amendment does is to allow the administrator to proceed under rules and regulations prescribed by the President. The next thing, instead of simply appointing a State administrator, the amendment allows him to assume control of administration under rules and regulations prescribed by the President.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not understand the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. The amendment proposes to strike out the words "appoint a State administrator" and insert in lieu thereof words so it will then read:

The administrator may in his discretion, under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, assume control of administration in any State or States—

And so forth.

Mr. WAGNER. I think we can accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 16, after the word "discretion", the Senator from Kentucky proposes to amend the committee amendment by striking out the words "appoint a State administrator" and insert in lieu thereof the words "under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, assume control of the administration."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to and without objection the committee amendment as amended is agreed to. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 8, the Senator from Florida proposes to amend by striking out the word "and", before "Puerto Rico", and after the words "Puerto Rico" insert the words "and Virgin Islands", so as to read:

As used in the foregoing provisions of this act, the term "State" will include the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands; and the term "governor" shall include the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WAGNER. There is no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am not quite sure that I understood the answer my colleague made to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON]. I find, on page 5, at the bottom of the page, the statement that—

Each State shall be entitled to receive grants equal to one third of the amount expended by such State—

And so forth.

Mr. WAGNER. That applies to the fund of $250,000,000, which is set aside for a period of time to be used in the matching process; that is, for every $3 the State has expended during a period of 3 months prior to the application the State will be entitled as a matter of right to receive $1. In addition thereto, however, there is another fund of $250,000,000, which we call "the emergency fund"; and if the one third is insufficient to meet the needs of the States they may apply for a further allowance under the $250,000,000 provision by establishing the need for the fund.

Mr. COPELAND. Then the anxiety that the mayor of the city of New York had is quite unnecessary?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Because under the bill as written the city, through the State, would get back one dollar for each three spent, and then in addition would get funds from the other section of the bill?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; and, besides, I think it carries out his suggestion. Let me give my colleague an illustration. If during a period of 3 months New York City has spent $9,000,000, it then will be entitled to $3,000,000 in the succeeding 3 months under this matching provision, so that the city will only have to expend $6,000,000. Therefore he is getting 2 for 1, really, for future expenditure—exactly what he sought.

Mr. COPELAND. In order that the illustration may be correct, I desire to let the Senate know that the city of New York is spending $7,500,000 per month for relief now.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. The whole State, as a matter of fact, is spending $14,000,000 a month for relief.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President—

Mr. WAGNER. I desire to follow that up. If that one third is insufficient, the State may still apply for a portion of the $250,000,000, and the amount allowed depends upon the need of the State. That is where the State of New Mexico will be cared for.

Mr. BRATTON. The provision to which the Senator now refers is on page 6, line 8, subparagraph (c)?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BRATTON. And that provision relates to $250,000,000?

Mr. WAGNER. Two hundred and fifty million dollars. As to the distribution of that fund, there are no restrictions except that no State can receive more than 15 percent, and the State must establish the need for the fund.

Mr. BRATTON. That was my understanding of the legislation; but a misconception has gone throughout the country. It has provoked a great deal of anxiety; and I think it is a real service to correct that misconception on the floor of the Senate, so that the country may know that a State that is unable to comply with the matching provision is not excluded from relief, but may obtain relief under the other provision of the legislation.

Mr. COPELAND. May we not say, also, that to the $250,000,000 in the second section will be added any remnant of the first $250,000,000 not taken by the States?

Mr. WAGNER. That is in the discretion of the President.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is provided under subdivision (d) on page 6.

Mr. WAGNER. If the President so directs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 687) providing for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida at Orlando, Fla., was announced as next in order.

Mr. DILL. Let that go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. DILL. I am opposed to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MOTHER'S DAY

The resolution (S.Res. 16) favoring an expression on Mother's Day of our love and reverence for motherhood, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. I ask to have the resolution printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

The resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas by House Joint Resolution 263, approved and signed by President Wilson, May 8, 1914, the second Sunday in May of each year has been designated as Mother's Day for the expression of our love and reverence for the mothers of our country; and

Whereas there are throughout our land today an unprecedentedly large number of mothers and dependent children who, because of unemployment or loss of their bread earners, are lacking many of the necessities of life: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon our citizens to express, on Mother's Day this year, our love and reverence for motherhood;

(a) By the customary display of the United States flag on all Government buildings, homes, and other suitable places;

(b) By the usual tokens and messages of affection to our mothers; and

(c) By making contributions, in honor of our mothers, through our churches or other fraternal and welfare agencies, for the relief and welfare of such mothers and children as may be in need of the necessities of life.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that two telegrams, one from Bishop McConnell of the Methodist Church, and another from Mr. Tuttle, ex-district attorney of New York, may also be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N.Y., April 27, 1933.

Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND,

Senate Building:

Greatly appreciate your contribution to unemployment relief by means of Senate Resolution 16. Earnestly hope you will push for early passage, thereby give necessary time for effective organization on the part of churches and other cooperating agencies.

FRANCIS J. MCCONNELL.

NEW YORK, N.Y., April 27, 1933.

Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND,

Senate Building, Washington, D.C.:

Greatly appreciate your leadership and effort to secure early adoption Senate Resolution 16. Believe if adopted early enough to enable churches to make proper presentation it will result in life-saving contribution and relief of much suffering among our unemployed.

CHARLES H. TUTTLE.

AMENDMENT OF EMERGENCY BANKING ACT

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, while I was called out of the Chamber, Senate bill 1425 was reached and some Senator suggested that it go over. I do not see any objection to the bill. It is recommended by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and by the Secretary of the Treasury. It simply provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may take other stock in national banking associations. I think the idea, when it was reached, was that it had to do with the securities bill; but it has no relation at all to that measure.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think it would be unfortunate to recur to the bill at this time, in view of the fact that so many Senators are absent. I think it was the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] who asked that it go over; and during his absence I should have to insist on the objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it was the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] who suggested that it go over, because he thought it had reference to his bill, S. 882; but that is a different matter entirely.

Mr. McNARY. I know; but in the absence of the Senators I shall have to insist on my objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well.

THE DALLES BRIDGE CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1278) to amend an act (Public, No. 431, 72d Cong.) to identify The Dalles Bridge Co., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act to authorize the construction of certain bridges over navigable waters of the United States, approved March 4, 1933 (Public, No. 431, 72d Cong.), be amended by adding to section 2a the words "a Washington corporation", immediately following the words "The Dalles Bridge Co."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has this bill any relation to the one previously considered on the calendar?

Mr. DILL. No; this bill relates to a bill passed in the last Congress. The other bill relates to another phase of this subject.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 875) to provide for the furnishing of information and the supervision of traffic in investment securities in interstate commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill is so important that I presume the Senator from Florida does not want to have it taken up at this time with so many Senators absent.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a very important bill, and cannot be disposed of in 5 minutes.

Mr. KING. That is what I supposed. I suggest, therefore, that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H.R. 4589) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF PROBATION LAW

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1131) to amend the probation law, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 18, after the word "after", to strike out "his discharge from probationary supervision" and insert "the probationary period", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of March 4, 1925, entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a probation system in the United States courts, except in the District of Columbia" (U.S.C., title 18, sec. 725), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. That when directed by the court the probation officer shall report to the court, with a statement of the conduct of the probationer while on probation. The court may thereupon discharge the probationer from further supervision and may terminate the proceedings against him, or may extend the probation or modify the condition of his probation, as shall seem advisable.

"At any time within the probation period the probation officer may arrest the probationer wherever found, without a warrant, or the court which has granted the probation may issue a warrant for his arrest, which warrant may be executed by either the probation officer or the United States marshal of either the district in which the probationer was put upon probation or of any district in which the probationer shall be found and, if the probationer shall be so arrested in a district other than that in which he has been put upon probation, any of said officers may return probationer to the district out of which such warrant shall have been issued. Thereupon such probationer shall forthwith be taken before the court and the court may revoke the probation or the suspension of sentence and impose any sentence which might originally have been imposed.

"At any time after the probationary period, but within the maximum period for which the defendant might originally have been sentenced, the court may issue a warrant and cause the defendant to be arrested and brought before the court. Thereupon the court may revoke the probation or the suspension of sentence and may impose any sentence which might originally have been imposed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Mexico whether this bill radically changes the probation law? I ask the question because it happens that I introduced the probation bill which became a law.

Mr. BRATTON. It does not. I will state to the Senator that it changes it in four respects only:

First. It authorizes the court during the period of probation, upon report of the probation officer, to modify the condition of the probation.

Second. It expressly authorizes the arrest of the probationer wherever found.

Third. It expressly authorizes the arrest of the probationer by either the probation officer or the United States marshal wherever found.

Fourth. It authorizes the court, during the period of probation, not only to terminate, extend, or modify the term of probation, but to impose any sentence which might have been imposed originally.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume that the experience in the application of the law has made it seem wise to make these changes.

Mr. BRATTON. It has; and the passage of this bill was recommended by the Department of Justice.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator know how successful the law has been in its operation?

Mr. BRATTON. It has been very successful. With these improvements I think it will be more so.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSURANCE COMPANY BONDS AND STOCKS

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1094 to provide for the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of preferred stock and/or bonds and/or debentures of insurance companies. We ought to dispose of that bill now.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when this matter came up earlier in the day the able Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] objected to it. An amendment is desired to be offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. They are both absent from the Chamber, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Barkley	Bulkeley	Carey
Ashurst	Black	Bulow	Clark
Austin	Bone	Byrd	Connally
Bachman	Borah	Byrnes	Coolidge
Bankhead	Bratton	Capper	Copeland
Barbour	Brown	Caraway	Costigan

Couzens	Kean	Norbeck	Steiwer
Cutting	Kendrick	Norris	Stephens
Dickinson	Keyes	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Dill	King	Overton	Thomas, Utah
Duffy	La Follette	Patterson	Townsend
Erickson	Logan	Pittman	Trammell
Fess	Loneragan	Pope	Tydings
Fletcher	McAdoo	Reed	Vandenberg
Frazier	McCarran	Reynolds	Van Nuys
Goldsborough	McGill	Robinson, Ark.	Wagner
Gore	McKellar	Robinson, Ind.	Walcott
Hale	McNary	Russell	Walsh
Harrison	Metcalf	Sheppard	Wheeler
Hayden	Murphy	Shipstead	White
Johnson	Neely	Smith

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1094.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I may say, very briefly, that I do not propose to go into a discussion of the bill at any length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable during the morning hour.

Mr. FLETCHER. I just wanted to explain the object of the motion and to state that I did not expect to take any time with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 1, line 3, before the word "existing", to insert the word "the", so as to read:

That during the continuance of the existing emergency heretofore recognized by Public, No. 1, of the Seventy-third Congress, or until this act shall be declared no longer operative by proclamation of the President, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 2, line 17, to strike out the words "an amount sufficient" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "$100,000,000, in order to provide funds."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before this bill is disposed of, I shall be very glad to have an explanation. There may be reasons sufficient to justify putting our hands into the Treasury of the United States and taking out $100,000,000 for insurance companies—that, I understand, being the purpose of the bill—but if there are reasons which warrant that, I should be glad to be advised of them.

It seems to me we are a little too tender toward some of these corporations, banks, insurance companies, railroads, and so on, and I fear that some of the advances which we are making will never be returned, that the taxpayers of the United States will be the victims of improvident loans and expenditures. Before I can vote for this proposal, I shall be very glad to have reasons which will appeal to me.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Florida that I have an amendment which I am about to offer to the bill or which I shall offer ultimately, and I might as well offer it now, because I think the bill will probably not be acted upon before 2 o'clock.

I will say to the Senator, in order that he may be informed respecting it, that the amendment is simply an amendment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation law, which has been written, in part, by the attorney for the Corporation, and in part by our legislative counsel, authorizing loans to municipalities and school districts which will enable those school districts and municipalities in southern California which suffered in the recent earthquake, and whose schoolhouses were literally destroyed, to obtain loans upon their credit and in the execution of the obligations and the like from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I explain that to the Senator in order that he may consider it in the future when this bill comes up. I offer the amendment, which I ask to have printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the Senator offer the amendment now. I supposed the conditions in California had been taken care of by a separate appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON. In respect to the construction of these schoolhouses, nothing whatsoever has been done.

Mr. FLETCHER. In response to the Senator from Utah, if the Senator from California will allow me, I will state briefly what the purpose of the bill is and what is intended to be accomplished by it. I may say this, that I would not be so persistent about getting action on the bill if it were not that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have urged it upon me. They say it is not only important but necessary, in some instances, if we are to save the lives of some of these insurance companies for the benefit of those who are insured, for us to take this action right now; that we cannot wait; that it will be too late 10 days from now. Some of the companies are in a very bad situation so far as their financial set-up is concerned, and they can get relief under the bill, and the Government would be entirely safe in taking the preferred stock.

In these instances it is a matter in which the public is concerned, not merely the insurance companies themselves.

The bill authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, during the emergency declared by the President on March 6, 1933, or until the provisions of the bill are declared inoperative by proclamation of the President, to subscribe for preferred stock of insurance companies which is exempt from assessment or additional liability, or to make loans to such companies secured by such stock as collateral whenever the Secretary of the Treasury finds that such subscriptions or loans are necessary to provide working capital for such companies.

The Secretary of the Treasury must first find that the loans are necessary in order to provide working capital for such companies. Such subscriptions to stock are to be made upon request of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President.

I cannot see any stronger foundation for a proposal than that. It must be certified by the Secretary of the Treasury that the loan is necessary, and the loans are to be made only upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, and with the approval of the President.

The bill also provides that whenever the issuance of such preferred stock is prohibited under State law, which is the case in some States, or may be issued only with the unanimous consent of the stockholders or upon more than 20 days' notice, which is legal under the laws of some States, the Corporation is authorized to purchase legally issued notes, bonds, or debentures of insurance companies in such States, which may be subordinated to the claims of other creditors.

Under the bill as reported by the committee the borrowing power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is increased by $100,000,000 to provide funds to carry out the provisions of the bill.

It may not be necessary to use a dollar; it may not be necessary for them to expand their borrowing power one cent; but this provision must be made in order that they can do it if it is required in order to meet the conditions which are determined, first, by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President, and found to be proper and advisable by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They must protect the loans. That is the whole purpose of the bill.

As I recall, I have not heard a single objection to the bill as originally introduced. The objections which have been urged or brought to my attention at least, and the only objections, are those which arise under the committee amendment. The amendment of the committee, which the Senate can accept or reject as it sees fit, of course, provides that the insurance companies must put up additional capital in an amount equal to that which is subscribed for by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Some of the companies say they cannot do that. They say that they cannot call upon the stockholders now, who are not able to put up this additional capital, and therefore the bill will do them no good. There are some companies in that situation, I have no doubt. That is one of the things provided for in the amendment, not in the bill itself.

Another thing provided in the amendment is a limitation on salaries. No officer in any of these borrowing companies, president or otherwise, may receive more than $17,500. Then we provide that there shall be no increase or rise in the salaries during the time the Government holds the stock. That is provided in the amendment, and there are objections raised to the provisions of the amendment. To the purpose and objects of the bill as introduced I have not found any serious objection anywhere. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation people tell me that it is essential that we do something about this now, and there are some companies which undoubtedly would be salvaged and go on with their business, conducted in a proper, legitimate way, if they are able to get this help, through the subscription to the preferred stock, under which there is no liability to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or assessment, or anything else, on condition that the companies borrowing the money put in new capital to the amount that is subscribed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. President, that is the provision of the bill. The insurance companies of this country need the help, undoubtedly—they want it—and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation commends the bill. The loans would be safeguarded by being passed upon by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President. So that I think the bill ought to be acted upon now. If the Senate feels that the amendment which the committee has reported should not be insisted upon, or should be defeated, that is entirely a matter for the Senate itself.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I just want to suggest to the Senator from Florida that I will have no objection to taking up the bill when it can be thoroughly discussed and its weaknesses exposed. In other words, there is nothing dilatory about my objection at this time. I just knew that the bill could not be taken up and acted upon during the morning hour, because there could not be sufficient opportunity to point out the weaknesses of the measure.

When the bill comes up in regular order, however, and we can have time to discuss it, I propose to lay bare what seems to me to be some of the dangers of the proposal, to strongly urge that the bill be defeated; and then, if the Senate acts upon it, at least I will be conscience free. The Senate can then do as it chooses. A majority can act. But I certainly do not desire that the Senate should take snap judgment on this matter, because it is of very grave importance.

The proposal is to give a hundred million dollars to insurance companies, and I propose to point out, when the proper time comes, that all in the world that money is expected to be used for by the insurance companies themselves is to bolster up their own weaknesses. I propose to show that the policyholders, for whom these executive officers act in trust, would not benefit one cent by any advance from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Because of the fact that the policyholders have been, in my judgment, abused thoroughly during the past 3 years by these very insurance companies, I consider it my duty to do all I can to see that they are not abused any further, that they may be protected in the future.

PERSONALITIES AND PERSONAL RELATIONSHIPS IN THE AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES—ADDRESS BY MAJOR GENERAL HARBORD

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent for publication in the RECORD an address delivered by Maj. Gen. J. G. Harbord, United States Army, retired, at the Army War College, April 29, 1933, entitled "Personalities and Personal Relationships in the American Expeditionary Forces."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

One of the principal advantages to a country of an institution such as West Point for the training of its officers is that it acquires through the years a group of men who, in addition to the other benefits of military training, speak the same language. The training is sufficiently grooved so that given a set of circumstances the majority of graduates will draw substantially the same inferences and will report them to military superiors in language which will carry the same interpretation to other graduates of that incomparable school. When the graduates of the institution constitute the great majority of the general officers commanding for our country in a war, this advantage, already great, is multiplied if, in mature life, a large proportion of those officers have been further standardized by the service schools and Army War College. The effect of this uniform training is again multiplied by the personal relationships that have been established through the years of such association.

General Pershing graduated from West Point in 1886, having personally known, with greater or less intimacy and realism, the cadets of the several classes which graduated from the academy from 1883 to 1889. Those still in service of the seven classes in 1917 ranged generally between 50 and 60 years of age. They were the physical and professional survivors of from 28 to 34 years of service, and furnished 27.8 percent of the 474 general officers who commanded for America in the World War. The outstanding character of General Pershing's Army service had given him unusual opportunity for knowing a great number of those officers destined to serve under him in the American Expeditionary Forces. He served a tour as tactical officer at his alma mater just before the Spanish-American War and knew many members of the classes that graduated from 1895 to 1899. These classes furnished 8.8 percent of our general officers for the war. He was a member of the highly professional Army which went to Cuba in 1898. His early service in the Philippines was contemporaneous with the volunteers of 1899 and 1900, the field officers of which largely reappeared as general officers in 1917. He had a tour on the General Staff just after its organization with the opportunity for acquaintance which comes to the young officer stationed in the National Capital. He commanded Fort William McKinley at a time when Manila was the mecca of the mobile army. His command of the Mexican expedition brought him further opportunity for wide acquaintance with the officers on the Rio Grande border.

Of the 42 divisions which served under General Pershing in France, 14 at one time or another were commanded by his classmates of 1886. Sixteen others were under command of officers whom he had known as cadets at West Point. Several others were commanded by officers whom he had known while serving there as a tactical officer. In the first detail to the General Staff in 1903, one room in the War Department is said to have furnished office space to Majors Goethals and Dickman and Captains Pershing and March. The latter became Chief of Staff in the World War, Dickman commanded a division and then a corps, and finally the Third Army in Germany; Goethals became a major general in recognition of his tremendous achievement of the Panama Canal, and was Director of Purchase, Storage, and Traffic on the War Department General Staff under General March.

This wide acquaintance with his contemporaries and many juniors compared very favorably with that enjoyed by Haig in the British Army and Petain, Foch, and Joffre in the Armies of France. Beyond doubt the success of all these men was attributable in no small degree to their judgments of officers formed during years of service before the Great War. These personal relationships played such a dominating part in the drama of America's greatest adventure that the student of the military art who seeks to deduce principles from the story of the American Expeditionary Forces must constantly take them into account. Personalities really govern the world, and personal relationships are, in my judgment, more potent in politics, professional, and business life than any other single factor. To the extent that they influenced the course of events in the American Expeditionary Forces, it is important that someone shall make record of them. Memories of the Great War are already fading and will die with our generation. The bare records of administration, the tactical studies, the official reports and rosters, will no longer glow with life when the last survivor of the events of which they treat has joined his comrades in the beyond. The future historians and biographers of our time, if of the "debunking" type so obnoxious in recent years, will undertake to supply the human interest by synthetic process if those of us who knew and lived it have left behind us no record of it.

Actually, in a small army in time of peace, there can hardly be a choice of staff officers by a commander just charged with the responsibilities which faced General Pershing on May 14, 1917, when I reported to him in the War Department, except one based upon personal acquaintance. In my own case I had known General Pershing since December 1898, nearly 19 years. We had occupied the same tent in the Tenth Cavalry camp at Huntsville, Ala., for about half of that month. I had just been appointed regimental quartermaster. He had performed the same duty when the regiment went to the Santiago campaign. Promoted away from Cuba and his property accountability after the surrender of the city with no opportunity to transfer to a successor, he was now under the lash of the auditor for the War Department, and had come to Huntsville to see what could be found of his shortage. In verifying the accountability turned over to me by the officer who had acted as regimental quartermaster since Pershing had left Cuba, I found that much of the property in the hands of the troops was not included. I inventoried all the Government property in the camp, and took up on my returns what I found unaccounted for. It included such items as over 800 horses, 2 wagons, and a couple of pack trains. In general, what I found corresponded fairly well with the shortage over which Captain Pershing was worrying. In the years that passed between Huntsville and the World War I had crossed the Pacific once with General Pershing, and had considerable contact with him in the many years during which we were both in the Orient. In the summer of 1915 I had been stationed at the Presidio of San Francisco, and saw him during the short leave of absence from the border which he passed there with his family in the month that preceded the great tragedy which darkened his life in that year.

When I reported to him on May 14, being considered for the duty of chief of staff to accompany him to France, our first duty together was to study the names submitted by the chiefs of supply bureaus of suitable men for his staff. To a certain extent such naming by a department head or chief of bureau settled the matter for the time, especially if we both knew the officer and agreed on his merits. In other cases, if doubt not confirmed by personal acquaintance existed, an understudy was requested, whose selection was based on personal knowledge of him. In the case of the two General Staff officers not named by the War Department, but whom General Pershing was authorized to select, we agreed, without hesitation, on Lt. Col. John McA. Palmer and Maj. Dennis E. Nolan. The former worked himself sick in France, but came back to command a brigade in the closing days of the war, and eventually retired as a brigadier. Nolan was the assistant chief of staff for intelligence during the whole war, but, during a rest period from confinement to an office desk, went up to the front line, and won a Distinguished Service Cross in command of a brigade. He is now a major general. Lt. Col. Fox Conner and Maj. Hugh A. Drum, both of whom had served with General Pershing in the Southern Department, accompanied us to France and began work in the operations section of the General Staff. Conner succeeded Palmer as its head when the latter broke down in health, and was the great chief of operations for the American Expeditionary Forces during all its active operations, and came home with the Commander in Chief as his chief of staff. Drum, who had known the general in the old days in Lanao, became the very efficient chief of staff of the First Army. Both Conner and Drum now wear the double stars. During the first month in France, five officers joined us who were destined by reputation and the general's acquaintance with their records to become members of his initial general staff. They were Lt. Cols. William D. Connor and Paul B. Malone, and Maj. LeRoy Eltinge, Frank R. McCoy, and Stuart Heintzelman.

Eltinge, who became deputy chief of staff, American Expeditionary Forces, died soon after the war as a brigadier general. Connor was the first assistant chief of staff, G-4. He left general headquarters to be chief of staff of the Thirty-second Division the same day I left to command the Marine Brigade. He had his stars as a brigadier and was fighting a brigade on the Vesle when I persuaded General Pershing to send him to me in the Services of Supply, where he eventually became chief of staff and relieved me of the command in May 1919. As a major general he went from the command of the Army War College last year to be Superintendent at West Point. Malone was the officer in charge of training, as assistant chief of staff, G-5, for the first half year and then commanded the Twenty-third Infantry. The fortunes of war delayed his promotion until October 1918, but he is now a major general. Stuart Heintzelman stayed with the operations section of the general staff and became chief of staff of the Second Army. As a major general he is graduating General Staff officers from Fort Leavenworth. Frank Ross McCoy became a colonel, left general headquarters with Connor and myself on May 6, 1918, going to command the old Sixty-ninth New York, the One Hundred and Sixty-fifth Infantry in the Rainbow Division. He soon changed his eagles for stars, and commanded a brigade in the Thirty-second Division, until he, too, was commandeered for the Services of Supply. One of the best all-around officers in the Army, he has been kept busy as a major general in far-flung diplomatic missions to Nicaragua and Manchuria.

About the time General Pershing sailed, May 28, 1917, to command all American military units and individuals in Europe, the War Department sent to Europe a commission of 12 selected officers to study organization at the Allied front and make recommendation to the War Department on the proper organization with which to fight the war. Nine of those twelve officers became general officers during the war, one of them is now the efficient Commandant of the Army War College. Every consideration of common sense and courtesy, as well as efficiency, should have suggested that this commission be ordered to report to General Pershing, who was to command the armies for which the commission was to suggest an organization. He might have been supposed to have ideas on organization if he was a fit selection for the command. As a matter of fact, he had such ideas, and had at once set his General Staff to getting the data upon which to form recommendations which he would make to the War Department.

The commission visited the puzzled British and French headquarters, who knew of Pershing's arrival and could not understand this independent commission roving the western front. It completed its tour, but, like all Americans in peace or war, expected to put the finishing touch on its study in Paris, and came there, but did not report to General Pershing. The senior officer was a quartermaster, a fact rather amusing to our Allies, but he was a classmate of our general, and, of course, was friendly. The Commander in Chief saw the danger of the commission, in person recommending to the War Department one form of organization while he by cable suggested another, and realized what was likely to happen under such circumstances. He invited the members of the commission to discuss their proposed organization with him and his staff, where by every consideration he should have been able to order it. The discussion lasted over 2 long summer days, when time was more precious than fine gold. It was held in the lovely garden at the back of 73 rue de Varenne, which Mr. Ogden Mills had turned over to the general for his use during the war, a splendid, beautiful establishment, the residence of Marshal Lannes when Napoleon became emperor. Serious differences of opinion developed in the discussion. In his earnestness, one of the outstanding officers of the commission, later to be a distinguished division and corps commander on the western front, carried his argument as nearly to the limit of courtesy as I have ever seen an officer go and escape unrebuked. General Pershing kept his temper, was infinitely patient, and the commission finally agreed with the organization he recommended to the War Department. It was the most critical moment of his command in some respects.

The great personality of the American Expeditionary Forces was, of course, the commander in chief himself. There was no rivalry for first place among the several officers who reached prominence in the American Expeditionary Forces. It was loyally conceded to John J. Pershing. He appears to have been a marked man from the time he entered West Point. Older than the average cadet, he was a leader in the corps, became first captain, and was made president of his class. He was under 40 when I first met him. He was 57 in the autumn of 1917. The years had dealt kindly with him, and he was at the height of his physical and professional vigor. He had great personal charm, though not all the American Expeditionary Forces were privileged to feel it. He is an exceedingly temperate man, not a drinker, and seldom smoked. He appeared to have no routine for exercise, though in France he seemed always in fine physical condition. A good rider and a fast walker, he was physically and mentally alert. He was the personification of neatness and a model of military smartness. I have seen him show some temper, but never saw him lose control of himself. Caution and caniness were strong traits of his character. He was very impersonal in his military decisions; quiet, definite, but willing to hear explanations. He had a contempt for haziness and indefiniteness in his subordinates. When he had made up his mind it was not easy to get him to change it, but it was tenacity and firmness and not obstinacy, and it could be changed. Patience was not his most conspicuous trait, but he had it in great degree when necessary. He never "spilled the beans."

In the second month after our arrival in France the Seventeenth Engineers landed at St. Nazaire. It was a fine regiment under a fine colonel, John S. Sewell, a graduate of West Point, who had gone into civil life some years before the war. Nevertheless it would have figured as but one more among many good regiments with good colonels that were so numerous as to be the accepted standard but for the presence in it of one great personality. Over 25 years before Lieutenant Pershing, of the Sixth Cavalry, had served a tour as military instructor at the University of Nebraska at Lincoln. A struggling lawyer of the town was Charles Gates Dawes, destined to become one of the very conspicuous figures of our time. The two young men, unmarried, similar in tastes, nearly of an age, and almost equally impecunious, formed a friendship that still endures.

In 1917, Dawes, in the meantime, became a prosperous banker of Chicago, for which he had abandoned the law, was of an age and importance to his community that, in the case of thousands of other men, furnished a justification for remaining at home. He, however, resurrected a youthful experience in railroad engineering and sought and obtained a commission. He landed in France as lieutenant colonel of the Seventeenth Engineers. He became the most outstanding civilian in the American uniform. He exercised an influence on the accomplishments of the American Expeditionary Forces which easily places him among perhaps a dozen officers who, standing just below the commander in chief, were so nearly on the same level of merit with each other, that history will take little note of any difference.

General Pershing found the Allies bidding against each other for munitions in the restricted markets of allied and neutral countries. Our own supply chiefs, true to the independence of function in which they had been bred, began the same expensive effort, with no coordination and no regard for priority of needs. One would bid high prices in open market for materials which might be on hand unused and unneeded in another branch of our own supply. General Pershing sent for Lieutenant Colonel Dawes, his lawyer-trained business friend of long experience, already well known to the Allies as the banker of Chicago whose bank had led the subscription for the Anglo-French loan, and gave him the task of coordinating the purchases of the whole command in allied and neutral markets. He wore the title of general purchasing agent, but never personally made a purchase. In time there were added to his responsibilities many other activities, such as the Accounting Bureau of Accounts, Rents, Requisitions, and Claims, the civilian labor, and the American membership on the Inter-Allied Board of Military Supply.

General Dawes acquired few military characteristics during his time in uniform, fewer than he thought he did, but his usefulness, loyalty, and direct-action efficiency never slackened for a moment. He thought of General Pershing as the "John" of Lincoln days, and usually addressed him that way. Yet he would have fought like a tiger to defend the dignity and respect due the commander in chief from anyone under all circumstances. His was at all times the noble and steadfast heart, and, if military channels meant little to him, his official performance left nothing to be desired. His direct access to the General occasionally put a little strain on the military conventionalities, and, as the boys sometimes said, he operated from a position "out on a limb." Meantime, Dawes and Harbord became close friends, and when the latter went to command the Services of Supply, where Dawes nominally belonged, personal relationship again played a part in securing unvarying cooperation and conformity from the general purchasing agent. In time Colonel Dawes became a brigadier general and terminated a career of usefulness in France, where no one could have replaced him, with the final negotiation of the sale of our American Expeditionary Force supplies to France, with accompanying settlement of all claims of the French against the American Expeditionary Forces. General Dawes' subsequent brilliant and useful career is a logical sequence to the service he rendered his country in the World War.

Maj. Gen. John Biddle, an engineer of long experience, an outstanding officer of his corps, and a former superintendent of West Point, came over early in the summer of 1917 with a brigade of Engineers which was assigned with the British. Its units were soon separated, and General Biddle became virtually a liaison officer at British general headquarters.

In September of that year Maj. Gen. Hugh L. Scott, Chief of Staff of the Army, was retired for age. I remember one September Sunday reminding General Pershing of that fact, and telling him I thought he might expect a request to recommend a successor to him. He replied that, singularly enough, he had just received a letter from the Secretary of War stating that General Bliss, who himself was to reach retiring age in 3 months, was to succeed General Scott, and asking General Pershing if General Biddle could be spared for the position of the assistant, only one then, to the Chief of Staff. We discussed General Biddle for a moment, of whom we both held high opinion, General Pershing having known him intimately for many years. It seemed that if General Biddle were a success as assistant, he was probably in line for Chief of Staff. With every fine quality of loyalty, squareness, intelligence, and experience he was past the age of greatest energy. We were reluctantly of the opinion that he lacked a little of the iron which would be needed for the senior place, but thought that with an assistant who had it the combination would be an excellent one. General March at once came to the mind of both of us as an exemplar of the complementary qualification needed.

General Pershing recommended Biddle for assistant, and if later made Chief of Staff, suggested that General March be made the assistant. General Biddle was ordered to Washington and became Assistant Chief of Staff, acting as chief much of the time through General Bliss's absence in Europe on the Supreme War Council. Secretary Baker, who had known and thought well of General March, evidently approved General Pershing's letter regarding him. Early in 1918 General Biddle was returned to Europe and became commander of the SOS section in England. Major General March was ordered home to be made Chief of Staff, and held the position until June 30, 1921.

He had come to France in July 1917. As an experienced artilleryman of long service he was assigned by General Pershing to command the artillery training camp at Valdahon, and the Army Artillery of the First Army. Valdahon's importance to the American expeditionary forces was great and by no means to be estimated by its distance from the center of the stage. General March's untiring energy and driving force made it a center of activity.

The new Chief of Staff was now going to a position which any officer should be proud to occupy, even though at the cost of an opportunity to command troops in the theater of war. It was one—the number two and less conspicuous—of the two high positions of transcendental importance in our military organization in the greatest war in which our country has ever engaged. The laurel is an outdoor plant and seldom blooms from an office desk. General March left no doubt in the minds of those of us who had contact with him in his last days in France that he turned his back on the western front with great regret and only in obedience to orders. He would have been less a soldier if he had not continued to feel that regret throughout the war. Even a more sweet-tempered man than the new Chief of Staff might have found it impossible to bear that keenest disappointment that can come to a soldier without some bitterness and resentment. Future historians are so sure to take this into consideration in accounting for some of his official actions that there seems no impropriety in the present speaker giving it some weight.

It is not too much to say that there should have been but a single motive actuating the War Department in 1917 and 1918, and that was to do everything possible in every way to contribute to the success of the American arms. The whole war machinery existed only in order that we might do our full share in winning the war. The proper policy and the duty of the new Chief of Staff might have been stated in the simple sentence that he was to support the commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces in every proper way. The prestige that comes from being the chief military adviser to the President and the Secretary of War is very great. The presumption that when he speaks it is by that authority is very seldom questioned by the Army and is therefore the more carefully to be guarded. The wording of official messages from the new Chief of Staff very quickly took on a rasping and irritating method of expression. This surely reflected no mood of Secretary of War Baker. If merely a mannerism, it was most deplorable. If it was the indication of a belief, then not yet stated in words, that General March himself personally was the military superior of the commander in chief, American Expeditionary Forces, it was worse, for such a belief had no justification in either law or custom of the service.

In delaying, for example, the promotion of Colonel Malone, who, as assistant chief of staff in charge of training, had differed from him on the matter of artillery training, though, of course, the Chief of Staff under the law could neither grant nor withhold promotion except by authority of the Secretary of War, General March said to General Pershing, substantially, "I" was not satisfied with the way he performed his duty as your staff officer. General Pershing had been satisfied with it and month after month had urged his promotion.

An injustice was done Colonel Malone. He was put out of step with the officers of his own time by his delayed promotion, and his career has suffered cruelly from it. A military adviser and mouthpiece to the Secretary of War—and that, in the cold meaning of the law, is all that a Chief of Staff is—set himself in judgment on the needs of the American Expeditionary Forces as urgently stated by the responsible commander in chief and presumed to grant or withhold what the latter said was necessary to their success.

Legislation adopted in October 1917 had provided the temporary grade of general for the commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces and for the Chief of Staff of the Army. When Major General March became Chief of Staff in the spring of 1918 his temporary rank became that of general, and as such he was junior to General Pershing by about half a year. Every attribute of command attached to the grade as held by General Pershing. No attribute of command attached to it as held by General March, except that as Chief of Staff he could give orders in his own name to the War Department General Staff. In every other function he performed he spoke only by the authority of the Secretary of War. Regulations then, as now, provided that the Chief of Staff, as such, takes precedence of all other officers of the Army—that is, he precedes them on all official and ceremonial occasions. This precedence carries no authority to give an order to any officer not a member of the War Department General Staff, except by giving it in the name of the Secretary of War. In the light of the very interesting book published by General March in 1932, there can be no doubt now that he thought himself the military superior of General Pershing and competent to give him orders by virtue of the authority inherent in such military superiority. Without warrant of law for the belief of such authority inherent in his rank or office, he may have convinced himself that some vestige of it adhered to him by virtue of being the vehicle of transmission for the commanding authority of the Secretary of War. It is as though the telegraph wire became glorified by carrying an important message.

Whatever the rasping tone of General March's cablegrams, however much his compulsory removal from the theater of war may have soured a disposition none too amiable, and however much the intoxicating aura that surrounds the office of the Secretary of War may have contributed to his hallucination of military superiority over General Pershing, the fact remains that no Chief of Staff who ever sat in our War Department exceeded him in driving force and ability to get things done. Beset by newspapermen, hectorated and interrupted by the elected Senators and Representatives of the people, and with the million details of the administrative end of a great war as his responsibility, General March kept his mind and body on his tremendous task and well accomplished it. His country owed him more than the omnibus legislation which restored his war-time rank in retirement with hundreds of others.

In late July 1918, General Pershing received a letter from the Secretary of War which, in substance, stated that to save him from too much worry by detail, it had been suggested that General Goethals be sent to France to command the services of supply as a coordinate authority with General Pershing, reporting direct to the War Department. General Goethals at that time was the principal subordinate of the Chief of Staff in the War Department and an obvious successor of that officer in case a change was made. To take from General Pershing the control of his own military supply was an action unprecedented in military history, so far as my information goes, and regarded by him and all of his staff as a step fatal to the success of the American arms on the western front. It would have created a two-headed combination for control of American military matters in France and would have divided not only authority but responsibility between Pershing and Goethals. It could have had but one result, which we may hope that no one advocating it in the War Department foresaw, and that is failure in which both Pershing and Goethals would have been involved. Their independent activities would have required a common superior to coordinate them and a single individual would have again been given the command.

These potentialities were at once apparent to General Pershing, who replied to the Secretary of War that he had for some time been dissatisfied with the management of the services of supply, and had already determined to send there Major General Harbord, who had been Chief of Staff through the organization period of the American Expeditionary Forces, and more recently in command of combat troops. He urged that General Goethals be not sent as contemplated. He was then informed that the temporary detail of General Harbord to command the services of supply was approved until the expected visit of the Secretary of War in September, when final decision would be made. The suggestion was not renewed when Secretary Baker came to France. He concurred in the assignment.

Thus it was the play of personality and personal relations on both sides of the Atlantic which gave a new commander to the services of supply in late July 1918, and that sent there a particular officer. With the change there was an extension of authority to the commanding general of the SOS by permitting him to cable directly to the War Department on matters on which the policy had already been determined by the commander in chief. This authority had never been extended to his predecessor. It instantly speeded up the machinery by shortening the time for getting requisitions to the War Department. The personal relationship between the new supply chief and the commander in chief enabled the former to handle many matters directly with the latter. It also served as more or less of a "Keep off the grass" sign to ambitious staff officers at general headquarters.

In the summer of 1917 General Pershing had determined on breaking with the traditions of the old Army by creating a director general of transportation. The Quartermaster Corps had long handled all transportation matters during peace. The field-service regulations assigned military railways to the Engineer Corps in war. Upon communicating this determination to the War Department, he very soon received a cablegram from the acting Chief of Staff, General Bliss, saying that the directors of the Pennsylvania Railroad had patriotically offered the services of their operating vice president, Mr. Wallace W. Atterbury, to organize and operate transportation for the American Expeditionary Forces, on condition that he be given an entirely free hand, reporting only to the commander in chief. General Pershing replied, pointing out the impossibility of accepting the services under such conditions and that it was not practicable to emancipate anyone in the command from staff control, or to promise that any agent or instrumentality of the American Expeditionary Forces could always have access to or deal exclusively with the commander in chief. This cablegram must have been lost in the mountain of unopened and unread messages said to have existed in the mail and record room of the Adjutant General's office at that time, as stated by Major General March in conversation on his arrival in France. At any rate, within a fortnight Mr. Atterbury reported to General Pershing. Evidently he had not been informed of the general's view on the condition imposed by the Pennsylvania, but General Pershing supposed that he had been, and the subject was not mentioned during their interview and not until long after.

The new director general of transportation was made a brigadier general in the autumn of 1917. Under the assignment of duties to the Transportation Corps, as the officers and men under General Atterbury came in time to be, an article of supply arriving on transports immediately became its responsibility. The transportation people handled it every time it was moved until it was delivered to troops at the railroad. In each port there was a transportation officer who reported directly to General Atterbury. To do his work of unloading and transferring freight to storage or trains this officer had to use stevedore troops, who, when not actually engaged in labor under his orders, reverted to the command of the base section commander, who was responsible for their subsistence, clothing, shelter, pay, instruction, and discipline. The transport officer never knew at night what number of men he could count on for the next day nor in what condition they would be for work. The base section commander had no responsibility for their accomplishments. The misunderstanding under which General Atterbury had come to France, and which had by inadvertence been perpetuated, had resulted in this inefficient arrangement. Delays also arose from the fact that the commander in chief could not always be accessible for consultation by the director general of transportation, who sought counsel and direction from no one else.

By the winter of 1917-18 matters of detail were crowding on the commander in chief and occupying his time to the exclusion of the more important nonadministrative matters which were entitled to his attention. Some 22 heads of staff bureaus and departments were going to him for decision, all of them being his staff officers and by long custom of the service, and in some cases by law, entitled to personal access to him. This was remedied by a change which was made placing the supply chiefs on the staff of the commanding general of the services of supply, and assigning them, including the director general of transportation, to Tours. It does not seem probable that the proper relations of the Transportation Corps to the remainder of the staff were made clear to General Atterbury until the late summer of 1918. The commanding general under whom he first served at Tours, in some respects one of the ablest men of his time in the service, was a lawyer by instinct and training, inclined somewhat, I think, to consider that a thing was accomplished when the order for it had been given from his desk. There appears to have been little or no effort to smooth General Atterbury's path or to help solve his difficulties, which were many. His transportation units were still in regiments, battalions, and companies. The units did not fit railroad and transport duty—too many men and officers in some places; too few in others.

Just before the change in the command of the services of supply, which occurred at the end of July 1918, tension between the commander and the director general of transportation really threatened to deprive the American Expeditionary Forces of General Atterbury's services. A board on which both he and the commander and general headquarters were represented attempted to work out disciplinary and administrative relations. The commanding general, services of supply, had thrown his disciplinary authority into arbitration on an equality with his subordinate—who, in all fairness, could not be held responsible for a situation which he was encountering for the first time. With the change of command in the services of supply the proceedings of this board were filed in "the archives of unachieved endeavor" and were seen no more. The necessity for coordination under base section commanders was explained, and loyally accepted when understood. The corps organization was adopted and regiments and battalions merged into the Transportation Corps. Trouble and friction ended, and the corps under General Atterbury became one of the outstanding successes of the American Expeditionary Forces. These changes were worked out through personal relationships, and the give-and-take of personalities united in an effort to solve difficulties that had arisen under circumstances with which all of us were but newly acquainted.

No address that dealt with personalities of the American Expeditionary Forces would be complete without reference to Gen. Douglas MacArthur and Maj. Gen. George Van Horn Moseley, whom I link together because at the time this paper is written they are, respectively, the Chief and Deputy Chief of Staff of the Army. The former came over as chief of staff of the Forty-second Division, the famous Rainbow.

He was the youngest division commander in the American Expeditionary Forces when the armistice came. Dashing and picturesque, he must have been to the few survivors of the Civil War, the very reincarnation of his gallant father. As a youthful but senior major general of our Army, any story of him written now might lack its best chapters. His deputy, with whom I served as a captain in the old First Cavalry, of blessed memory, was one of General March's outstanding artillerymen at Valdaon. Already an officer of General Staff experience, Moseley was early taken from the command of the Fifth Field Artillery, to succeed the brilliant William D. Connor as assistant chief of staff G-4 of the American Expeditionary Forces. It would be difficult to overstate his efficiency in that position. Made a brigadier when the national defense reorganized the Army in 1920, he has moved steadily on to a major generality, with the exception of a few months, when he was a victim to political expediency in 1921.

In the hurried months of my brief tour with combat troops in the early summer of 1918 I had close association with one of the strong personalities of the American Expeditionary Forces and the Army. I refer to Maj. Gen. Preston Brown, at that time a colonel and the chief of staff of the Second Division. Like myself, he was a promotion from the ranks. A graduate of Yale, the university authorities were much more willing to award him a degree when he came home from the World War than when he completed his course in the nineties. He was a pillar of strength in the Second Division, a remarkable reader of men, a keen detector of inefficiency, and an expert deflator of stuffed shirts. He had more than earned his stars by midsummer, and after a brief period with a brigade commanded the Third Division in the last days of the Meuse-Argonne.

Personality is powerless without opportunity. It is probably true, as one of the successful division commanders of the American Expeditionary Forces remarked, "The official life of every high commander in the American Expeditionary Forces hung by a thread." That may refer to the shortness of official life at the front, the casualties that sometimes ended a career without ending a life, or, again, to the fatalistic chances which affected many outstanding careers. What might have been is always an interesting field for conjecture. It has been the central thought of many a work of fiction. It has been the consolation of dreamers in all ages. The distance of the American Expeditionary Forces from the War Department, the uncertainties, misunderstandings, and delays arising from cipher and code communication by no means as perfect then as now—all played a part in the hopes and ambitions of men and officers on the western front.

Maj. John L. Hines had been adjutant general with the Pershing expedition in Mexico and came to France as the second adjutant in rank to Colonel Alvord. He early sought command of troops and in the autumn of 1917 was assigned to the Sixteenth Infantry. Within a week General Alvord was suddenly invalidated to Cannes, and Maj. Robert C. Davis, though not the senior in the office, was directed to carry on the department in the absence of his chief. A week earlier the illness of The Adjutant General would have placed Hines in charge of the office. The American Expeditionary Forces would have lost one of its most distinguished corps commanders and the Army a future Chief of Staff. Davis would not have become the efficient adjutant general of the American Expeditionary Forces or the most conspicuously able The Adjutant General of the Army in my time.

Maj. Gen. Hunter Liggett, with his chief of staff, Col. Malin Craig, was one of the division commanders who, in late 1917, came over for educational experience at the front. It was decided to retain them for commanding general and chief of staff of the First Corps, and cable for authority was sent to the War Department. Days passed and they were on ship ready to sail, when the cablegram was found in the code room, at general headquarters, received but mislaid. The responsible officer in the code room was court-martialed. The Army might have lost a lieutenant general and successful Army commander, as well as a future chief of Cavalry, and major general of the line, if another hour had elapsed with the cablegram undelivered.

Maj. Gen. James W. McAndrew, the very able and efficient chief of staff of the American Expeditionary Forces during the period of active operations was by accident of assignment a colonel of Infantry in the First Division, the earliest unit to arrive. Seniority put him in the list who were made general officers in early August 1917. He was an outstanding graduate of the service schools and was selected because of it to command the Army school at Langres. By May next year his success there had so attracted the attention of the commander in chief that when Harbord was sent to the marine brigade, McAndrew was made chief of staff. When the former was selected to command the services of supply, having been formerly chief of staff, the opportunity for some jealousy or friction existed, but nothing of the sort ever occurred, and it was a team that worked smoothly together. General McAndrew was a very exceptional officer, and his untimely death as commandant of the Army War College in May 1922 was a serious loss to his country.

Col. Hanson E. Ely was one of the commission which came to France coincident with the arrival of General Pershing, to study organization. His retention was requested, and he was left without assignment. General Pershing made him provost marshal general. Colonel Ely was not so enamored with his new duties that he did not welcome a belated detail to the General Staff which followed him to France, and released him to be chief of staff of the First Division. When he next crossed my horizon, he had won a medal of honor during the Boxer campaign by jump-off of Cantigny. He commanded the Third Brigade under me at Soissons, and 3 years later the same brigade at Camp Travis, Tex. But in the meantime he had been a major general, commanding the Fifth Division. He again wore the double stars, and, among other important duties, was a successful commandant of the Army War College before he retired from active service.

The American Expeditionary Forces rated two lieutenant generals, Liggett and Bullard. The latter started to France as colonel of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, and was promoted at sea to be a brigadier. When in August 1917 all regular brigadiers were promoted to major general, he became one without a command, there being but the one division in France at the time. He was in charge of the several service schools when General Sibert's relief from command of the First Division, with Bullard standing by in the south of France, gave General Pershing an opportunity to assign him to it. He became in succession a corps and Army commander, but his greatest fame is in my mind linked with the splendid First Division. Nothing finer was seen in the war than the grim determination which made Bullard stand up to his work for months when, by every rule of health, he should have been in a hospital. He is still paying the price.

In the group of officers who accompanied General Pershing to France were two outstanding personalities destined to very directly influence the men and morale of the American Expeditionary Forces. These were Col. Andre W. Brewster, the inspector general, and Col. Merritte W. Ireland, of the Medical Corps. The former had won a medal of honor during the Boxer Campaign by jumping into the tawny tide of the Pei-Ho under fire and rescuing a wounded soldier of his company from drowning. He had been a far traveler in foreign lands and knew our Allies well. His soldierly character made him a great influence for discipline and deportment. He early became a major general and, like the knightly gentleman that he is, cheerfully endured his disappointment in not having a command. Colonel Ireland was General Pershing's choice for chief surgeon, but Colonel Bradley, senior to him, was already in Europe and designated for the duty. The latter, a very able officer, was not in robust health, and, when he fell before the medical examination in early 1918, Ireland became chief surgeon of the American Expeditionary Forces. He quickly achieved the reputation that made him the conspicuously successful chief of his corps for a longer period than any of his predecessors. Both of these officers are major generals on the retired list.

When we sailed for Europe on May 28, 1917, General Pershing found on the Baltic a friend from his Russian-Japanese War days, the eminent war correspondent, Frederick Palmer, whom he had known on the Manchurian front. Palmer, an interpreter of wars from his youth, sought the colors in the summer of 1917 and became a major, serving with the press and intelligence section. In the dark days of the following winter he returned, for some months, to America, and not only personally told the story of the American Expeditionary Forces from the lecture platform but his book, America at War, was a powerful influence on public opinion at home. As an author his writings will constitute important material for other and later historians.

Though he was never strictly a part of the American Expeditionary Forces, his duties in Europe may be said to have been tangent to it, and Gen. Tasker H. Bliss was a personality of tremendous potentiality. Chief of Staff for a brief 3 months which terminated with his statutory retirement for age, December 31, 1917, he was the American member of the Supreme War Council at Versailles. He was without doubt the most highly educated member of our Army in his generation. He knew Latin and Greek as he knew English. He had a workable command of French, Spanish, German, and Italian. He was an authority on oriental botany. He was widely read in the military history of the world and a student of all branches of the military profession. He came to France with the entire confidence of the President and Secretary of War, whose confidential staff officer he had been. He was an older man than General Pershing. He undoubtedly had opinions of his own on events as they were happening. He was a member of a council which had infinite capacity for harm and, in my opinion, little utility for good. He could, with the best of intentions, have involved General Pershing in every kind of difficulty. But he "played the game" in every particular, supporting the commander in chief, and demonstrated lofty patriotism as well as professional and personal wisdom. The President leaned on him heavily during the Peace Conference, of which he was a member. With no test of his ability as a high commander of troops, no American need hesitate to agree that he was a great military statesman.

Any address which purports to deal with personalities and personal relations in the American Expeditionary Forces must, of course, be fragmentary and incomplete. Ours was perhaps the most individualistic army that ever went to war. There were over 2,000,000 personalities in the American Expeditionary Forces, some thousands of them, no doubt, strong and outstanding. Personality is largely the impression which one person makes and leaves upon another. My opportunities for meeting and observing the other members of that great organization were perhaps better than those of anyone else except the great commander in chief himself. But, after all, mine were largely the fleeting contacts which registered an impression of the moment. The apprehension I feel in trying to make this address measure up to such a title as I have given it is not that I shall include personalities that do not belong in such a category but that some real personalities have been omitted out of regard for those who have had to listen to an address now already too long.

Time flew over our heads in those busy days of 1917 and 1918. There was little and in some cases no time to secure discipline, esprit de corps, and cohesion, not to mention instruction by the time-honored methods. What was accomplished was largely due to the adaptability of Americans and their comprehension that what we call discipline must be maintained if their mission was to be accomplished in such fashion as to permit them to return to their homes in the shortest possible time. That was what they all desired. When the armistice was signed, which to their minds signified the end of the war, there was a great pressure brought to send "the boys" home at once. They all wished it. Most of them thought it a fine idea to come by way of Paris, and the thinking ones who realized that the entire American Expeditionary Forces could not take transports for home on November 12 or 13, eagerly hoped that the necessary delay might be passed in that attractive city.

General Pershing, who realized how much of their discipline was self-imposed and how incomplete was the training of some of the later arrivals, knew that the armistice, though everyone hoped that it had ended the war, was actually merely an agreed cessation of hostilities for a month. Our troops were still under command of the Allied commander in chief. The forces of the Allies had still to be kept intact for many months. The effect of idleness on a command in such circumstances is very deleterious to health and discipline. The great majority of the soldiers of the American Expeditionary Forces were men whose age justified the belief that if trained properly they would be a military asset to our country for 15 or 20 years to come if their services should again be needed. General Pershing therefore instituted a rigid program of instruction and carried it out. His great personality was never better demonstrated than in the unswerving firmness with which he enforced this program. Coincident with it was the fact, which our country has never appreciated, that he sent the armies home free from venereal infection. No army in history has had such a record in this particular. Generations yet unborn, and our whole national life to come, will owe a debt of gratitude to him which cannot be overstated in history.

The immediate effect of these things on the American Expeditionary Forces, however, was a great unpopularity for the commander in chief. They looked for someone on which to put the responsibility for the delays and the precautions. The censor had done its work well, and they knew no one on whom to blame them except General Pershing. As the credit for what was done was his, he had with it to bear the onus of unpopularity. The first men to be returned to the United States were, naturally, casualties. They came back as individuals or as members of temporary organizations without discipline or esprit de corps, some of them sick and disabled, full of soldier ideas about the discomforts of the ports of embarkation. To be met by reporters eager for news of the returning armies was a strange and new sensation to most of them. They were free from restraints that had bound them for many months, and they used the new-found freedom. Time, however, has brought the realization to those now middle-aged men, that what is their greatest pride and frame is inseparably bound up with their great leader. Individual claims and stories of war experiences that do not diminish with the passing of the years must for their authenticity depend upon the fact that they were well commanded on the western front, and that the man who did it was John J. Pershing.

The commander in chief throughout the World War bore himself always in the most distinguished way. His life since his return has been devoted to two great accomplishments, the national defense plan and the proper marking of the battlefields forever immortalized by the success of the American arms. He long since became a great national figure, standing out above the lesser men of our times. He has never forfeited the confidence of his countrymen by any misstep in speech or action, by any error in judgment, or conduct, or in any other way. Since Washington, no other of our national heroes has completed the natural span of life with such an unbroken continuity of respect, esteem, and affection from the American people.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS—ADDRESS BY HON. CORDELL HULL

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address delivered by Secretary of State Hon. Cordell Hull on Saturday, April 29, 1933, at the annual dinner of the American Society of International Law, at the Willard Hotel, Washington, D.C.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, ladies, and gentlemen of the American Society of International Law, I have just been informed that I have been elected by this distinguished society as an honorary vice president. I do not know what rights, duties, powers, or privileges attach to the office, but what I am now experiencing very forcefully reminds me that the immunities are not very far-reaching.

At the time I promised Dr. Scott that I would be here tonight I had more in mind enjoying the fellowship of members of this learned society, whose interests are so closely identified with my own, than any intention to state or restate canons of international law. I am, however, glad to receive the very encouraging information that has come to me this evening that many of the involved and troublesome problems on the international horizon have not only been ably and scientifically discussed by this organization but that actual solutions have been found for problems that have perplexed international jurists and statesmen from the time of Grotius to the present time.

It is an amazing commentary on the human race that international law was virtually unknown during the first 3,000 years of history; that it was only at the end of the Thirty Years War, with its indescribable brutalities and savagery that the great Dutch jurist really founded this system of law, and that persistent effort through succeeding centuries was necessary to extend it to the preservation of peace as well as the regulation of warfare.

This phase, however, is not so surprising when we recall that the term "human rights" was scarcely conceived until within the past 800 years, and that the common lot of 90 to 95 percent of the human race, until within the past 200 years, was that of slavery, serfdom, or enforced war service, mainly to gratify the ambition of rulers.

I feel that you and your associates everywhere who are engaged in the development of international law have reason to take great pride in the fact that while late in its origin and adoption this system has grown more rapidly than any other branch of the law.

Relations between nations, no less than relations between individuals and their communities, are dependent upon mutual respect for and confidence in each other, and these in turn are dependent upon frankness and honesty of purpose. There is, therefore, for the nations in their relations with each other, a code of ethics, without the observance of which international confidence is warped and weakened. International law and modern rules of diplomacy are based on essential ideas of that conduct which will best serve the interests of the community of nations. There could not be omitted from any enumeration of basic tenets of international conduct the equality of States, and the insistence that foreign governments shall respect the equal position of each other and their rights under international law. The great immediate objective, however, should be progress in the enforcement and observance of international law and usage, the high purpose of which is to regulate the behavior of people in their relations with one another in the common interest.

The present utterly chaotic and dislocated conditions—political, economic, and moral—in every part of the world, present a terrifying crisis. International treaty obligations are flouted, the sanctity of contracts is complacently ignored, while force and violence are either indulged in or threatened in different parts of the world; the international exchange and monetary situation loudly call for stabilization; the commodity prices in world markets are in a state of collapse; international finance and trade are almost dried up. The internal affairs of each nation are in a still worse plight, with vast unemployment, damned-up surpluses, price dislocations, depreciated currencies, and extreme agricultural distress.

Hundreds of millions of suffering and desperate people in the various countries are not in a state of mind to function at all normally or to manifest serious concern about other problems and conditions, no matter how important, until and unless they first secure relief from their economic ills. They are hopelessly engrossed with these frightful and unbearable conditions. Another phase of this psychology, significant as it is dangerous, is the possibility of social disturbances and uprisings easily leading to wide-spread disorders. It is also true that most modern military conflicts and other serious international controversies are rooted in economic conditions, and that economic rivalries are in most modern instances the prelude to the actual wars that have occurred. The restoration of fair, friendly, and normal trade relations among nations at present would not only avoid serious economic, military, and political differences between countries in the future but would go far toward composing those now existing.

All important countries since the war have pursued the same policy of economic isolation or aloofness, and all alike plunged into the world panic. Each nation has struggled during the past 3½ years by bootstrap methods to extricate itself from the unprecedented panic conditions, but thus far without satisfactory results. It follows beyond question that suitable business recovery must be preceded by the restoration of international finance and commerce, the alternative to which is a continuance of the unsound economic policies under the operation of which the entire world since 1929 has been in the throes of an unspeakable depression.

The awful plight of all countries offers proof conclusive of the break-down of leadership and the bankruptcy of statesmanship in every part of the world. Governments have been more responsible for the present world economic dislocations than for any similar conditions in the past. In my judgment, the destiny of history points to the United States for leadership in the existing grave crisis. Present-day statesmen in charge of governments of the various nations, in my opinion, must immediately realize that the people of each country alike are living in a new age with new and transformed economic conditions calling for more modernized policies which are vital and basic to satisfactory business recovery, and see to it that such remedial action is taken.

Many years of disastrous experience, resulting in colossal and incalculable losses and injuries, utterly discredit the narrow and blind policy of extreme economic isolation. The present world state of economic war not only strikes at the very vitals of international commerce but it may also gradually infect the whole fabric of international relations. In short, healthy international relations depend no less upon a properly regulated exchange of goods and commodities than upon courteously phrased diplomatic exchanges. Let me add, too, that international commerce is the lifeblood of civilization.

It shall be my purpose, so long as I occupy my present position at the State Department, to show in my dealings with foreign nations that neighborly attitude and sympathetic understanding that we expect other nations shall adopt toward us. Lack of understanding is the parent of fear no less in diplomatic relations than it was among the superstitious heathen tribes in remote ages. Important conversations are now taking place between leading statesmen of Europe and our President. Men who seek to arrive at common accords are endeavoring to understand each other, and to start a course designed to promote in a reciprocal manner their common interests. It is a great satisfaction to one who is confronted with the tasks devolving upon the Department of State to realize how, in meeting the problems that are our daily portion, the interests of our Government and our people seem so clearly to coincide with the interests of humanity. What the world is sparring for today, under the urge of economic pressure, is a fair opportunity to which all are entitled under every known law.

This society of international lawyers, students, and teachers of international relations, whose interest in the strengthening and development of international law is excelled by no other organization, has an important part in molding the intelligent thought of the American people. You are also in a position to play no small part in promoting in the other nations a greater feeling of confidence, respect, and good will toward our Nation and our people. By such accomplishments will the shackles to international trade and commerce be loosed, the wheels of American industry set in motion, and the great burden of depression removed from our land.

In brief, no nation is sufficient unto itself. The normal life of a nation, no less than that of an individual, is one of association with others. If the nations must depend, one upon the other, in the normal development of their social, intellectual, financial, and political well-being, they of necessity must do so in accordance with certain standards of conduct which we may term international ethics. By this we mean honesty of purpose, frankness of expression, and a proper regard for the rights of others as members of the great family of nations.

MUSCLE SHOALS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1272) to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River, to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama; and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that the bill may be read for amendment, committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may call for a quorum?

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator from Utah withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska if, this afternoon, it is his intention to point out the difference between this bill and the House bill on the same subject?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I can point out the difference if any Senator desires me to do so, but I should like to have the request which I have made put, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Keyes	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	King	Robinson, Ark.
Austin	Costigan	La Follette	Robinson, Ind.
Bachman	Couzens	Logan	Russell
Bankhead	Cutting	Loneragan	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	McAdoo	Shipstead
Barkley	Dill	McCarran	Smith
Black	Duffy	McGill	Steiwer
Bone	Erickson	McKellar	Stephens
Borah	Fess	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bratton	Fletcher	Metcalf	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Frazier	Murphy	Townsend
Bulkley	Glass	Neely	Trammell
Bulow	Goldsborough	Norbeck	Tydings
Byrd	Gore	Norris	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Nye	Van Nuys
Capper	Harrison	Overton	Wagner
Caraway	Hayden	Patterson	Walcott
Carey	Johnson	Pittman	Walsh
Clark	Kean	Pope	Wheeler
Connally	Kendrick	Reed	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The clerk will state the first amendment reported by the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 7, line 2, after the word "donations", to insert the words "for sale", so as to read:

(e) Under the authority of this act the board may make donations or sales of the total product of the plant or plants operated by it to be fairly and equitably distributed through the agency of county demonstration agents, agricultural colleges, or otherwise as the board may direct, for experimentation, education, and introduction of the use of such products in cooperation with practical farmers so as to obtain information as to the value, effect, and best methods of use of same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 24, on page 22, line 18, after the word "section", to strike out the figures "24" and insert the figures "23", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 24. The President shall from time to time, as the work provided for in section 23 progresses, recommend to Congress such legislation as he deems proper to carry out the general purposes stated in said section and for the especial purpose of bringing about in said Tennessee drainage basin in conformity with said general purposes (1) the maximum amount of flood control; (2) the maximum development of said Tennessee River for navigation purposes; (3) the maximum generation of electric power consistent with flood control and navigation; (4) the proper use of marginal lands; (5) the proper method of reforestation of all lands in said drainage basin suitable for reforestation; and (6) the most practical method of improving agricultural conditions in the valleys of said drainage basin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that is all the committee amendments. I have several amendments which I desire to offer. On page 2, line 22, I move to strike out "fifth" and insert "third"; in the same line, to strike out "tenth" and insert "sixth"; in line 23, to strike out "fifteenth" and insert "ninth"; and in line 1, page 3, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "nine." These amendments relate to the same thing, and they all ought to be adopted or none of them. They refer to the term of office of the board, and make the term 9 years instead of 15. The amendments make the bill correspond with the bill passed by the House, and I have some hope, if this change shall be made, that the House will agree to the Senate bill when it is sent over as an amendment to the House bill. I will ask to have all the amendments just suggested by me acted upon at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments submitted by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment, but if convenient to the Senator from Nebraska, it would help me to understand if I knew just what difference there was between the bill as passed by the House and the Senate bill which is now before us. I apprehend that some of the amendments which the Senator will offer will be better understood, at least by me, and I expect by other Senators, if we may have a rough synopsis of the two bills.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, since we have passed this bill so many times through the Senate I felt just a little embarrassed about taking up the time of the Senate in going over it again. I shall be glad, however, to do so, and the Senator has made a very proper request.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is not so much that I desire information concerning the Senate bill, but I know there is another bill, a copy of which I have on my desk, which has just come to us from the House, and I was wondering not so much what the Senate bill contained as what the difference between the two bills happens to be.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. I will try to explain the two bills.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator has some formal amendments like the ones already submitted and one or two others which he may desire to offer, I think it might be all right to act on them, unless the Senator from Maryland prefers that the Senator from Nebraska should now proceed.

Mr. NORRIS. I will take either course. I will answer questions first or ask to have action on the amendments first.

Mr. TYDINGS. The amendments, I understand, do not change the philosophy of the bill, so I see no reason why they should not now be adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest that the amendments be adopted, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, under the procedure can I offer an amendment later?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh yes; there will be no attempt whatever to shut out amendments.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, when the Senator reaches page 17, I have a suggestion which I am sure will be satisfactory to him. I discussed it with him this morning. It occurred to me that perhaps the Senator's purpose would be better accomplished if we strike out line 24 on page 17, and in line 1 on the next page through the word "Congress." In other words, the bill provides generally at its end an authorization for an appropriation to build the Cove Creek Dam and all other portions of this project, and the clause I have referred to would seem to be in conflict with the general authorization, because it would seem to make it necessary hereafter to have both an authorization and an appropriation.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator talked to me about that particular part of the bill this morning, and I think the Senator's suggestion is a good one. I intimated to him then that I thought we ought to strike out, on page 17, line 24, the words "to be made available", because I think that is all cared for in a section near the close of the bill where appropriations are authorized.

Mr. BLACK. That is true, and it would seem to make it necessary later to secure an authorization, when there is an authorization provided at the end of the bill which would include this item.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it would seem so, and when we reach that page I will offer the amendment as suggested.

Mr. President, on page 6, line 4, I move to strike out the words "and directed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. On the same page, line 21, after the "(d)", I move to insert the words "In order to improve and cheapen the production of fertilizer."

Mr. FLETCHER. Where does that amendment come in?

Mr. NORRIS. At the beginning of line 21.

Mr. BANKHEAD. On what page?

Mr. NORRIS. On page 6, right after the "(d)" in line 21, so that it will read:

In order to improve and cheapen the production of fertilizer the board—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. In the same line I move to strike out the word "shall" and insert the words "authorized to." If this amendment shall be agreed to, the provision will read in this way:

In order to improve and cheapen the production of fertilizer the board is authorized to manufacture fixed nitrogen—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from what page and line he was reading?

Mr. NORRIS. Page 6, line 21.

Mr. SMITH. Paragraph (d)?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. The present language is "the board shall manufacture fixed nitrogen at Muscle Shoals", and so forth?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and as amended it will read:

In order to improve and cheapen the production of fertilizer the board is authorized to manufacture fixed nitrogen—

And so forth.

Mr. President, on page 7 the committee amendment, in line 2, has been agreed to. I desire to offer a further amendment in the same line, to strike out the word "total", so the sentence will read:

Under the authority of this act the board may make donations or sales of the product of the plant or plants operated by it—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? Will these changes leave the matter so that the board is not directed to do any of these things?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. For instance, we struck out "directed." I did not know that particular language was in there. I think it was in the prior bill and escaped notice in rewriting this bill. It would have read:

The board is authorized and directed to make a contract with commercial producers for the production of fertilizer, fertilizer material—

And so forth. In other words, in carrying out their fertilizer experiment, if they followed it technically, they would be compelled to buy fertilizer of private producers of fertilizer.

Mr. FLETCHER. I had particular reference to the changes made in subdivision (d). If the changes go into effect the matter is entirely one of discretion in the board whether they shall manufacture fertilizer or not?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. They are not compelled to do it?

Mr. NORRIS. They are not compelled to do it under that paragraph.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is all a question of whether they think it wise or proper to go into the manufacture of fixed nitrogen at all?

Mr. NORRIS. That is true. Under the terms of the bill they will have to manufacture fixed nitrogen, but they will not be required, for instance, to use existing facilities. For instance, they could manufacture and I think any study of the subject will convince anybody that they will manufacture fixed nitrogen under the synthetic process, which is much improved over the other process, although the bill gives them authority to use the other as well.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the rule of the Senate be observed and that amendments be read at the desk?

Mr. NORRIS. Most of the amendments I shall offer I have prepared and shall be glad to send to the desk. However, they involve just the change of a word or a part of a phrase or some minor change of that sort.

Mr. FESS. I agree with the Senator, but I think they should be stated at the desk.

Mr. NORRIS. I simply did not think that was necessary inasmuch as I was stating them.

Mr. FESS. Otherwise we may have confusion.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well, I shall be glad to comply with the Senator's suggestion. On page 7, line 18, I move to strike out "the board shall have power" and commence the next word "to" with a capital letter. That makes it consistent with the remainder of the paragraph enumerated under this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 18, strike out the words "the board shall have power to" and insert the word "To."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. On page 6, section 5, subsection (a), I observe that the words "and directed" have been eliminated in the line just above.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that all of these powers are authorizations rather than directions?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Under subsection (a), as I understand it from a hasty reading, the board would have the power "to contract with commercial producers for the production of such fertilizer or fertilizer materials as may be needed for the Government's program of development and introduction in excess of that produced by Government plants." As I read that, I assume the idea in mind is that the board down there could make contracts with private fertilizer concerns to buy up their output?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; that is not the idea at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is not?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no. The provisions of the bill taken as a whole constitute authority to the board to engage in experimentation in the production of fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients on a very large scale, always with the object of course of cheapening the cost of fertilizer. That particular language has been in practically every bill the Senate has passed in previous years. The reason why it was inserted was to leave no doubt. In the various experiments which will be undertaken the board might find in some experiments which they are undertaking that some fertilizer produced by some private corporation ought to be tested. They might want to experiment with it in connection with some fertilizer they themselves have produced. It may never occur, of course, but the idea was to give the board broad powers to make the experiment and not to handicap them.

Mr. TYDINGS. It was not the idea that the board would take over the private output?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no. In fact, when I come to it later the Senator will find that this is one of the differences between what I have always advocated for Muscle Shoals and what is contained in the House bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am simply inquiring, not to take issue with the provision but to understand it a little better. The other sentence in that same subsection on page 6 is:

Such contracts may provide either for outright purchase by the Government or only for the payment of carrying charges on special materials manufactured at the Government's request for its program.

In view of what the Senator has already said, I think I understand what is in mind there, but I submit to the Senator whether it would not be possible, under that power and authorization, if the board desires to do so, to purchase a private fertilizer plant?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think so. At least I do not want to give them that authority. I have no such intention.

Let me explain a little further about the provision. I think this provision was put in a bill I introduced here probably 10 years ago when I introduced it as a minority member of the committee, when we had the Ford proposal before us. I inserted this particular clause as well as some others. After quite a number of conferences, some of them very lengthy, with scientific men in the Bureau of Mines and in the Bureau of Chemistry, we had a conference with Dr. Cottrell, who, incidentally, is a man of international reputation on some matters contained in the bill. This language was put in the bill after conference with Dr. Cottrell, who thought it was necessary. He explained to me that probably there might arise a case where the board would want a contract with some private party to produce some fertilizer for their use. It might be in Indiana or Ohio or any State. The language gives the board authority either to buy it outright or to provide for the carrying charges that are necessary in carrying on the experiment. It may be that the experiment is being conducted on land at Muscle Shoals owned by the Government, or it may be that it is conducted on land privately owned in some other State.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think I understand the Senator. My interpretation is perhaps wrong, but in order that any doubt might be removed as to the authority given to the board to buy a private fertilizer plant or plants would it not be necessary to insert in that particular sentence the words "ingredient or ingredients", so it would refer only to the material rather than to the plant itself?

Mr. NORRIS. In what line?

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me read it:

Such contracts may provide either for outright purchase by the Government or only for the payment of carrying charges on special materials manufactured at the Government's request for its program.

I see the words "special materials" there. I think what the Senator said is pretty well borne out by the language, but when we read the first sentence, "such contracts may provide either for outright purchase by the Government", then I am in doubt.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we ought to change the word "Government" to "board." I am glad to have that suggestion made.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall not press the other point, although I do think that it should read, "Such contracts for materials may provide either for outright purchase", and so forth. Does the Senator see what I am attempting to point out?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and I have no objection to the Senator's suggestion at all. We must all remember, however, that it is difficult to determine how far to go. We are trying to give the board the proper authority to carry on the greatest experiment that has ever been undertaken in the history of the world. That is what we are doing in the bill. It is for the cheapening of fertilizer. Everybody concedes we are justified in expending public money for that purpose. But in giving authority to the board we must make it broad enough and we must make it wide enough to have it include enough authority so they will not be hampered. We cannot tell in advance just what they may want to do.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder if the Senator would have any objection to an amendment, so that the sentence would read:

Such contracts for materials may provide either for outright purchase by the board or only for the payment of carrying charges on special materials manufactured at the board's request for its program.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that would clarify it.

Mr. NORRIS. I am inclined to think that would improve the language.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will it be in order to offer the amendment now?

Mr. NORRIS. I will offer it if the Senator desires me to do so. I move to amend, on page 6, after the word "purchase," in line 10, by inserting the words "of materials", so as to read:

"Such contracts may provide either for outright purchase of materials by the Government," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 6, line 10, after the word "purchase", insert the words "of materials."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. In the same line, page 6, line 10, I move to strike out the word "Government" and insert the word "board", and in line 12 to strike out the word "Government's" and insert the word "board's."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 6, line 10, strike out the word "Government" and insert the word "board", and in line 12 strike out the word "Government's" and insert the word "board's", so as to read:

Such contracts may provide either for outright purchase of materials by the board or only for the payment of carrying charges on special materials manufactured at the board's request for its program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments are agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 8, after line 3, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That any invention made by an employee of the Government of the United States serving under this section, or by any employee of the corporation, together with any patent which may be granted thereon, shall be the sole and exclusive property of the corporation, which is hereby authorized to grant a license thereunder as shall be authorized by the board.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this language follows an authorization for the giving of assistance to this board by governmental officials in these experiments. If they take out patents while thus employed, this amendment provides that the patents shall belong to this board.

Mr. FESS. Is not that the law now?

Mr. NORRIS. It may be. I would not say.

Mr. FESS. It is the law.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that there is a recent decision of the Court to the effect that that is not the law unless there is a special provision to that effect.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Some 4 or 5 years ago, when Dr. Rittmann made the remarkable discovery in regard to the increase of the gasoline content in crude oil which added an enormous amount of wealth to the country, the doctor told me that under the law he had no advantage whatever of it, because the contracts of the Government require that. Rittmann was a personal friend of mine and used to be a student in the State University of Ohio, and I was in conversation with him about this remarkable discovery.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the distinction is that the Government usually incorporates in its contracts a provision that inventions by the employee signing the contract shall inure to the benefit of the Government. This makes it a matter of law.

I am wondering if the committee reporting the bill, or the Senator, have given consideration to the effect of an amendment which provides that no inventor who is employed by the Government shall derive any pecuniary benefit from his invention, the thought being this: While it is manifestly a questionable practice, and frequently unfair, to permit one who is employed by the Government to devote his time to a discovery or to an invention and then to obtain a profit from it when his time belongs to the Government, at the same time does it not tend to discourage exploration and invention by employees to provide by law that they shall not receive any benefit as a result of their genius?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is a great deal in what the Senator says.

Quite a number of years ago, when I was Chairman of the Committee on Patents, I introduced a bill and succeeded in getting it through the Senate, but it failed in the House, and I tried to get it through the Senate in the next Congress and failed here, which provided that all Government employees who got patents were to turn them over to the Government. Then I think in that bill I authorized the President of the United States in any such cases to authorize payment to the employee who made the invention of whatever he thought was right to be paid to him; and I should not have any objection to such an amendment being offered here.

The truth is that the amendment we are talking about was suggested to me by a patent attorney. I would have laid it before the committee if I had had it in time, as I would all these other amendments; but the committee was very busy, its chairman being in charge of the farm bill, and I felt that I would not be justified in asking him to call the committee together for that purpose. Therefore I prepared the amendment. I did not offer it just as the patent attorney had prepared it. He had some other suggestions that I did not follow. The truth is that I prepared the amendment this morning, and I was very much rushed for time. If the Senator from Arkansas or any other Senator would like to consider that matter and try to remodel this amendment, I have no objection to its going over for the present. If the Senator would like to consider a modification of it, I am in entire sympathy with the suggestion he makes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thank the Senator. It seems to me that the matter is well worthy of some consideration. I am prepared to proceed with it now. I should not like to have it go over indefinitely.

Mr. NORRIS. This amendment will be in conference anyway. There is no provision on the subject in the House bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. My thought is that perhaps the board itself ought to be authorized to make reasonable provision for the inventor.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me say that if the Senate bill is agreed to, and substituted, as I hope it will be, for the House bill, this amendment will be in conference, and we will have more time to consider the matter then; and I should be glad to try to add to it some provision that would authorize the board to make a reasonable allowance to any employee under these circumstances.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Perhaps the language which the Senator has just used would be adequate for the purposes I have in mind with the addition of a proviso to this effect:

Provided, That the Board may make a reasonable allowance to any employee for his invention.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose we add that to the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will offer that as an amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I accept it, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to make a few observations. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor at this moment, however, and I do not want to interrupt him.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I offer that as an amendment to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. As far as I can accept it, I am agreeable to the amendment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word on this particular subject. Recently the Supreme Court passed on this matter; and unless there is a provision of some kind on the subject here or in other legislation, these Government employees have full right to their patents.

I think some such provision as is being worked out is desirable on this legislation. The truth of the matter is that the patent law should be amended, and this matter taken care of by a statute affecting all Government employees; and that is especially true in the light of the recent decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will indulge me for a moment, I should like to obtain his views concerning the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I am inclined to the view that their position is not quite just or sound, and yet I shall be glad to have them further elaborate the subject.

The Government has in its employ many technical and scientific men who are employed because of their knowledge of subjects in which the Government is interested and matters in which it deals. They have been employed because of their supposed experiences and qualifications to engage in important scientific research. They were glad to accept the positions and were expected to devote their time and energies to the work for which they were engaged. They knew that in various departments of the Government important research work was and is being conducted, research work which may eventuate in new discoveries and inventions. The work of the Government in some of its departments is technical and scientific, and it is expected that those whom it employs will make new discoveries and contribute to the scientific and technical knowledge of the world. The Government furnishes laboratories and assistants and facilities for investigation and research. It is, as I understand, expected that those employed for such purposes will give their time and attention and their best endeavors to advance the interests of the Government and to add to the scientific knowledge of the day. They are not supposed to give their time to private matters or to what might be denominated extraneous matters.

It is obvious that in the many technical and scientific fields in which the Government operates, there will be improvement and the technicians and scientific men in the service of the Government will make new discoveries and evolve improvements and advancements in the fields in which they labor.

I inquire, if while so employed, it is ethical or proper for them, utilizing the resources of the Government, the facilities which it provides, the laboratories and scientific apparatus which it furnishes, to engage in private investigation in matters and questions and fields which they were employed to explore?

Mr. FESS. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. KING. In a moment I shall yield. To illustrate what I have in mind—suppose persons who are employed by the Government are working in chemical laboratories provided and maintained by the Government, with ample facilities for research work, and particular and minute investigation of particular matters and problems, would it be proper for such persons while so employed and while using the funds and facilities and laboratories of the Government for the purpose of inventing or discovering matters and things advantageous and necessary for the Government in its operations to claim compensation in addition to that which they have received because of some improvement or discovery or invention resulting from their labors?

Apply it to persons employed by private individuals or corporations. What would be the result? I have in mind a great scientist who comes from my own State. He has been employed for a number of years with the Bell Telephone Co. in scientific and research work. He has added greatly to the scientific knowledge of the day, and has made important discoveries in respect to sound and electricity. He has been employed for particular work and to engage in particular scientific research. I inquire as to whether new discoveries and inventions resulting from his labors while so employed would entitle him to patents upon such discoveries or inventions?

Senators are familiar with the fact that the Government has maintained at great expense plants, laboratories, and stations in which are conducted scientific investigations with a view to discovering the nature and character of gases and agencies for military purposes. The Government has also at great expense conducted experiments at Langley Field for the purpose of improving aerial navigation. Scientific men have been and are engaged in this work; they have been employed specially because of their scientific knowledge and because they were specialists. They were not employed to prosecute private or individual scientific investigations, but to give of their time and of their ability to make new discoveries and improvements that would be not only of advantage to the Government, but with the consent of the Government, to the entire country. Many of these persons have been in the employ of the Government for years and have a civil-service status. They have all the advantages resulting from a continuity of service and from the retirement privileges which follow such service. I inquire again, if, while so employed to make new discoveries, and they succeed in so doing, should they be permitted to take advantage of the same and obtain patents and thus deprive the Government of the results of their labors for which the Government has paid?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The item that was of interest to me was in the case I mentioned in the increase of the gasoline content of crude oil. This young man was directly interested in scientific research, and he went through the State University of Ohio, and made that his major study. Then he went on to Columbia University and stayed quite a while in research work; but he could not find there all the facilities that he needed in the pursuit of that particular line of work. He then made application to come to the Bureau of Mines, in order to further in practical application the thing he was working out; and while in the employ of that Bureau he made this discovery. In fact, he was looking ahead to something of this sort; and, to my surprise, he told me afterward that by virtue of his being employed as a Government worker he could get no advantage whatever from this remarkable discovery, and it struck me that it was not quite ethical.

I see the force of the statement of the Senator that generally speaking, in all probability, a man who is paid a salary, who comes here to make the Government service his life work, and who makes a discovery, might not be in as strong a position as the one I have in mind; but in the case of men in the Government service, especially the research divisions, such as the Bureau of Standards and others, who are doing special work, trying to discover what has not yet been discovered, would we not really get greater public benefit if we could recognize the principle suggested by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the question before us is not entirely free from doubt. It may be true (but as to that I have some doubts) that a person employed by the Government, because of his scientific knowledge and employed to make investigations for the Government in fields in which the Government is vitally interested, may, if he is permitted to acquire a proprietary interest in some of these discoveries, work more assiduously or exhibit greater interest in his researches. Certainly he would not if he appreciated his obligation and possessed the spirit of the true scientist. There is a question of ethics involved in the matter we are discussing. If the Government is engaged in an important research work which calls for the employment of scientists, and it employs persons for such investigation and research, certainly they are expected to give of their time and their services and their ability to the accomplishment of the work for which they are employed. They should, it seems to me, devote themselves earnestly and seriously to the work for which they have been employed.

During the war, as Senators know, many technical and scientific men were employed in branches of the Government. They were employed to make discoveries that would be helpful to the Government in its military and naval operations. It is known that important discoveries were made in the matter of gases, explosives, and submarines, depth bombs, and many other agencies destructive and utilitarian. Would it be ethical for those so employed who were expected to aid the Government and to contribute to the winning of the war to obtain patents upon the discoveries made, or claim compensation and advantages other than those which the Government had agreed to give to them?

I have in mind a field in which the Government is interested. To carry on the work in this field, the Bureau of Mines has been established in which scientific and technical men are employed for the work of the Government. Many of them are employed to make investigations in coals and hydrocarbons. Some are employed for the purpose of discovering the causes of explosions in mines and to devise means to prevent these explosions. The Government furnishes every facility for investigations by those employed.

Millions of dollars are expended by the Government in research work. In the University of Utah, an institution in which the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] served with distinction for a number of years, there is a branch of the Bureau of Mines. A number of technical and scientific men have been employed there for years, and they have carried on important and valuable researches for the purpose of discovering all the elements and combinations in coal and what processes must be employed in order that all of the properties in coal might be utilized to the highest advantage and for the benefit, not only of the owners of coal properties, but of the people generally.

The Government paid for these researches, examinations, and investigations, and the scientists so employed were glad to engage in the work for which they were employed and undoubtedly utilized all of their scientific knowledge to secure the best results. I am advised that in these investigations discoveries were made that will tend to revolutionize the use of coal, or at any rate that will obtain from bituminous coals far greater wealth and benefits than have been obtained. It may be that if persons so employed by the Government should make some discovery not in the field for which they are employed, a different question would then be presented.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, I meet the major force of his proposition that the Government should receive the benefit of these discoveries, but I believe in the long-range views that the public would be benefited if we should give the man who made the discovery recognition of some sort.

Mr. KING. It may be that in addition to the compensation paid to the employee of the Government some bonus or gratuity should be paid him, or some honor conferred upon him, but the broad question before us, as I understand it, is whether legally and technically persons employed by the Government for scientific, technical, and research work should, while so employed and while using all the facilities of the Government to aid them in such investigations, investigations which they are employed to make in order that discoveries, improvements, and advances in science and knowledge should be obtained, should be permitted to obtain patents upon such discoveries and inventions or to receive profits and pecuniary advantages aside from what the Government contracted to pay them.

As Senators know, most of the results flowing from scientific and technical investigations made by the Government inure to the advantage of the public.

Some of the scientists in the Agricultural Department, by reason of investigations made, discover methods of eradicating diseases in plants and vegetables, and make discoveries that are of immense advantage to the agriculturists of our country. It would seem that while so employed for the purpose of making these investigations, which are for the benefit of the Government, and for which they are paid by the Government out of the taxes collected from the people, they should not claim additional compensation as a matter of right, or be permitted to obtain patents to or for inventions and discoveries resulting from their efforts.

It is possible that some plan might be devised by which additional compensation or advantages might be made after a thorough investigation of all the facts by a board set up for that purpose by the Government; and yet, it would be difficult to draw the line and to determine just when persons who have been paid for their services should receive additional compensation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the amendments offered by the Senator from Arkansas contemplates the appointment of a board. That is precisely what his amendment would do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to modify the amendment so that it would read as follows:

Provided further, That the Board may pay to such inventor such sum from the income from sale of licenses as it may deem proper.

As modified, the amendment would limit the power of the Board to payments out of income from the sale of licenses and would not fix any charge upon the General Treasury.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator, if his amendment were accepted and should become a part of the law, would it not be an entering wedge for the payment to every employee of the Government, in every department in which that employee might be engaged, for any improvement or discovery made by him?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, frankly answering the Senator from Utah, it seems to me that the amendment is based on a principle of justice, that it cannot be anticipated or expected that persons who are employees of the Government, the most of them receiving small compensation, and who happen to possess that peculiar characteristic known as inventive genius, should work over-hours, as most inventors do, with the absolute assurance that, no matter how great might be their success or their triumph, no matter to what extent they might enrich the board or the Government which has employed them on meager salaries, neither they nor their dependents may ever expect to receive any benefit. It seems to me that if we do not wish to stamp out and crush the inventive genius which has been demonstrated throughout the history of our country by many of our citizens, and by some of them in a most notable way, we ought at least to hold out to them the fair prospect of obtaining some compensation as the result of the great sacrifices which they probably must make if they succeed as inventors.

It is an old, old story, one with which every Senator is familiar, that almost from the beginning of history the men who have exhausted their physical and mental resources in trying to work out some great invention for the betterment of humanity, for the improvement of living conditions, usually go to their graves in poverty and sorrow, having been deprived of all benefits by some person or combination of persons who are shrewd enough to see the value of the work done by the humble citizen, and to obtain ownership or control of his invention before he himself realizes, in his extremity, what may be the prospects of profit from it.

It seems to me that it is not quite fair for the United States Government to take into its employ on small salaries persons who possess the talent or genius for invention, and expect them to go forward, with sacrifice, and at some personal expense, and, at the same time, have it written into the law that, no matter how great their sacrifice or their efforts, those inventors cannot have any profit from their labors. We would discourage invention as we could accomplish that unwholesome result in no other way, and if we wish to stamp out and destroy the spirit of advancement in the minds and hearts of the employees of the Government, the best way to do it is to say that, no matter how hard they work, no matter how much overtime they expend in carrying out a thought which they have conceived, they cannot derive any benefit from it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am very much in favor of the modification of my amendment by the adoption of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, and I do accept it and make it a part of my amendment, so that we will not have to have 2 votes on it.

Let me say just a word about it. I have listened with a great deal of interest to what has been said here on both sides of the question. I want to call the Senate's attention to a particular case which happened while Muscle Shoals legislation has been pending before Congress. It is connected with our operation of the nitrate plant down at Muscle Shoals. It shows that what the Senator from Arkansas has said is often true—that the man who invents, and is working for the Government when he makes an invention, reaps no benefit whatever. I do not think such a man ought to own his invention; the Government ought to have it, because the man is being paid by the Government when he invents the process or whatever it may be. But no inventor ever worked on an 8-hour basis or a 4-hour basis. They work on their inventions at night. They wake up at midnight, and lie awake through the night working the thing out. That is generally the case.

Mr. President, down at nitrate plant no. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Dr. Cottrell, whose name I mentioned a while ago, one of the great scientific men of the world, invented an improvement used in the extraction of nitrogen from the atmosphere. He was in the employ of the Government when he did that. He never got a penny for it; he never even had it patented. I have talked with him about it. He got his reward in the satisfaction of doing something for humanity, and there are thousands of men who feel the same way.

Mr. President, that patent is used all over the world now where the process of getting nitrogen from the atmosphere is employed. Men came to Muscle Shoals from foreign countries to see how it was operated, and the satisfaction Dr. Cottrell got out of it was the satisfaction in his own heart that he had done some good for humanity.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think perhaps we are a little at cross purposes. Suppose Dr. Cottrell had been employed by the Government of the United States for the purpose of trying to obtain nitrogen from the atmosphere.

Mr. NORRIS. That is just what he was employed for.

Mr. KING. Suppose the Government of the United States were engaged in that enterprise, the same as the industries had been engaged in the enterprise, and the Government was paying Dr. Cottrell as a scientist to do that work, and in the execution of his work, for which he had been employed as a scientist, he made that discovery. Does the Senator think then that the Government ought not to be the beneficiary?

Mr. NORRIS. The Government is the beneficiary. I do not want to say that Dr. Cottrell should have the patent, that it should be his individually. I believe that he ought to have something out of it, however. But the Government ought to own the patent. Both the Government and the employee should make something out of it.

It seems to me we should hold out inducements to men and women who are working for the Government that if they will bring about improvements the Government will see that they are benefited as well as that the Government is benefited from the inventions.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to read from a bulletin sent us by the United States Department of Agriculture, dated July 1, 1932, I think I can show who become the beneficiaries of improvements discovered by the geniuses whom we employ and for which we do not allow them to benefit. Let us see who gets the benefit:

The pioneer scientific and technical researches on fertilizers and fixed nitrogen, as conceived and fostered by the Department of Agriculture and carried through by industry, is an excellent example of a Government activity and service to the industry, the consuming public, and civilization in general. When the investigations were carried through to pilot-plant scale and their economic feasibility determined, industry took over the processes together with the personnel trained by the Government.

Mr. President, when employees of the Government make discoveries, the Government does not benefit. The processors, the manufacturers, are the ones who take the patent. The Government having done all the pioneering work and discovered a process, for example, by which a whole plant is given additional facilities, then industry takes it, and the public pays for it. This bulletin proceeds with that discussion, and in my own time I shall have something to say about the system under which employees of the Government, in its experimental plants, for which we pay, making discoveries; and, in place of the public being the beneficiary of such discoveries, the Government sells the processes to the great corporations who manufacture the articles, and they charge what they please for the articles so manufactured.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this amendment would prohibit that.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly, to a degree, but we ought to provide some means by which the Government would hold its hand on these discoveries of genius which revolutionize our organized society and not turn them over to corporations.

I think we ought to amend our patent laws. As the ranking member of the Committee on Patents, I have been astounded at contracts that manufacturers enter into with inventors. Not only do they buy the patent rights from the one who makes the discovery of the original basic art but they have him sign an agreement that all subsequent discoveries by him shall be the property of the corporation. The Patent Office has been the prolific source of monopolies and combinations. Anyone studying our patent laws and ascertaining what has grown out of them may readily understand how monopolies have sprung up which have throttled the progress of industry in this country. The history of the internal-combustion engine is a fine illustration of the power monopoly to acquire the discoveries of inventive geniuses. Monopoly has the power and the money with which to develop and commercialize the use of inventions. I think a good example of that is afforded by the Agricultural Department in that discoveries made by those employed by it do not benefit the Government, but benefit those who have the capital to process and commercialize the discoveries, and who, when they have purchased the patents, have a monopoly and the public fails to profit by the inventions of these employed by the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has accepted the modified amendment of the Senator from Arkansas and the question is on the amendment as modified. Without objection the amendment, as modified, is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I send to the desk an amendment to come in on page 12, and ask that it may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, at the end of line 14, it is proposed to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided, that the board is hereby authorized and directed to make studies, experiments, and determinations to promote the wider and better use of electric power for agricultural and domestic use, or for small or local industries, and it may cooperate with State governments, or their subdivisions or agencies, with educational or research institutions, and with cooperatives or other organizations, in the application of electric power to the fuller and better balanced development of the resources of the region.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on page 12, line 13, after the word "of" and just before the word "electric", I move to insert the word "such", so that it will read:

Sale and distribution of such electric power.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What would be the effect of the amendment, if agreed to?

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment refers to a particular development of power and it makes application of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, line 13, after the word "of", it is proposed to insert the word "such", so that the line will read:

Sale and distribution of such electric power—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. On page 12, I want to transpose certain words in order to make the grammar a little better, I think, without at all changing the meaning. Beginning in line 6, the clause reads:

In order to provide for the fullest possible use of electric light and power on farms, the board in its discretion shall have power within reasonable distance of any of its transmission lines—

And so forth. I want to transpose the words "the board in its discretion shall have power" from line 8, where they now are, to line 9, immediately after the word "lines", so that it will read:

In order to provide for the fullest possible use of electric light and power on farms within reasonable distance of any of its transmission lines the board in its discretion shall have power—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, line 8, it is proposed to strike out the words "the board in its discretion shall have power" and to insert the same words after the word "lines" in line 9, so that the clause will read as follows:

In order to provide for the fullest possible use of electric light and power on farms within reasonable distance of any of its transmission lines the board in its discretion shall have power to construct—

And so forth—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer another amendment to come in on page 13, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 13, line 2, after the word "generated", it is proposed to insert:

and to interconnect with other systems. The board is also authorized to lease to any person, persons, or corporation any transmission line owned by the Government and operated by the board, but no such lease shall be made that in any way interferes with the use of such transmission line by the board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I send to the desk another amendment to come in on page 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed on page 13, line 8, to strike out the letter "a" and insert "and maintain a properly designed and built."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. On the same page in line 11, after the word "Government", I move to insert the words "or leased by the board."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 13, line 11, after the word "Government", it is proposed to insert the words "or leased by the board."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk, to come in on page 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 14, after line 19, after the word "board", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the board is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with other power systems for the mutual exchange of unused excess power upon suitable terms, for the conservation of stored water and as emergency or break-down relief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. On page 14—

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator want to ask me a question about the amendment which has just been agreed to?

Mr. COPELAND. I want to ask a question about the provision with reference to gross proceeds on page 14, beginning in line 20. Did the committee give it any attention?

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator let me finish the amendments going down to the point to which he refers? Then I shall be glad to take that up.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. On page 14, line 12, after the word "at", I move to strike out the words "a price" and to insert the word "prices."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 14, line 12, after the word "at", it is proposed to strike out the words "a price" and to insert the word "prices", so as to read:

Electric power at prices—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. On the same page, in line 12, after the word "exceed", I move to strike out the words "an amount" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a schedule", so that it will read:

That shall not exceed a schedule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 14, line 12, after the word "exceed", it is proposed to strike out the words "an amount" and insert the words "a schedule", so as to read:

Shall not exceed a schedule fixed—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. On page 14, line 13, after the word "fixed", I move to insert the words "by the board from time to time", and to strike out the words "by the board" in the same line after the word "fair."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 14, line 13, after the word "fixed", it is proposed to insert the words "by the board from time to time"; and on the same page, in the same line, after the word "fair", to strike out the words "by the board."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Now I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I find in line 20, on page 14, provision is made for the payment of 5 percent of the gross proceeds to the State of Alabama, and so forth. Did the committee give any thought to the idea of making that "net proceeds"?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the language is identical with the language that has been in the bill which the Senate passed several times heretofore; it was discussed, and the Senator will realize, I think, when he reads the latter part of the section that "gross proceeds" in that case are not as inclusive as he might think. Commencing on the next page, in line 17, the clause reads:

In ascertaining the gross proceeds from the sale of such power upon which a percentage is paid to the States of Alabama and Tennessee the Board shall not take into consideration the proceeds of any power sold to the Government of the United States, or any Department of the Government of the United States used in the operation of any locks on the Tennessee River, or for any experimental purpose, or for the manufacture of fertilizer or any of the ingredients thereof, or for any other governmental purpose.

That considerably modifies what might at first seem an all-embracing expression in reference to gross proceeds.

Mr. COPELAND. I can see that the modification suggested by the Senator does make a great difference, but the tax proposed on gross proceeds, it seems to me, might absorb all the income of the establishment. That is the reason why I propounded the inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. The idea, I will say to the Senator, is—some people do not agree with it, of course, but it has always been my idea—that, for instance, if Cove Creek Dam were built by a private party, it would be taxed, and the State of Tennessee would derive considerable revenue from the taxation of the property, but under this measure it would get nothing in the way of taxation. This is intended to compensate the States for the loss of taxation.

I realize what can be said to the effect that the Government should not be taxed; but, in carrying out this governmental purpose, incidentally we shall sell some power and make some money out of it; and when it comes to revenue, it does not seem to me the Government ought to be in any different position from an ordinary taxpayer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In addition, may I say to the Senator from New York and to other Senators, the proposed dam will take the larger part of one county, and probably entirely destroy that county or force it to be merged with another county, and also large portions of two other counties will be affected. In other words, the lake which will be formed by the Cove Creek Dam will take up substantially one large county in Tennessee and will remove that county from State taxation and from local taxation as well. For this reason it seems to me the provision is very reasonable.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator find any advantages from this Tennessee Valley authority which would be adequately compensating if the State of Tennessee did not get this percentage payment annually?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, it will help the people of Tennessee; and, so far as the government of the State of Tennessee is concerned, it seems to me that it is a reasonable and proper compensation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator oppose the bill with the 5 percent eliminated?

Mr. McKELLAR. I did on a former occasion.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I realize that, and that is why I am asking the Senator now whether the new prospectus has additional compensation?

Mr. McKELLAR. There was not any compensation at all in the bill that I opposed on a previous occasion; that is, the State of Tennessee got nothing whatsoever for the loss of the taxing power over a county and got nothing for the destruction of its property and its taxing power. The Senator from Nebraska afterward very properly, as it seems to me, inserted this provision. It seems to me, in all fairness to the State of Tennessee, it ought to be allowed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I recall that the Senator said to me that there are navigation and flood-control advantages to the State of Tennessee out of this development. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. It may be helpful if the project is completed. The building of the dam alone will not make it so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator contemplates those advantages from this project, does he not?

Mr. McKELLAR. I doubt from the standpoint of the Cove Creek Dam whether that is possible or not. I doubt if it will ever be utilized for navigation purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am speaking about flood control.

Mr. McKELLAR. Flood control will help not only Tennessee but all the States below this dam on the Tennessee and Mississippi and Ohio Rivers.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Are the benefits of the bill to Tennessee confined to the 5-percent commission on Government expenditures?

Mr. McKELLAR. So far as the State itself is concerned, that is perhaps true; but so far as the people of the State disconnected from the State government are concerned, that is not true.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the 5 percent were eliminated, it would still be an advantage to the State of Tennessee, would it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. It would be an advantage to the people of the State of Tennessee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I recall when a bill known as the "Muscle Shoals bill" substantially the same as the one under consideration was before the Senate. The Senator from Tennessee violently opposed the same. He insisted that under its provisions a number of counties in Tennessee would be inundated.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; land amounting to one county. The lands in three counties, the county of Union, the county of Clairborne, and the county of Campbell, and it will inundate about as much as one average county in Tennessee, but taking a part of each of the three counties. The Senator is right. There was no provision for compensation to the State of Tennessee for the loss of its taxing power over so large a portion of its territory. The Senator from Nebraska realized it afterward and inserted this provision in order to meet the objections I then raised to the bill. The position I took then and the position that I take now are perfectly consistent. Since that time we have passed the Muscle Shoals bill three times, I believe, have we not?

Mr. NORRIS. I believe so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am waiting rather impatiently for an explanation of the provisions of the bill before us and the reasons which it is alleged justify its enactment into law. The report accompanying the bill affords but little information, and the bill itself contains so many general and indeterminate provisions that it is impossible to predict just what it seeks or will accomplish. I should like to know how much land is to be inundated, the value of the same, the necessity for destroying most of one county and a part of two other counties. I desire information as to the cost of this enterprise. I want to know what the damages will be for the land which is to be taken, the cost of buildings to be erected, the plants to be constructed, and the power lines which are to traverse large sections of several States, and the ultimate cost to the Government. I should like to know the limits of the bill, the field which it is to cover, the projects which it is to construct, and the activities in which it is to engage.

A brief survey of the bill, as I have indicated, does not supply that information which it seems to me should be required when legislation is to be enacted which undoubtedly will require many millions of dollars, and project the Government into business and industrial activities which but a short time ago were regarded as beyond the province and authority of the National Government. But we are in strange times; this is a period of unrest, indeed, of panic, and it is easy in this condition of confusion and bewilderment to make suggestions, many of which may be unsound and some of which may be dangerous, which appeal to many of the people. History discloses the fact that sound principles of economics and of government are forgotten when economic confusion and severe industrial depressions exist.

We instinctively, like men floundering in deep water, reach out to grasp any floating substance, no matter how fragile it may be. Undoubtedly there is a strong movement throughout the land to have the Federal Government engage in enterprises of almost every character. The idea seems to be prevalent that the Government is endowed with some hidden and immortal powers that will enable it to take over the functions of individuals, communities, and States and successfully carry on not only governmental activities but all the functions which belong to the field of private endeavor. Paternalism and socialism make great headway in periods of depression. It may be that the situation is such as to warrant the Government spending millions, if not several hundred millions, of dollars, in the completion of the so-called "Muscle Shoals project." It may be that the Government should build great dams and form great lakes and construct great power plants for the development of electrical energy and transmission lines to carry such energy to various communities and States and to sell and dispose of the same to individuals, corporations, States, and their political subdivisions. It may be deemed wise for the Federal Government to build great plants, to manufacture nitrogen and products by the synthetic or other processes to provide fertilizers for sale to the farmers of our country.

Of course, if the Government can engage in some of these activities, it would seem that there will be difficulty in determining just where the Government should stop in its activities in industry and in the fields which have heretofore been regarded as belonging to individuals and corporations. There should be some line of separation between the legitimate functions of the Government and the rights, duties, responsibilities, and functions of individuals. I know that there is a strong movement in the United States which, if unchecked, will eventuate in the Government owning and operating the railroads and the various agencies employed in transportation.

The Government has appropriated enormous sums for the construction of dams and power plants, and it is called upon to spend hundreds of millions of dollars more for the construction of additional dams, canals, lakes, power plants, transmission lines, and instrumentalities for the distribution of electrical energy.

Socialism has reached its apex in Russia, where the Government owns, controls, and operates everything. In some other countries socialistic movements have attained powerful proportions. Undoubtedly many people look with deep satisfaction upon the growth of socialism and the latter-day developments in our economic and industrial life which restrict, if they do not extirpate, individual activity and what some call the individualistic theory of economics and of government.

If we are to believe the newspaper reports, we may be warranted in inquiring as to just what form our Government is to assume; that is whether it is to be a government of law which recognizes the rights of individuals and of sovereign States, and which recognizes the limitations and restrictions upon the Federal Government or a government in which there are no restrictions upon the Federal Government either as to the assertion of political power or the authority to control all forms of industry. As I understand, it has been suggested in certain official quarters, that in transactions and industries labelled interstate, the Federal Government shall have power to determine the amount of production of the commodity and allocate to individuals or corporations the quantity which they shall produce. Prices are to be fixed; licenses for interstate businesses are to be obtained; and, broadly stated, the industrial activities of the country are to be supervised by Federal agencies.

However, I shall not pursue this thought further. Recurring to the bill, I perceive that it is understood that a large area of land will be inundated; that the Government will have to pay damages, that appraisers are to be provided in order to determine the damages which the Government is to pay when it seeks condemnation. Senators know from their experience that when the Government condemns land, the Treasury of the United States is called upon to make an enormous contribution. I have been informed that lands which the Government desired for game refuges and which it was expected would cost but a very small sum—a dollar or two an acre—advanced far beyond any possible dreams when payment had to be made by the Government.

I recall that when measures were under consideration for the protection of the Mississippi Valley and it was suggested that a considerable area in Louisiana would be inundated, at least periodically, that it was stated by a distinguished representative of that State that it would cost $200,000,000 to pay for the damages to the land which was to be periodically covered with water. Unless some limitations are placed in the bill, I feel sure that the additional cost to the Government will exceed $100,000,000. I have not yet been advised as to the reasons for the Government's entering upon this enterprise. There may be reasons adequate and sufficient, but I have understood, however, from statements made by proponents of the measure, that it is not needed for the manufacture of fertilizers, and that the cost of the dams and the machinery and plants for the manufacture of fertilizer would not be warranted. I am not advised that there is no imperative need for the construction of the plants in the Tennessee Valley for the production of electrical energy. At any rate, if additional electrical power is required, there is no necessity for the enormous appropriation which this bill will call for before the project contemplated is completed.

It cannot be urged that this enterprise is being developed for the purpose of experimentation. There is no need to experiment for the purpose of discovering how to manufacture fertilizers. We have many plants in the United States producing fertilizers. It is obvious that if this product should be produced at Muscle Shoals, the transportation rates would be prohibitive beyond a distance of a few hundred miles.

There is no need for the building of a plant at Muscle Shoals for experimental purposes in the development of electricity. Private enterprise and private capital have made enormous strides in the development and transmission of electric energy. Electric wires traverse our country, and nearly every section of the United States is supplied now with electric power. I might add in passing that it is contended by many that electricity can be produced cheaper from oil or coal than from falling water; however, I do not want to enter into that controversy. I only point to the fact that there seems to be no warrant for spending tens of millions, if not considerably more than a hundred millions of dollars additional, in order to do some experimental work at Muscle Shoals in the development and transmission of electric power. The Federal Government has not been very fortunate in many of its investments in enterprises within the field of private endeavor or in some of its projects for the benefit of agriculture or various industries.

It has expended by direct appropriation and by loans, hundreds of millions of dollars in the shipping industry with unsatisfactory results. It recently appropriated $500,000,000 to be expended by the Farm Board, and the recent reports indicate that nearly all this stupendous sum has been lost and wasted. It has spent millions of dollars in boats and barges upon the Mississippi and other streams without justification and without satisfactory results.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I dislike to press this matter, but I really want some information. Does it not seem strange that we should take from the income of this operation not alone from the sale of power generated by the waters of the dam but also from the steam plant? It is going to cost a lot of money to operate a steam plant, whether it does to operate a water plant or not, and yet the bill as it is written provides that 5 percent of the gross proceeds both from water plant and from steam plant shall be paid over to the State of Alabama or to the State of Tennessee as the case may be.

That seems to me to be a very unusual proceeding. I can understand how we might pay 5 percent of the net proceeds, but to spend the money to operate not alone the water plant but the steam plant and then to take 5 percent of all the gross income, regardless of the cost of maintenance and operation and overhead, and pay it to the respective States is a proposal that I can hardly understand.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on page 17, I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Nebraska proposes, on page 17, line 10, after the word "war" to insert the words "or the Secretary of the Interior", so as to read:

The Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Interior, whenever the President deems it advisable, is hereby empowered and directed to complete Dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, Ala.—

And so forth.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to address myself for the moment to the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. He certainly must be in error in saying that the bill contemplates the operation of a steam plant. I have been told that we have in the Tennessee Valley the greatest water power in the world, so important that the Government is justified in expending tens of millions of dollars in its development. Is not the Senator from New York in error in saying that we are to operate steam in addition to the water power?

Mr. COPELAND. I am not surprised that the Senator asks the question. I invite his attention to the language on page 14, beginning in line 20:

Five percent of the gross proceeds received by the board for the sale of power generated at Dam No. 2, or from the steam plant located in that vicinity, or from any other steam plant hereafter constructed in the State of Alabama, shall be paid to the State of Alabama.

I suppose there is a certain amount of primary power which can be depended on throughout the year, but to make certain there is a uniform supply of power it has been necessary to erect a steam plant, and the States are to have 5 percent of the gross proceeds not only of the water-power plant but of the power generated in the steam plant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 17, line 23, after the word "War", the Senator from Nebraska proposes to insert the words "or the Secretary of the Interior", so as to read:

The Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, with appropriation hereafter to be made available by the Congress—

And so forth.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, why is this change proposed? Perhaps the Senator from Nebraska has already explained it, but I did not hear his explanation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am doing this at the request of the President of the United States. In the remodeling or reorganization of the Departments it may be that part and perhaps all, as contemplated by another amendment which I am going to offer, of this project will be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior, or he may direct the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of War to employ engineers in private life to do such work as he may designate.

Mr. COPELAND. I understand that in the reorganization of the Departments the activity may be found in the Interior Department rather than in the War Department, and for that reason the Senator offers the amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, while the Senator from Nebraska is on that question, may I suggest that it would seem to me that it would be wise to strike out line 24, on page 17, and the word "Congress", at the beginning of line 1, on the following page, giving the Secretary of War undoubted authority thereunder to build the Cove Creek Dam and to rely upon the authorization which appears at the end of the bill, the general authorization.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is right. It is agreeable to me to accept that amendment so far as I can.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 17, line 24, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] proposes to strike out the words "with appropriations hereafter to be made available by the Congress", so the section would read:

The Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to construct, either directly or by contract to the lowest responsible bidder—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I send to the clerk's desk another amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Nebraska proposes, on page 18, line 15, after the word "dam", to insert a colon and the following provisos:

Provided, however, That the President is hereby expressly authorized by the appropriate order to direct the employment by the Secretary of War, or by the Secretary of the Interior, of such engineer or engineers as he may designate, to perform such duties and obligations as he may deem proper, either in the drawing of plans and specifications for said dam, or to perform any other work in the building and construction of the same. The President may, by such order, place the control of the construction of said dam in the hands of such engineer or engineers taken from private life as he may desire: And provided further, That the President is hereby expressly authorized, without regard to the restriction or limitation of any other statute, to select attorneys and assistants for the purpose of making any investigation he may deem proper to ascertain whether in the control and management of Dam No. 2, or any other dam or property owned by the Government in the Tennessee River Basin, or in the authorization of any improvement therein, there has been any undue or unfair advantage given to private persons, partnerships, or corporations by any officials or employees of the Government or whether in any such matters the Government has been injured or unjustly deprived of any of its rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. On the same page—page 18—in line 17, after the word "War", I move to insert the words "or the Secretary of the Interior."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 18, line 17, after the word "War", it is proposed to insert "or the Secretary of the Interior", so as to read:

In order to enable and empower the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Interior—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I send to the desk an amendment to be inserted on page 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is also proposed, on page 20, at the end of line 11, to insert:

Provided, That the benefits of this section shall not apply to any art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter discovered or invented by such employee during the time of his employment or service with the corporation or with the Government of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. On page 20, line 9, after the word "compensation", I move to insert "for such infringement", so that it will read:

for the recovery of reasonable compensation for such infringement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 20, line 9, after the word "compensation", it is proposed to insert "for such infringement."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I send to the desk another amendment, to be inserted on page 20, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 22, at the end of line 16, it is proposed to add the following words:

or subdivisions or agencies of such States, or with cooperative or other organizations, and to make such studies, experiments, or demonstrations as may be necessary and suitable to that end.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, without desiring to be at all critical, I should like to ask the able Senator from Nebraska if all of these amendments which he is suggesting were considered by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. KING. And if not, why not?

Mr. NORRIS. Most of the amendments that I am offering now came after the committee had acted on the bill and reported it. I explained at the beginning that I would have been glad to have the committee consider them if it had not been that the chairman of the committee had charge of the farm bill, which was then pending, all the members of the committee were interested in it, and I thought it would be practically an impossibility for the committee to be called together to consider these amendments.

Some of these amendments, including the one which we have here now, were suggested—not always in the form in which they are offered, because he sometimes suggested the idea, but it seemed so plausible that it seemed to me the amendments were justified—by Mr. Morgan, who is connected with Antioch College as the head of the engineering department. He is the engineer who had charge of building the flood-control dams in and about Dayton, Ohio; and everybody knows what a wonderful engineering work that was. This amendment, which he suggested, appeals to me, and I think it would to anyone who would read the text, as being necessary. The language says, winding up—

All for the general purpose of fostering an orderly and proper physical, economic, and social development of said areas; and the President is further authorized in making said surveys and plans to cooperate with States affected thereby, or—subdivisions or agencies of such States, or with cooperative or other organizations, and to make such studies, experiments, or demonstrations as may be necessary and suitable to that end.

This is the amendment—

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. To be textually correct, we should have to strike out the period.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is true. The Senator from Ohio suggests that the period after the word "thereby" be stricken out. I have it stricken out here; but it is not, in the amendment. I suppose the clerk probably would do that, anyway; but to be sure about it I should like to have the period stricken out and a comma inserted in place of it.

I thank the Senator for the suggestion.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, for the sake of the RECORD I desire to state that Dr. Morgan is the president of Antioch College, not the head of the engineering department.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very glad to be corrected.

Mr. FESS. He is the president of the college.

Mr. NORRIS. He has a national, if not an international, reputation.

Mr. FESS. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. People of all classes and of all political beliefs who know anything about him and his work always speak of him in the very highest of praise.

Mr. FESS. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. He analyzed this bill and suggested this amendment and one or two others that I am going to offer.

Mr. FESS. I should think, without a doubt, that if this or any other public-works project is launched, he will be called upon to do some directing in connection with it.

Mr. NORRIS. I should think so.

Mr. FESS. Without a doubt.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this provision is so indefinite that it is difficult to determine its limitation; it is like other provisions in the bill. We do not know the point to which it will lead or the ground which it will cover. When we talk about constructing a dam and taking into account the social development of the community and States and cities and counties, and when we attempt to appraise all factors incidental to the building of communities and community life, and authorize experimentation without limitations, we are lost in uncertainty. We do not know whether the experimentation is purely physical or whether it embraces every form of social activities and enterprises. But the legislation, if I properly interpret it, is a sort of cauldron into which we are pouring everything, all sorts of chemicals—and the word "chemical" here is quite proper—and all sorts of things may come out of the retort. We do not know the kind of explosions that may result, the kind of a solid or the kind of a fluid that will be evolved, whether it is to be sociological or community experimentation as the chief motive or whether the purpose is largely the production of electricity and fertilizers. The bill gives carte blanche authority to engage in every form of activity and experimentation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the Senator speaking from experience in connection with his dam out West, commonly known as Boulder Dam, for which I think he voted?

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that it is not in my State. The Senator and I opposed that dam for years, but there was justification, from the point of view of some, for the construction of the Boulder Dam; but there is not the broad field in the Boulder Dam project, unsatisfactory as it is in many respects, that is provided in this bill. There is no horizon here, no limitation. As I said, this bill is for experimental purposes in the cultural, sociological, social, scientific, electric, and fertilizer fields. We are to experiment in electricity, when we have in the United States today the ablest men in the world engaged in electrical activities. They are not asking a contribution from the Treasury of the United States. There are persons engaged in the production of fertilizers, and they have spent money prodigally in developing these products important to agriculture.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to say another word about the 5-percent contribution of the States.

There is pending before the Senate the St. Lawrence Treaty, a treaty with Great Britain and Canada covering the development of the power and navigation on the St. Lawrence River. We are having a dispute in the Senate over the reference of a joint resolution presented here, seeking to confirm a tentative arrangement made with the State of New York and providing for a contribution from the State of New York of $90,000,000. That is, we are to have this power provided we pay $90,000,000 for it; but here, in this bill, the United States makes all the investment, builds the dam, installs the steam plant, and then the States involved get 5 percent of the gross revenue.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I understand the Senator's reference to the St. Lawrence, and I do not care to debate that question now; it has been debated a number of times. I may state that I offered this amendment the first year I was in the Senate, and I think the Senator has been kind enough and generous enough to vote for it several times, and I think the Senator was right.

Mr. COPELAND. I voted for it several times, but I am not convinced that I was fully informed as to the exact effect of it then. There has been in my State so much discussion of water power since that time that perhaps my eyes have been opened somewhat.

Mr. BLACK. With reference to the question about which the Senator has just been talking, I think the State of New York would own the power plant, and naturally it would not get a percentage from its own property. That is the difference.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have no disposition to follow the discussion at this moment. I simply wanted to call attention to what, to my mind, was a very odd procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that amendment was on page 22, was it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On page 22, line 16.

Mr. NORRIS. There was a committee amendment on line 18. Has that been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I send to the desk an amendment to be inserted on page 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 23, line 17, after the word "corporation", the Senator from Nebraska proposes to insert the following:

likewise for 1 year after the enactment of this act the President is authorized to sell parcels or parts of any vacant real estate now owned by the Government, or hereafter acquired, in said Tennessee River Basin, to persons or corporations desiring to purchase the same for the purpose of erecting thereon factories or manufacturing establishments, and who desire to purchase of said Corporation electric power for the operation of any such factory or manufacturing establishment. No contract shall be made by the President for the sale of any of such real estate if the same is valuable, or may become necessary or valuable, for use on the part of the Government for any of the purposes of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 23, after line 19, the Senator from Nebraska proposes to add the following:

Provided, That no such contract shall be made that will in any way abridge or take away the preference right given in this act to States, counties, municipalities, or farm organizations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that is all the amendments I have to offer for the present, at least.

I am now going to answer the question propounded by the Senator from Maryland and also the question propounded by the Senator from Utah as to the difference between the two bills. I have preferred to wait until the amendments had been passed on, because in some respects the amendments in the fertilizer and power provisions have modified the text of the bill as it was before it was amended.

I think it is fair to say, to be as brief about it as possible, that the two bills differ on the question of fertilizer and on the question of power. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Utah, because I am satisfied that I will get his vote for the Senate committee bill, as between the two bills.

The bill which passed the House provides that the corporation shall go into the manufacture of fertilizer on a commercial scale, and sell it. There is no such provision in the Senate committee bill. I want to say to the Senate, and particularly to the Senator from Utah and to the Senator from Maryland, that I have never favored the Government going into the fertilizer business as a commercial operation. In the first place, it is unjust to the taxpayers of the balance of the country. I do not believe it is right to take Government money out of the Federal Treasury, set up a fertilizer plant, and go into the commercial business of manufacturing and selling fertilizer. If that were right, and we did that, then we ought to do it in every community in the United States. The taxpayers of Illinois, of California, of Nebraska, have their money in the governmental Treasury, as well as do those of Alabama and Tennessee, and it seems to me there is no justice in taking their money and going into the fertilizer business in Alabama.

There is reason, however, it seems to me, for using public money for the purpose of cheapening fertilizer. I think that the expenditure of money in an effort to reduce the cost of fertilizer is conceded to be the proper use of governmental funds. If I were sure it could be done by this bill, I would think that was the greatest possible accomplishment of the legislation, much greater than anything else in the bill, because the students of the subject will agree with me when I say that the importance of cheap fertilizer to agriculture is increasing every day. It is going to increase, as far as we can see, and as far as scientific men can see, every day from now on. It is going to be much more important 50 years from now than it is now, unless something new and entirely different is discovered or invented. It is important, therefore, and I think one of the highest uses to which we can put public funds is the attempt to cheapen the production of fertilizer.

Mr. President, as to the bill as it now stands before us, and as it has stood for 10 or 12 years, I have continually invited criticism and suggestions tending to show any practical way in which the wording of the bill could be improved in order to insure a better method of experimenting in the effort to reduce the cost of fertilizer. I welcome any such suggestion now.

There are two other reasons why we should not put the Government into the business of manufacturing fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. To begin with—while other people may disagree with me, and one or two Senators may disagree with me, although I do not mean to criticize them in any way—I say that the almost unanimous testimony and evidence of experts, of chemists, and of engineers who have studied the subject has been in agreement with the propositions I am about to lay down.

Mr. President, at Muscle Shoals we get nitrogen out of the atmosphere by what is known as "the cyanamide process." That is at nitrate plant no. 2, built by the Government as a war proposition. In my opinion, as I have said before, and I think I am borne out by the almost unanimous evidence of scientific men all over the world, the cyanamide process for getting nitrogen out of the air is out of date. Cyanamide is a useful chemical, but when we come to get nitrogen out of the atmosphere by that process the cost is practically double when we compare it with the investment necessary if the operation were performed by what is known as "the synthetic process", first called "the Haber process."

When the war came on, nitrogen became a very important thing. The whole earth is surrounded by nitrogen, in the atmosphere. It was known then that nitrogen could be extracted from the atmosphere by the cyanamide process. First, before that process was invented, there was the arc process, the first method by which nitrogen was extracted from the atmosphere, which required a great deal of power. In fact, it is not practical, where power is worth anything, to use the power for that purpose, because we can get the nitrogen so much cheaper, and expensive power would make production absolutely prohibitive.

Later on came the cyanamide process, which was a very great improvement; and when the war broke out, the cyanamide process was well understood by the scientific men and the chemists of the world. It required much less power than the arc process but still required a great deal of power.

Mr. President, that was the knowledge of the art when the Great War came on. The Haber process, later called "the synthetic process", was unknown to men anywhere in the world; and when it became apparent that we were about to get into the war, we passed a law which provided for the building of this great dam down at Muscle Shoals. We knew then that in order to get nitrogen from the atmosphere a great deal of power would be required, and we knew that if we got into the war there might be a possibility that our supply of nitrogen, which had before that come from Chile, might be cut off. We passed an act providing for the improvement which has since been made at Muscle Shoals and other improvements, which were abandoned when the World War ended.

We contracted for the construction of nitrate plant no. 2, which we still own. At the time it was built it was as modern as any plant of that kind in the world. We were not proceeding in the dark. Our scientific men knew just what could be done, and the contract provided for the building of that plant, which was to be constructed to produce in one year 40,000 tons of nitrogen, which amount can be manufactured by that plant now. That requires a large amount of limestone, so that we had a quarry down there, and a railroad connecting with the quarry, which the Government owned. We built the plant. It has never been operated, except long enough to demonstrate that it would work and comply with the specifications which, in the main, were to produce 40,000 tons of nitrogen in a year. That was all done in good faith. It was located there because of the power facilities.

Mr. President, it became evident, during the war, that Germany, shut off from the importation of Chilean nitrates, must have some way of getting nitrogen. She would have been defeated long before she was had it not been for her scientific men and her chemists. They devised a new method of getting nitrogen from the atmosphere, known as the "Haber process." We knew they were doing that; the whole world knew they were doing it, but we did not know how it was done. Our scientific men thought that perhaps they knew; perhaps they could do it. So when we built nitrate plant no. 2 we also built nitrate plant no. 1, which was a very much smaller plant, because our scientific men were not sure of the result. If they had been, nitrate plant no. 1 would have been bigger than nitrate plant no. 2. In fact, if we had known then what was known in Germany, and what we learned after the war, we never would have constructed nitrate plant no. 2. So we built nitrate plant no. 1, a small plant comparatively, on the theory that we might be able to extract nitrogen from the air as the Germans were doing, but we failed; we failed 100 percent. We have never produced a pound of nitrogen from the air by nitrate plant no. 1. We were completely wrong; we did not know the process.

I do not charge anybody with bad faith; it was an experiment. It failed utterly and completely. Nitrate plant no. 1 has never yet taken and never will take an ounce of nitrogen from the atmosphere. It is in a fine building, which is in good shape today, but its machinery is worth nothing except for junk. I hate to say that; I had rather say that it is a success; I had rather say that it could produce nitrogen cheaply; but I want to state the truth.

I would like to say that nitrate plant no. 2 can produce nitrogen cheaper than can any other plant in the world, but I cannot make that statement and be truthful. I reached not the conclusion which I wished to reach, but which seems to me to be absolutely inevitable if I were going to be fair with my own conscience.

During all the 12 years we have been considering the subject I have listened to propaganda that has gone out over the country, fathered in the main by that great farm organization, the American Farm Bureau Federation, which has been sending out circulars stating that all we had to do to get cheap fertilizer was to put nitrate plant no. 1 into operation. Beautiful illustrated circulars were sent into my State and other States, circulars with maps and pictures of Muscle Shoals, and of the dam, and incidentally almost always of Chester Gray, the representative of the Farm Bureau Federation. The material was prepared ready to be run off the printing press without cost to the editors of country newspapers and of city newspapers and farm magazines, and delivered absolutely free. I have always wondered who furnished the money for it. The only beneficiary of all that fight that I could see was the Power Trust, which itself wanted this power if it could get it; and if it could not get it, it would like to have the Government operate nitrate plant no. 2, make fertilizer, and sell it always at a loss unless it would enter into a combination with the private manufacturers of fertilizer and increase the price by a trust agreement.

Now I come to the proposition of using plant no. 2. If we had war tomorrow we would probably operate it, because it can produce 40,000 tons of nitrogen a year. All the machinery is there, as well as Waco Quarry, a railroad, and everything else which is necessary, and that plant could be started up in 24 hours.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator from Nebraska if I should ask him a question for information?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I wonder why, with the machinery to which the Senator has referred, which was constructed with the idea of being operated under the Haber process, fertilizer could not be produced very cheaply there?

The Senator will recall that the late Senator Ladd, a chemist and a very able Senator, and I visited Germany a few years ago and inspected the great plants where they were manufacturing nitrogen from the atmosphere. They had a very poor quality of coal, not so good as the lignite coal in the Dakotas, and yet they were manufacturing enormous quantities of nitrogen from the atmosphere, using it for fertilizer, the basis of which is nitrogen, and shipping it to South America and to China and to various parts of Europe.

Mr. NORRIS. But they were not doing it under the cyanamide process. They were using the synthetic process, which is the most modern process of all.

Mr. KING. If we had a plant at Muscle Shoals which could employ the Haber process—

Mr. NORRIS. But we have not. We might just as well face the truth.

Mr. KING. Is all the machinery there adapted to the cyanamide process?

Mr. NORRIS. That in the cyanamide plant, of course, is; but the machinery in plant no. 1, which it was thought might work under the Haber process, cannot be used. I am told that is so. I have been there; I have gone through it, and I have asked the chemists if we could not save some of it; and I was told that nothing is just right—that the only thing we can possibly use is the building and the steam plant connected with it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, was it erected for the purpose of using the Haber process or the cyanamid process?

Mr. NORRIS. It was erected for the purpose of using the Haber process.

Mr. KING. Then those who erected it and put in the machinery failed to understand the Haber process?

Mr. NORRIS. They failed, but I am not criticising them. That was during the war and they were doing the best they could. They did not have sufficient knowledge of the process and that is the reason they erected only a small plant, because they were uncertain. They knew the Germans had a better process than we had, but they did not know what it was. They did the best they could. I have never criticised anybody connected with it.

Now, let me go on. The Senator's question diverts me just a little. As to Muscle Shoals not being a practical place at which to make fertilizer on a commercial basis: First, I think I have shown that the men who located it, the men who built it, and the Congress that passed the law, were all acting in the best of faith. They did not know of the improvements that were going to be made. First, as I said before, we had the arc process, which used almost unlimited power in order to get nitrogen from the atmosphere. Then came the cyanamid process, using much less power but still great quantities of power, and we built nitrate plant no. 2. Then, after the war, when we were able to visit Germany and to find out what she had done, we learned how to build under the Haber or synthetic process, and we have built under it ever since. We did not have at the beginning of the war a single place where nitrogen was produced by any process—arc, synthetic, or cyanamid. Now we have eight such plants in operation. We have, it is true, the cyanamid process at Muscle Shoals, the only one in the United States. We have never built one since.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. When the Senator refers to nitrogen does he mean a gas or a liquid or a solid?

Mr. NORRIS. I mean all of them; nitrogen in all those forms. If I wanted to take the time I could show that it is in gas form and in liquid form and in solid form. For instance, the great Du Pont Co., in Delaware, the largest manufacturers of explosives, perhaps, in the world, have their plant located in Delaware, but they wanted a lot of nitrogen, and what did they do? They went to West Virginia, 5 or 6 miles outside of Charleston, right in the midst of one of the greatest coal fields in the world, where good coking coal was obtainable right from the mines. They built their nitrogen factory there. They had to ship that nitrogen from Charleston, W. Va., to Delaware, although there is just as much nitrogen in the air in Delaware as there is in West Virginia, but they need coke for power.

Under the new process, the synthetic process, the question of power has become practically insignificant; the only use of power is to operate the machinery, and the great expense is coke; that is expensive raw material which they must have. So if one were to locate a factory now and wanted to build it in accordance with business principles he would go where there was cheap coke, as the Du Pont Co. did, even though that company had to ship nitrogen in tank cars from Charleston, W. Va., to Delaware. That nitrogen is shipped in liquid form.

I am only trying to show that, as a matter of business, if the Senator from Maryland and I embarked on such an enterprise for the purpose of making money, if we had no other object in view, and it was necessary to get nitrogen from the atmosphere, we would not think of building a plant such as the Government built at Muscle Shoals at plant no. 2.

I went down to Charleston to look over the Du Pont plant. While I am neither a chemist nor an engineer, I wanted to get what information I could there from an actual view of the situation. First I ought to say that I tried to go up to Syracuse, N. Y., where there was built the first nitrogen plant under the Haber or synthetic process after it became known here what that process actually was. I wrote to those in charge at Syracuse and told them I wanted to come and look the plant over. They held up their hands in holy horror and said no; they would not let me inside any of their buildings. I do not know whether they were afraid that I was a student of chemistry or an engineer and might steal some of their ideas, or whether they had read about me in some of the newspapers of Alabama about the time we were having the Ford fight and thought I would be dangerous; anyway, they would not let me in.

I wrote to the Du Pont people and told them that I should like to go to Charleston and go through their plant. They did not wait to answer by letter; they called me on the long-distance telephone and said, "Fix the date; we will send our head chemist from here down there; we will show you everything we have." I called on the Secretary of War and asked him to detail to go with me a man who had some scientific knowledge and who knew more than I did, so that if there was anything that might be secretive or wrong he would be able to know it. I told the Du Pont Co. that I wanted to bring a man with me and they replied, "Bring anybody you desire; we have no secret; we have nothing to conceal." So I went down there with the one who was detailed to go with me. We spent our time going over the plant, all through it, and in order to help us the Du Pont Co. sent a German chemist from Delaware to show us through.

I remember we came back together, and on the way back I said to the German chemist—who is the head, or then was, of the Du Pont investigating bureau, and knows as much about the extraction of nitrogen from the atmosphere, I presume, as any man on earth—"Suppose we should offer you nitrate plant no. 2, give it to you free of charge, what would you say about it?" His answer was, "We would decline it." He said, "I am not saying anything about fertilizers; that is not my world; we are getting nitrogen from the atmosphere; that is one of the necessary ingredients of fertilizer. If we had no plant in West Virginia and we had to have a plant, as we did have to have when we built the one near Charleston, and you said we could have nitrate plant no. 2 for nothing, we would have gone to Charleston and built our plant just the same, because we know that nitrogen cannot be extracted from the atmosphere by the process in use at nitrate plant no. 2. It would not pay us to operate it even if we got it for nothing, and we would prefer to pay seven or eight or ten million dollars to build a new plant." I think it cost them somewhere in that neighborhood to build their plant at Charleston, W. Va.

That being true, it appears to be impossible, on a commercial scale, to manufacture fertilizer at Muscle Shoals; and why not tell the truth as one sees it? There are those who do not agree with me; probably some who are listening to me now do not agree with me; but, as I see it, it cannot be done. I have been preaching that for 12 years to the farmers of America; but, counteracting everything I could say and do, came this great propaganda, backed up by the power interests and by the American Farm Bureau Federation, which spread it all over the United States, that that was the finest way on earth to get nitrogen from the atmosphere, and that I was not a real friend of the farmer. I have had that to contend with at home all these years. I think that any unbiased, unprejudiced scientific man who has studied the question of getting nitrogen from the atmosphere will agree with me 100 percent.

I have not formed these ideas because I wanted to do so. God knows I should rather have come to another conclusion. God knows that I should rather have discovered that this is the finest thing in the world, the finest place in the world to make fertilizer. I met the facts with a great deal of reluctance. I knew what would happen; I knew of the terrible propaganda that anybody who believed as I did would be up against if he undertook to say so openly.

Now, although those who believed as I did were in the very small minority with the farmers of America, I think the truth has percolated through and that most of the farmers of America know now that some of their so-called "leaders" have been misleading and deceiving them—some probably in good faith. Many men in good faith have advocated it. That being true, I have always fought against putting anything in the bill that would compel the Board to go into the fertilizer business; first, because it is not fair to take the money of all the people to manufacture fertilizer for the farmers who live within a radius of perhaps 450 or 500 miles of Muscle Shoals.

But that does not have anything to do with my desire to do all we can down there for the purpose of cheapening fertilizer. I know someone can say if we have a cheap plant under a modern method and cannot make it cheaply there, why do we want to experiment there? Why not go somewhere else? If it was a new question, if the Government had not put in $150,000,000 down there, that is what I would advocate. It will cost a little bit more to manufacture fertilizer there than elsewhere in the quantities in which we will make it for experimental purposes, but we can demonstrate the difference mathematically to a cent, so that when the fertilizer experiment is carried on at Muscle Shoals we can show that it is a benefit to the farmers of America and the cost can be shown to the fraction of a penny even though it costs more there than it costs somewhere else.

That is the chief difference between the two bills on the fertilizer proposition. Another difference is on the power question. I believe the only fair thing to do is to give to the Board the same power that an individual would have, that a private person would have, not to surround them by red tape and a whole lot of difficulties and impossibilities that would not confront a private party. We are justified in doing that, I believe. Of course, I would not agree with some Senators here about it, but I believe that electricity made from our streams ought to be developed by some governmental corporation, whether it is a municipality or a State or the Nation.

But I am not basing the bill on that proposition. We have invested there $150,000,000. We are interested in controlling the flood waters of the Mississippi River, and the first step in the most scientific development of that proposal that has ever been undertaken in the Government of the United States is contained in the Senate bill. It is in the House bill, too, although the method of building the dam is not quite the same.

It would be a sin if the Government permitted any private party to go to Cove Creek and build the Cove Creek dam. That is the mouth of a natural reservoir that will hold, when the dam is completed, 3,500,000 acre-feet of water. It will develop a large amount of power, but to get the most possible out of it as a fair proposition we would have to keep the reservoir filled, and it then would lose its value entirely as a flood-control or navigation project. A private party would want to make all the money he could, and that is all right; there is no objection to that. The Government is the only one in a matter of that kind that can afford to use it for the purpose for which it ought to be used, and that is flood control. The power is only an incident. When we are letting the water out we are using the power to make electricity, but as we lower the depth of the water in the reservoir the power decreases. If we take all the water out we have no power at all. A great deal of this power would be secondary power and not primary power. No one knows how near they will come to emptying the reservoir in a year. In a few years we will know more definitely about that. They will lower it further in order to be ready for the excess flood that comes, so that the Tennessee River will be lower than it is now in high water, and higher than it is now in low water, and every gallon of that water that is kept back will be so much less water to do damage in Louisiana and Mississippi and all the way down from the mouth of the Ohio River to the mouth of the Mississippi River.

The bill on which we have just completed the amendments gives to this Government corporation the right to build transmission lines either from appropriations made by the Congress or from money received from the sale of power or from the bond issue that is provided for in the bill. I think that the building of the transmission line is just as important as the building of the dam itself. It was over the right that the Senate bill gave to this board to build transmission lines in the last session of Congress that the conferees failed to agree for over 3 months. The House bill provided that the board could not build transmission lines. The present bill is better than the old bill in that respect, in that it does provide that they can build transmission lines. But the House bill circumscribes the power with technicalities that will seriously interfere with the Board's being able to build any transmission lines. The Senate bill provides that the board can lease lines already built.

The amendment adopted today provides that if the Government builds lines, if it does not interfere with the operation of the board the board can lease them to a private corporation to carry their lines. In other words, we have set up here a power just such as a private individual or private corporation would have. For instance, I think every man who has ever studied the question will agree with me that when we build Cove Creek Dam we must connect it with Dam No. 2 by a transmission line. It is perfectly foolish, perfectly idiotic, Mr. President, for a private corporation to own a generating system at point A and a generating system at point B and not connect them by transmission lines. Modern electrical development and distribution and use depend to a very large extent for their success on interconnecting lines. When there is something wrong with the generating plant at point A, they can bring the power from point B. When there is something wrong at point B, they can bring the power from the generating plant at point A.

In addition to that we will consume a vast amount of power in building Cove Creek Dam. When we built Dam No. 2 the first thing we did was to build a transmission line from Gorgas, about 90 miles distant, from a coal mine owned by the Alabama Power Co., in order to bring power up to Dam No. 2 so we could use it there. The first thing we will need at Cove Creek after the land is cleared away will be power, power, and more power. We have it going to waste at Dam No. 2, but we cannot carry it in a bushel basket to Cove Creek Dam. We must have a transmission line. In my judgment the board, if they are at all scientific, will build a transmission line from Dam No. 2 to Cove Creek the very first thing they do. They will save hundreds of thousands of dollars; yes, millions of dollars; otherwise they will have to buy the power. If they bring it from Dam No. 2, it will not cost anything save for the construction of the transmission line, which will be a permanent improvement and last longer than any of us will live.

Under the terms of the House bill, in my judgment, if we pass it in the form in which they have passed it, the board would be confronted, before they started on the construction of a transmission line, with injunction after injunction. They would have to wend their weary way through to the Supreme Court of the United States before they could even start construction. In the meantime they would have to pay to the Power Trust the Power Trust's own price for power to be used at Cove Creek Dam. It is foolish, it seems to me, for a corporation like this, representing the Government of the United States, to go to a stream that is tumbling down from the mountainside—a stream that is owned by the people—and build a dam to make what we call electricity for the use of the people who own that stream, but before the people can use that which we have produced from their own property it must pass through the hands of a private party, known as a private corporation, with a transmission line. It is just as important to build the transmission line as it is to build the generating plant.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. As I understand, the difference with reference to power is very simple. In the first place, the Senator's bill provides, as I understand, that the Board is given the discretion—it does not have to do it—to build transmission lines if it wants to do it, and if it believes that it is right that they should be built in order to sell the power.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACK. And under the other bill they must first make an effort to lease private lines.

Mr. NORRIS. And they must make a finding that it is economically feasible, and then they must get the consent of the President. I desire to suggest to the Senator that it depends on the President. In the last 4 years, if that had been the law, we know that there would not have been a mile of transmission line built, because it would have been impossible to get his consent.

Mr. BLACK. In other words, the Senator's bill provides that this corporation shall have the right, or any corporation, if it is deemed advisable, to build lines.

Mr. NORRIS. Or any other corporation.

Mr. BLACK. The other bill, the House bill, imposes a number of restrictions, including the necessity, first, to try to lease power-company lines, to try to make a contract with them, to secure the approval of the President, and several other preliminary things that they must do before they would have a right to build a line.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is right.

Mr. BLACK. And that really is the difference in the power feature.

Mr. NORRIS. That is right.

If there are no other questions, Mr. President, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him if the 5 percent clause is the same in the House bill as it is in the Senate bill?

Mr. NORRIS. No; there is not any such clause in the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out the 5-percent clause, if this is the appropriate time to do it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, earlier in the day I talked to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, and stated at that time that I did not want a final vote on the bill today. There are 2 or 3 Members of the Senate who desire briefly to discuss the matter; and I should like to have it go over until tomorrow for a final vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course I should have been very much delighted if we could have voted on the bill today, but I realize that the bill is open to amendment, and I am not going to interfere with any reasonable request, even if I could.

Mr. McNARY. I was certain that the Senator would not. The bill is an important one and of course has been before the Senate a number of times. It is well understood. However, in this bill there is some enlargement upon the project over former bills.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Rhode Island is necessarily absent today. He and the Senator from Ohio both want to discuss the bill briefly. I told them I would request that it might go over, because I knew the request would meet the favor of the Senator from Nebraska.

If the Senator from Michigan desires to present his amendment at this time, I suggest that he do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should very much prefer to have the matter go over until tomorrow. I shall not occupy 10 minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I recognize that the Senate has been patient.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I had no idea that we would reach this point today.

Mr. NORRIS. While I should be very glad to get through with the bill, I recognize the reasonableness of the request. If the Senate would like to take a recess at this time, I suggest that that be done. I hope, however, it will be a recess and not an adjournment.

Mr. KING. Let me say that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is necessarily absent from the Chamber, and I think he has an amendment to offer. On his behalf, I request that the bill go over until tomorrow.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let my amendment be pending. I move to strike out all of section 13, commencing on page 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan will be pending.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair) laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BRIGGS

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. CLAY STONE BRIGGS, late a Representative from the State of Texas, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The resolutions (H.Res. 123) were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. CLAY STONE BRIGGS, a Representative from the State of Texas.

Resolved, That a committee of two Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the two Senators from Texas are necessarily absent in attendance upon the funeral of the late Representative BRIGGS. On behalf of the senior Senator from that State [Mr. SHEPPARD], I send to the desk a resolution and ask for its adoption.

The resolution (S.Res. 66) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. CLAY STONE BRIGGS, late a Representative from the State of Texas.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. CONNALLY as the members upon the part of the Senate of the joint committee provided for under the second resolution.

RECESS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Representative BRIGGS, I move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 33 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 2, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 1, 1933

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY

Hugh S. Gibson, of California, now Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Belgium and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Luxembourg, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Brazil.

COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY

J. F. T. O'Connor, of Los Angeles, Calif., to be Comptroller of the Currency, to fill an existing vacancy.

COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Guy T. Helvering, of Kansas, to be Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in place of David Burnet, resigned.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSIONERS

The following-named persons to be Civil Service Commissioners:

Harry B. Mitchell, of Montana, vice Thomas M. Campbell, resigned.

Lucille F. McMillin, of Tennessee, vice Jessie Dell, resigned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 1, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Our Lord and Master, we rejoice at Thy loving fatherhood. When we waver, when we drift, when we stumble, when we are tempted, in all the emergencies of life we have an unfailing source of consolation—our ever blessed Father in Heaven. With this common thought of Thee and of one another may we go through the labors of this day. We pause, we hesitate. Words fail to express our sorrow at such a moment as this. Our brother, a splendid servant of the public, a fine type of Christian manhood, has left the scenes of this Chamber. Father, comfort the afflicted ones who are left, and at last bring them unto Thyself, where they shall no longer look through a glass darkly. Almighty God, be with those who are in any form of adversity. In the home circle, in the business affairs, in any experience which is difficult, O be Thou their comfort and support. May we all realize that the whole of life is a fleeting scene and that the true realm is the invisible one beyond. In the name of our Savior we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, April 28, 1933, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 3835. An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 753. An act to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon graduates of the Naval Academy; and

S. 1415. An act to amend sections 5200 and 5202 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to remove the limitations on national banks in certain cases.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to a joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S.J.Res. 13. Joint resolution authorizing the Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, to release claims of the United States upon certain assets of the Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California and others in connection with collections upon a certain judgment in favor of the United States against the Pan American Petroleum Co. heretofore duly entered.

SENATE ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S.J.Res. 13. Joint resolution authorizing the Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, to release claims of the United States upon certain assets of the Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California and others in connection with collections upon a certain judgment in favor of the United States against the Pan American Petroleum Co. heretofore duly entered.

PRAISE OF CONGRESS

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to incorporate therein a remarkable article, remarkable in that it says nice things about this Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, thanks to the gracious action of the House, I was this morning granted permission to extend my remarks and to incorporate therewith something out of the ordinary with reference to our Congress. I find it in the resolution unanimously adopted by the House of Representatives in Nebraska a few days ago, a resolution conveying a message of cheer and encouragement to President Roosevelt and to the Congress anent their courage and fortitude in accomplishing legislation looking to lifting our country out of the ditch of depression into which it was pushed by unholy hands. I am greatly gratified that such a resolution should come from my own home State, a State which for long years has stood very near to Ben Adhem's place in the ranks of States with reference to percentage of literacy, notwithstanding the fact that the people of Nebraska have been officially listed by one of the angels of Mellonism as "The Sons of Wild Jackasses." The resolution to which I refer reads as follows:

Resolution conveying message of good cheer and encouragement from Nebraska House of Representatives to Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States

Preamble

Whereas our beloved President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, since his inauguration on March 4, 1933, with fortitude and courage has "hurled his lances full and fair against the defamers" of our country's welfare; and

Whereas, with the exception of a few scattered snipers for the industrial oligarchy, Republicans and Democrats alike in the Congress have cast aside petty partisan politics for the public good; and

Whereas in these trying days even the stout heart of the President, who is wisely and surely leading this Nation to the high hill from whence we begin to see the dawning of a new day of hope and opportunity for the masses of our people, should know that the citizens of this country in unison voice approval of his policies and program; and

Whereas buying of the entire Nation has been spurred by the inflation prospect and a pronounced quickening has been seen in industry and commerce in commodity prices; and

Whereas the price of agricultural products has increased, due to inflation steps taken by the President at Washington: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska in forty-ninth regular session assembled—

1. That this house, expressing the true sentiments of the people of the State of Nebraska, convey through this resolution our confidence in, our trust in, and our support for the policies and principles which our President, as the executive head of the National Government, and through the Congress, seeks speedily to put into force and effect to the end that the deplorable condition of our people may be ameliorated; and may Franklin D. Roosevelt, our President, be sustained and strengthened in the great problems which confront him when we say to him that the people of Nebraska extend good cheer and encouragement for the noble efforts which he is successfully making to stabilize the affairs of this Nation.

2. That this house, without hesitation, endorse the President's plan for the inflation of the currency, as set forth in part 6 of the farm bill, for financing and exercising powers conferred by section 8 of article I of the Constitution, to coin money and regulate the value thereof, which we believe is the greatest step ever taken for the good of humanity.

3. That this house commends the President for the statesmanship displayed by him in the management of the bank holiday, whereby he whipped to justice the hoarders of gold and prevented the flight of American dollars abroad.

4. That this house commends the President for prompt initiation of his defensive measure in temporarily abandoning the gold standards insofar as it relates to foreign competition; and we further urge that, without delay, the President reduce the quantity of gold in the standard dollar from the present 23.22 grains to 11.61 if the creditor class of this country in possession of $200,000,000,000 of the Nation's wealth fail to employ the fabulous sum of money for the uses of the worthy debtor class upon the basis of a fair interest return, payment of the principal to be amortized over a long period of years, to the end that the returns from the land and from the fruits of labor may repay the creditor without placing obstacles in the path of rehabilitating the debtor, thereby, if the creditor class fails to do its duty in this emergency, taking the wealth away from those who did not earn it and transferring its use under reasonable conditions to those deserving people in our country who have lost it.

5. That this house memorializes the President to provide the United States with bimetallic currency of gold and silver, companies as media of exchange since the era of all antiquity; and favors legislation known as the "Wheeler bill" (S. 2487), which contemplates the free coinage of silver to fix the relative value of the precious metals and thereby provide a uniform currency for the world with which to facilitate trade.

6. That this house unqualifiedly endorses the affirmative steps heretofore taken, as well as those now proposed, by the President to lend the credit of the United States to home owners, land owners, and other worthy groups and enterprises which are capable of being financed on a self-liquidating basis.

7. That the chief clerk of this house be ordered and directed forthwith to forward to Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, a copy of this resolution, properly certified and suitably engrossed, as evidence of the love and confidence which the State of Nebraska has in him.

JOHN HAVEKOST.

I hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of said resolution as passed by the house of representatives in forty-ninth session assembled this 27th day of April 1933.

MAX ADAMS,

Chief Clerk of the House.

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION UNDER OUR CONSTITUTION

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD an address by my colleague the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] before the American Society of International Law at its twentieth annual dinner at the Willard Hotel, April 29, 1933.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by the Honorable SAM D. McREYNOLDS before the American Society of International Law at its twenty-sixth annual dinner at the Willard Hotel, April 29, 1933:

It is a happy augury that the American Society of International Law should have been meeting in Washington during the course of this week. The work of this society has always been important to the current work of the Government of the United States. Never before, however, have you met here under conditions in which the subject of your interest was so intimately and vitally associated with the problems which are uppermost in the activities of our Government. During the course of the present week our President has been conducting a series of international conversations with the visiting heads of various other governments, and I feel sure that the purpose and direction of those conversations, fraught with such significance for the people of our country, must have been very much in the minds of the members of this society.

One does not need to be an expert on the economic problems of the day to know that these problems cannot be met by any government in the world acting alone. Whether we like it or not, the interests of the American people are today bound up with the interests of peoples in other parts of the world. Our problems and their problems are, to a great extent, common problems, and if it was not already clear to us I think it must now be evident from the very acuteness of our situation that action must be taken by our Government, in cooperation with other governments, to meet these problems. That is the significance of the conversations which have been held here during the past week. The President has been preparing the ground for the success of the International Economic Conference which is to meet in London, and upon the issue of his conversations depends also the result of the Disarmament Conference which is now in session in Geneva.

Whatever be the particular problem of the moment in which one is most interested, little progress can be made until it is realized that we are living in an era when, as never before in history, cooperation must be on a world-wide scale. At one end of the Capitol the problem of currency has engrossed attention during the past few days. No judgment of our currency problem can be formed which does not take account of the reactions in other countries of any policy which we may formulate. At the other end of the Capitol we have been considering problems relating to our trade, and immediately we are faced with the necessity of inquiring into the international effect of measures which we would adopt and of measures which other peoples may also adopt. Whatever may have been our preoccupations with reference to the past policies of the United States, whatever positions we may have taken with reference to problems which arose years ago, today we are compelled to adopt a policy of cooperating with other peoples and of organizing our own Government with a view to making that cooperation effective. This, I take it, was what the President had in mind in his inaugural address last month when he dedicated "this Nation to the policy of the good neighbor." Neighborliness may not always be based on a desire to play the role of the good Samaritan, but I think it must always be based upon a desire to meet common problems with a common policy. Cooperation is the essence of good neighborliness, and the President has already shown that his adoption of this policy is to rest, not merely on words but also on action directed to the common good.

I feel that it is a fortunate thing for the people of the United States that we have a Constitution which does not prevent our playing the role of a good neighbor, as I have explained it, in times such as these through which we are passing. It is true that we have the oldest Constitution existing in the world today. Very soon a century and a half will have passed since that Constitution took its form, and yet, through all the strains of this century and a half, we have been able to find within its framework the possibility of our acting to advance our national interest. The thought I have been so admirably put by the President that I must again quote from his inaugural address: "Our Constitution", he said, "is so simple and practical that it is possible always to meet extraordinary needs by changes in emphasis and arrangement without loss of essential form." It is the application of this principle, which the President has enunciated, to some of our present problems which I should like to emphasize this evening.

Under our Constitution the cooperation of our Government with other governments of the world may take one of several different forms. First of all, there are the formal treaties concluded by our Government in such large number. I believe this society has often discussed the treaty-making power of our Government, and I shall not deal with it tonight. In the second place, there are the less formal Executive agreements, which have been made by the President throughout our history and which play today an important role in international law. I believe this society has also discussed from time to time the constitutional basis of Executive agreements, and I shall not deal with that subject tonight. In the third place, the cooperation of our Government with other governments may be based upon a statutory authority, without going so far as to result in a formal treaty or in an informal Executive agreement. It is this form of cooperation to which I would address myself, and I do so because of some recent experience which has directed my attention to it in connection with our present-day problems.

For some weeks past the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives has had under consideration a resolution concerning the exportation of arms or munitions of war. It is not my purpose this evening to deal with the merits of that resolution. It had the support of the late administration, and it has the support of the present administration; it received the support of my committee, and it was voted overwhelmingly in the House of Representatives a few days ago. In my judgment, this resolution is an essential piece of legislation if our Government is to play its proper role in international affairs. But I don't want to deal with its merits. I invite your attention to the topic only as an example of the many fields which call for a type of international cooperation.

The resolution which was passed by the House of Representatives gave certain powers to the President to be exercised by him after he had secured the cooperation of such other governments as he deemed to be necessary. Clearly, if any embargo is to be placed upon the shipment of arms to a particular country, the United States must act in unison with other countries or else our action will be wholly ineffective. We could not penalize our own manufacturers to the advantage of their competitors in other lands. It was a great astonishment to me, therefore, when several men, learned in international law and I believe members of this society, questioned the constitutionality of the pending resolution on the ground that it would "enable the President to make international engagements of the most far-reaching kind at his will", and would therefore be a delegation of treaty-making powers. Of course, as that argument was advanced it did not take account of the actual wording of the resolution before the House; the resolution would not authorize the President to enter into international engagements; it would merely authorize him to act in cooperation with other governments. The President might secure such cooperation by persuading other governments to act on a common policy with our own. Now I need not point out to this learned society that if two governments act on a common policy they do not necessarily engage to do so, nor do they engage to continue to do so. What the resolution proposes is not that the President should enter into engagements with other governments, but that he should enter into negotiations with them with a view to the adoption in particular circumstances of a common policy. The resolution does not confer power on the President. He has power to negotiate already. It merely directs him to exercise his power of negotiation for the purpose of seeing that action taken by the United States is at the same time paralleled by action taken by other governments, if necessary.

Aside from the misconception of the words used in the resolution, however, it was a matter of some astonishment to me that anyone should at this state of our national history attempt to question the constitutionality of legislation which would call for the President's action in cooperation with other governments. Throughout our national history, legislation has authorized the President to take action only after negotiations with other governments. Our legislation to this effect dates since the early days of the Republic, and it applies to a variety of subjects. Members of this society will be very familiar with the nonintercourse acts of our Government more than a century ago, and I will mention particularly the acts of 1809 and 1810, which conditioned the suspension of trade provided for upon the President's proclamation of the attitude of other governments. Dealing with more recent examples, our tariff legislation has long proceeded on this principle. Under the Tariff Act of 1890, the President was empowered to suspend free entry of certain articles from other countries if he was satisfied that their governments imposed unequal and unreasonable duties on our products. In a celebrated case before the Supreme Court, the case of Field against Clark in 1892, the constitutionality of this provision in the Tariff Act of 1890 was attacked and it was contended that the provision delegated to the President "both legislative and treaty-making powers." In that case the Supreme Court reviewed our legislation at great length, and it found numerous precedents to show "that in the judgment of the legislative branch of the Government, it is often desirable, if not essential for the protection of the interests of our people, to invest the President with large discretion in matters arising out of the execution of statutes relating to trade and commerce with other nations." The Supreme Court, therefore, held that the tariff act did not transfer legislative and treaty-making power to the President, and more recent legislation, particularly in 1897, has followed the act of 1890.

The members of this society will also be familiar with numerous other legislative provisions directing the President to take certain action as a result of the attitude of other governments. Such legislation deals with our reciprocal copyright relations, with relief from double income tax on shipping profits, with discriminating tonnage duties, and with a host of other topics.

Now, it was this long course of legislative history upon which the resolution before the House of Representatives was framed, and I think members of this society will understand why many of my colleagues were astonished that the views should have been presented by eminent international lawyers that the pending legislation was unconstitutional.

I speak of this matter tonight, not because of my interest in the arms embargo resolution but because of my interest in the efficiency of the Government of the United States in dealing with the national emergency. I must repeat that in my judgment it is most fortunate that the Constitution does not frustrate our Government in an era of international cooperation. Being a lawyer myself and having served for many years on the bench, I hope you will understand my saying that the problems of the present day are not to be solved by a narrow legalistic attitude toward the Constitution. The Constitution of the United States is above all an enabling instrument. It enables the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties; it enables the President, with statutory authority, to enter into Executive agreements; it enables the President, within limitations set by legislation, to conduct the foreign policy of the United States in such a way that we do not occupy an isolated position in the world. I am profoundly grateful to the framers of our Constitution that they should have worked so successfully that today we have a constitutional system which can be adapted to meet the problems with which we are confronted.

It is quite true, as an eminent journalist informed us in yesterday morning's paper, that the Constitution forbids Congress to abdicate; but as I read it the Constitution also forbids the Government of the United States to abdicate in a great emergency and it forbids Congress in a situation such as the present one to stultify the Government of the United States by making it impossible for us to occupy our proper positions in the world. The President has given us the lead in his inaugural address. I hope his efforts will find the warmest sympathy here among the members of the American Society of International Law. I hope that his hands will be held up during these weeks when he is attempting to work out, with other governments, a common policy to meet the depression, and I look forward to the future with confidence, because I feel that we are on the right road toward a cooperative solution of world problems.

"DOINGS" OF CONGRESS—THEIR EFFECT ON THE LUMBER INDUSTRY

Mr. DUFFEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD remarks by myself on the doings of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUFFEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address delivered by myself on the "Doings of Congress" at the forty-first annual meeting of the National American Wholesale Lumber Association, held at the Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D.C., April 26 and 27, 1933.

History is the record of the doings of mankind. History is being made in the doings of the Seventy-third Congress of the United States, which assembled in the extra session in Washington on March 9, 1933. The laws passed and to be passed will be studied by historians and political economists in the future, for the Nation is now beset with serious new economic and political situations. Perhaps we can only look ahead a little way on the "new deal"; but, as we look back, it is instantly apparent that return to prosperity by the old method is impossible.

Our Nation is at peace with the world today. But we are troubled with conditions in many respects comparable to those of war. The President of the United States is, by the Constitution, the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, and today he is the Commander in Chief of the forces united in the common cause of a return to economic prosperity and leadership.

CONGRESS IN SESSION ONLY 48 DAYS

I will not deny myself this opportunity and privilege to express my respect and loyalty, as a Member of the Congress, to the Commander in Chief. Only 48 days have passed since Congress convened. The American people, without regard to Republican or Democratic partisanship, have new hope today, new confidence, new determination. Citizens have a real interest in public affairs, a better understanding of economic and political problems, and a closer interest in the doings of their Chief Executive and the Congress. Events have happened so fast and furiously that one marvels at the fundamental changes brought about in so short a space of time.

NATIONAL EMERGENCY IN BANKING

Hardly had his first message been read in Congress than a new law was passed to provide immediate relief in the existing national emergency in banking. It was a call to arms by the Commander in Chief against the forces of an economic war, taking heavy toll on the resources and assets of our gold supply, and causing widespread consternation. Banking operations had ceased, and the opening of the banks for resumption of business was mandatory. All sound banks are now reopened, and each day more and further institutions are resuming their normal functions.

MAINTENANCE OF NATION'S CREDIT

No nation can survive when withdrawals and expenditures exceed receipts; and the billions of dollars in national deficit were mounting to a point where drastic, war-time action and authority must be exercised to save the Nation. These great deficits had had a disastrous effect upon the credit of our Government; we were nigh the brink of bankruptcy, and passage of a drastic new law for the maintenance of our Nation's credit was most vital and essential. By the Economy Act almost half a billion dollars was cut from governmental expenditures, and confidence was restored in the ability of our Government to meet its obligations and refundings. Loyalty to the leadership of the Chief Executive demanded a measure of courage on the part of the Members of the Congress at the very outset of the session; for back home among the voters were those who were dependent on Government pensions, the needy and worthy veterans, who themselves had once answered the call to arms in their Nation's defense, the widows, the children, and dependent mothers, the Spanish-American War veterans, none at that time cognizant of the emergency situation and believing that all would be adversely affected, when in fact reasonable rules and regulations were to be promulgated by the President; and every officer and employee of the Government was faced with a 15-percent reduction in compensation and salary. This country was in a state of war—not against a foreign enemy, but against economic evils that demanded sacrifice on the part of every citizen, that required drastic, immediate action in order that the institutions of our Government would endure.

THE BEER BILL

When expenditures were reduced by this Economy Act, the President and the Congress did not hesitate to provide new revenues. Congress was faced with the task of finding new sources of taxation or increasing existing levies. The beer bill became law and is a substantial factor in making up necessary revenue, to say nothing of the fulfillment of a campaign promise to our people to provide a palatable, nonintoxicating beverage. Nationwide approval and an impetus to business and employment followed, and definite steps were again taken toward the balancing of the National Budget.

STATE BANKS AND DEPOSITORS

At this time what was happening in the field of banking in the several States of the Union? A chaotic condition existed; closed banks on every hand, wide-spread discouragement of thousands of depositors, life earnings slipping away, frozen assets requiring years to realize cash; and the only relief in sight resting with the Congress. An emergency law was passed to provide direct loans by Federal Reserve banks, to State banks, and trust companies, even to individuals, partnerships, and private corporations, in connection with the use of the credit of the Federal Reserve System. Authority was created for the issuance of Federal Reserve bank notes (as distinguished from existing Federal Reserve notes) on eligible security without the necessary gold requirement exacted under previous laws and regulations. Hundreds of State banks (at that time and in many instances not yet members of the Federal Reserve System) were given direct Federal aid, and thus was restored in some measure a banking system to serve the legitimate interests of the American people involved in such a tragic situation.

FARM LEGISLATION

Emergency farm legislation is a matter of grave concern, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to refinance farm mortgages at lower rates of interest, to provide orderly liquidation of the joint-stock farm banks. The plight of the farmer is a major economic problem confronting the American people today. Reasonable minds may differ in the method, or plan, of farm relief; but there is dire necessity for immediate relief for deflated farm values, and violent decline in prices. Adequate farm legislation will become law, furnishing definite help and concrete results to the farming industry. New farm-loan bonds will be authorized and the proceeds used to enable the farmer to refinance on better terms, to provide him with working capital, and to redeem or repurchase his farm home where foreclosed within the past year.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND REFORESTATION

Millions of our citizens are unemployed, without visible means of support. Laws passed, and plans for the employment of hundreds of these men are well under way, in the national forests of the far western States, the national parks, and State and private forest lands, under an act of Congress passed for relief of the unemployed through the performance of useful public works. This great conservation work provides for food, shelter, clothing, medical services, and opportunity for a summer of outdoor life, while a part of the wages to be paid will, by prearrangement, go back home to help parents, and wives and children, who today are dependent on public charity for sustenance.

FEDERAL AID FOR LOCAL RELIEF

Unemployment relief has, also, been extended by cooperation of the Federal Government with the several States and Territories in relieving the hardship, suffering, and destitution of the present-day emergency. Over a period of 3 years, these relief expenditures throughout the Nation increased over 800 percent; and these vast expenditures, now caring for over 4,000,000 families, have caused the municipalities and States to struggle for revenue out of rapidly decreasing tax receipts. Past relief measures became inadequate; and now Federal, with local State resources, are joined together in the common cause to provide the elementary demands of citizens for food, clothing, and shelter. This great humanitarian legislation grants relief to needy citizens, removes anxiety and concern for their welfare and stays their distress.

5 DAYS PER WEEK, 6 HOURS PER DAY

The Senate has passed, and the House now has under consideration, a bill to establish the hours of labor at 6 hours per day, 5 days per week, to prevent interstate commerce in certain commodities and articles produced or manufactured in industrial activities, and to regulate interstate transportation. There is much to be considered in this legislation and its direct effect on interstate industry. Public hearings now being conducted would indicate that amendments will be made, striking out the exact number of hours or days, and placing the power and authority in the Secretary of Labor to regulate with responsible flexibility. Perhaps an "hours of work board" of 3 will be authorized, 1 appointed by the Department of Labor, 1 from among the employees, and 1 from among the employers. At this time I can only refer to this legislation. In some form it will come forth, to be widely discussed and again reconsidered by the Senate, if passed by the House as amended; and, of necessity, if repassed, submitted to the President for final approval or disapproval. This form of social and industrial legislation requires most serious study to fairly decide what is best in the interest of the persons concerned.

MUNICIPAL BONDS IN DEFAULT

The obligations and bonds of our cities and political subdivisions of the various States have, in many instances, depleted so much in value as now to cause real concern to people dependent on dividends and income from insurance companies, annuities, or other forms of income from sources heretofore believed to be immune from default or loss. Bankruptcy in some instances threatens the existence of many communities, and, though it is apparent that relief by moratorium or scaling down is an urgent need, perhaps through the exercise of constitutional powers in bankruptcy legislation, yet no definite or workable plan has been evolved. Pending legislation is perhaps intended to grant some relief to municipalities now in a tangled financial condition; but to destroy our last vestige of confidence in public bonds, to impair the financial position of other American cities, as well as any encroachment by the Federal Government upon the sovereignty of the States and political subdivisions, would cause immediate confusion and complications.

BLUE SKY LAW

This distress in public securities is even more reflected in private stocks and bonds. Here Congress can and will step in for the people's interest by the enactment of a blue sky law. Federal supervision of traffic in investment securities in interstate commerce will protect the people from a continuance of the severe losses through practices heretofore indulged in, neither ethical nor honest. Not any guaranty, not an approval of new issues, but truthful information, so that every important element attending any new issue hereafter, domestic or foreign, will be known to the public.

ON OR OFF THE GOLD STANDARD

We are not all political economists, but we have attained that degree of intelligence to have an adequate understanding of the meaning of "gold standard", and whether we are "on" or "off." We are "on" when the unit of currency is expressed in terms of gold and currency is redeemable in gold on demand, and imports and exports are unrestricted. We are "off" when these conditions and terms are not met. The departure from the gold standard may be involuntary, as in the case of England, or voluntary, as was substantially the case in our country. England was forced off because her gold reserves had practically vanished by a run due to an unbalanced budget and assets frozen in other countries. Action in the United States was not wholly voluntary but was due to a different set of causes and really is voluntary, because our Government had plenty of gold and we could have withstood any run or demand. But serious adverse financial conditions existed from within and from without our border and they had to be met.

EXPANSION, NOT INFLATION

The term "inflation", so commonly used, is really a misnomer. We mean by that term an "expansion" of the currency, and currency expansion is positively essential to the entire reconstruction program. Ours will be a controlled expansion, with vested power and authority in the Chief Executive, instead of the old control of national and international bankers. The tendency will be, of course, to increase and stabilize prices at a proper level, force more favorable agreements for stabilization in foreign exchanges, cut the cost of the war-debt payments, with some basis in sight for settlement of this embarrassing question, and grant a measure of protection against foreign raids under their depreciated currencies. Whether you are proponents or opponents to the continuance of the gold standard, it is undeniable that approval is voiced on every side of the recent happening in the matter of currency expansion.

HOME OWNERS' MORTGAGES

Perhaps the most important legislation insofar as home owners are concerned—and you are vitally interested in the welfare of the home owner—is the legislation to provide emergency relief and refinancing with respect to home-mortgage indebtedness, to extend aid to the owners of homes occupied by them and who are unable to amortize their debt elsewhere. This legislation does not provide money for new construction, nor for any new financing. It is applicable only to home mortgages executed and recorded prior to the effective date of the act. It will aid the home owner in preserving his equity; it will encourage him and others to make needed repairs. There will be a newly created corporation, called "Home Owners' Loan Corporation", to be the instrumentality of the Government, under direction of the existing Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and conducted and operated by bylaws, rules, and regulations, as may be prescribed from time to time. Government bonds will be issued in an amount not to exceed $2,000,000,000, maturing in a period not to exceed 18 years, interest at 4 percent, unconditionally guaranteed as to interest only, and exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) imposed by the United States.

The corporation will negotiate with home mortgagors and mortgagees for the exchange of bonds for home mortgages executed and recorded prior to the effective date of the act; and some cash can be advanced to pay delinquent taxes and assessments, or provide necessary maintenance or repairs to make the home habitable. The face value of the bonds, in different denominations, so exchanged, plus accrued interest and advances, shall not exceed in any case 80 percent of the value of the property upon an appraisal not exceeding $15,000, made by the corporation; and when junior encumbrances are recorded or filed against the premises, they, too, may participate, providing the gross indebtedness evidenced by the new mortgages does not exceed the 80 percent of appraisal at a gross face amount of not exceeding $10,000. Any difference in the unpaid obligation of the mortgage shall be amortized by monthly payments sufficient to retire the interest and principal within a 15-year maturity period, or sooner when possible, and the interest charge on the new mortgage on any unpaid balance to be at the rate of 5 percent. The spread of 1 percent between the face of the Government bonds and the amount set forth in the mortgage is very small, because, from experience, it is not enough to cover the necessary administrative expenses and the losses usually attending this form of mortgage security. We expect to lose some part of this money; and who cares, when the home owners of our country are aided in saving their homes?

BUILDING-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATIONS AIDED

We will find a new condition in the field of building-and-loan associations, as we are experiencing in the field of banking. Our building-and-loan associations throughout the land, always the friend of the home owners and the building industry, will benefit greatly if they, too, will bestir themselves to the advantages provided in this new legislation. In order to provide local mutual thrift institutions where savings may be placed with a new confidence and feeling of security, the Federal board is authorized to provide for new associations, to be known as "Federal savings-and-loan associations." These new associations are not intended to, and will not, enter a community which is now sufficiently served. Such newly created associations automatically become members of the Federal home-loan bank, which is authorized to subscribe for preferred stock to assist in organization. Existing building-and-loan associations, where the State statutes permit, may be converted into Federal savings-and-loan associations by compliance with the act in subscribing to the Federal Home Loan Board. To build up and to aid mortgagors and building-and-loan associations is the end and purpose of this welcome and worthy legislation, and at least 8,000,000 homes in the United States can thus be refinanced and saved from the penalties of foreclosure and loss, especially the small, struggling home owner. Some amendments will be made, but substantially the new act will receive approval.

OTHER LEGISLATION

Much could be said about legislation yet to be considered—for the Congress will remain to finish its work before adjournment—as, for instance, the railroad problem, Muscle Shoals, 3-cent postage, appropriations, and so on; but I would give some thought to the effect of this legislation on the lumber industry, or, for that matter, almost every industry.

EFFECT ON BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY

Already we feel better; improvement is noticeable on every side. The "new deal" has taken hold. Some business is stimulated; a spirit of confidence is restored, many fears have been dispelled, and a new optimism has been inspired. Mr. Hoover once said, "Prosperity is just around the corner." But, alas! It was not so! Mr. Roosevelt and the Congress have done more in a short 48 days than Mr. Hoover and the Congress have done in the past 4 years! But I would not be true to the situation, if a note of warning was not sounded. In the very nature of things economic, and, because we all are human, unfavorable reaction is sure to occur; there will still be a measure of discontent. Experience will give more light, if we be but patient; confidence on the part of the American people will produce results; cooperation in upholding the authority and acts of the President and the Congress will carry us forward; resistance to adverse reactions and unwarranted criticism should be waged against those who would rather tear down, or retard, than help. I reiterate that it is of the utmost importance for social and industrial progress that business men endeavor to give all proposals for social and industrial legislation an unprejudiced consideration.

"NEW DEAL" FOR LUMBER INDUSTRY

Start the wheels in industry, but first put your house in order. Never again will lumber be distributed and sold as was done 5 and 10 years ago. I am informed that lumber production last year was the lowest since the Civil War, less than 10,000,000,000 feet. Consumption was only one third of that of the year of 1929. Depletion of working capital and credit has been severe in your industry, as much hit as any industry. So you have much to recover; but abandon the old practices, giving all or splitting commissions or discounts to your trade; dual representation forcing lumber to compete with itself; entering new markets without adequate knowledge of local conditions; financing weak buyers; secret price concessions; pool car sales to more than 2 or 3 customers. These, and like abuses, should go from your midst; and, in their place, should arise a new determination from well-planned effort to increase the Nation's consumption of lumber, and strike a proper balance between production and consumption.

ORGANIZE AS NEVER BEFORE

Three suggestions I offer, each dependent, one on the other: Self-regulation within the industry; controlled production balanced with the distribution and sale of lumber; and emergency legislation to legally grant and permit your basic, necessary industry to organize and function.

It is patent that the three natural and economic fields in the lumber industry are: (1) The manufacturer, (2) the wholesaler, and (3) the retailer. In years past the lumber industry was over-organized and activities overlapped at great loss of energy, influence, and money. Disregard for the ethical and economic rights of others within the industry itself has brought you to this position of lacking the unity and strength of purpose that should come from intelligent organization. Your industry must start over with a "new deal", and you must "do it now." If you profit in wisdom from the experience and vicissitudes of the past, then look to the present and to the future. Begin this time at the top and work down; begin at the mills and work through to the ultimate consumer. Consolidate into one great tied-in industry for your own good and in the public interest. Lumber is an economic necessity for shelter, as food and clothing are necessary for sustenance.

A strong national lumber manufacturers' association, a strong national American wholesale lumber association, a strong national retail lumber dealers' association, gathering together under these units, the influence and cooperation of every State and regional association of every kind and species; separate, but united; distinct, but coordinated; contrary interests made to be reconciled; and through strength within, the industry can combat and fight against substitutes and loss of markets, and be united against the common enemy during an economic distress.

CONSERVATORS (?)

I am in favor of protection of States' rights against the encroachments of a centralized government; and I resist the entry of State or Nation in private business. I would be the last to advocate that the lumber industry should be under Government control. But, to repeat, "It is apparent that return to prosperity by the old method is impossible." Nowadays, we hear the word "conservator", a guardian, a protector. Now it is pronounced "conservator", a new word, but known in early English law. It has been recently applied to one appointed to take over the affairs of a bank; and we seem not to understand just what the word means, but, in its application in a practical way, it represents a plan which serves to salvage assets and permits reorganization with less loss to depositors and stockholders alike. Do you need "conservators" in your industry? A "conservator" in any given industry or unit branch should have some Government authority and supervision, with safeguards and reservations retained and controlled by the industry.

SUPPLEMENT THE SHERMAN ANTITRUST LAW

I refer to the effect of the Sherman antitrust law and the antitrust laws of the various States upon competition today. Lumber products are being sold at a loss. If the seller is able to obtain a price for his merchandise which will take care of his production cost and handling expenses, and pay a portion of his overhead, he will make a sale in the belief that it is better to sell and acquire a gross profit to apply on this overhead expense, rather than not to make the sale, and then have nothing to so apply. This net loss is one of the contributing causes to delay in recovery of business. Prosperity and profit are synonymous terms. The larger industries should be in a position to make reasonable profit or at least break even. The average business man, due to his fear of antitrust laws, will not enter into an agreement with his competitor which would enable him to sell his product at a reasonable price. Competent legal advice and counsel is of little avail on this subject, because the lawyer can only relate what the law prohibits, and not what it permits. No particular case can be taken as a criterion or precedent, for the facts are invariably not the same. The conditions in one industry are not applicable to another. The law should protect the business man who in good faith wants to obey the law, avoid any injury to the public interest. Some judicial or semijudicial authority should exist to permit him to know in advance, not when it is too late, what he can do without fear of violation.

APPALACHIAN COAL CO. CASE

There has been considerable discussion in the press and trade journals about the recent decision by the Supreme Court of the United States, in what is known as the "Appalachian Coal Co. case" (No. 504, October term, 1932; decided Mar. 13, 1933). In this case, the challenged combination arose because of the creation by agreement of coal producers of an exclusive selling agency; and was held valid. Much has been made of the decision that the formation of this sales agency automatically eliminated competition among members of the agency. It may be another forward step by the courts to liberalize the provisions of a rather harsh statute; but the general discussion of the case, however, has overlooked the fact that the court held that the evidence "makes it impossible to conclude that defendants through the operation of their plan will be able to fix the price of coal in the consuming markets."

And, further, the Court held:

"The proof clearly shows that wherever their selling agency operates it will find itself confronted by effective competition backed by virtually inexhaustible sources of supply and will also be compelled to cope with the organized buying power of large consumers. The plan cannot be said either to contemplate or to involve the fixing of market prices."

The Supreme Court retained jurisdiction of the case, and at the end said:

"With the provision that the court shall retain jurisdiction of the cause and may set aside the decree and take further proceedings if future developments justify that course in the appropriate enforcement of the Antitrust Act."

The present antitrust statutes grew out of the peculiar economic conditions of the Nineties. It was a distinguished Senator from Ohio, Senator Sherman, in 1890, who sponsored the legislation. Conditions have changed, after 43 years; and, as the conditions have changed, the antitrust laws have been modified to meet them, in some cases by legislation, and in other cases by liberalization of their provisions by the courts. Labor and agriculture are exempt. Why not industry? The case reflects the present effect of existing economic conditions upon the Courts' attitude toward a law enacted to cope with altogether different economic problems.

OHIO TOBACCO CASE

In Ohio, a tobacco association organized and made agreements with its members that the membership should sell and deliver to the association all tobacco grown for a period of 5 years. The validity of such agreement came before the supreme court of my own State of Ohio (List v. Burley Tobacco Co., Growers Cooperative Association, 114 Ohio State, 361); and the court held it to be valid. It said, "This controversy involves a legal problem, but the legal problem cannot be entirely divorced from the economic problem." The real question was one of public policy. The court referred to the situation in the agricultural industry, recognizing the fact that the persons engaged in such industry were widely scattered, many of them were small producers of limited means, and somewhat at the mercy of the purchaser, and without voice whatever in making prices or terms. Hence, such conditions justified their exemption from the State antitrust laws.

UNITED STATES SENATE INVESTIGATION

Many persons believe—and no doubt it is true in too many instances—that monopolies invade our domestic and industrial life. There are monopolies of buyers, however, as well as sellers. Unreasonable prices and monopolistic restraint are against the public interest. I do not advocate either the repeal or the amendment of the present Sherman antitrust law; but I submit that the Sherman law should be supplemented by the enactment of a new section designed to meet the situation in industry. I am not unmindful of the fact that Chief Justice White years ago, in a Standard Oil case, wrote the word "reasonable" into the statute, and this decision has not been reversed.

There is now pending before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary a resolution (73d Cong., 1st sess.; S.Res. 36, by Mr. KING, of Utah) which, if passed, authorizes an investigation for the purpose of determining what, if any, legislation is required to strengthen and extend the provisions of the antitrust laws. The Congress represents the people. Why hold back from making your problem known and openly and publicly asking and advocating what you, in good faith, believe necessary for the salvation of your industry? Prepare to present a definite plan to the Senate Judiciary Committee, or arrange a conference with the author of the resolution, Mr. KING, or a conference with the chairman of the committee, Mr. ASHURST, of Arizona. Labor and agriculture do not hesitate to ask. Why should industry? Approach your Government; do not await its coming to you. If industry asks, it may receive. Advocate the right to organize, in order to establish ways and means for fair and reasonable competition and at a reasonable profit, and not against public policy, and as may be determined upon findings under rules and regulations by some Federal agency to be created or by the Federal Trade Commission or Department of Commerce.

But I must conclude, my friends. It was Joyce Kilmer, in his "Memoirs and Poems", who wrote:

"TREES"

"I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree.
A tree whose hungry mouth is prest
Against the earth's sweet flowing breast."

And at the end he recites:

"Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree."

I, too, would be a poet; my looks may not show it:

"Suggestions, too, are made by me;
But only you can make them see."

There is sentiment and beauty in the harmonious tones of the American walnut; in the dainty, cheerful highlights of bird's-eye maple; in the practical uses of the hard and soft maples; in the stately fir and redwood; in the rugged hickory; and in the many uses of the mighty pines.

You represent a wonderful industry, an economically necessary industry, and you and I have a great Commander in Chief in our President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

NEEDS OF EDUCATION—ADVANCEMENT

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of finance and education.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, the advancement that has been made in education in recent years has been a source of pride and satisfaction to the people of this Nation. Within the last decade we have noted the improvement in educational standards and the higher qualifications of the men and women who have been attracted to the field of education by the higher standards of remuneration and advancement offered in the teaching vocation.

When this Government was established and the Constitution adopted it was the express purpose "to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

To carry out the ideals on which this Nation was founded the importance of promoting education was early recognized. The great centers of learning—Yale and Harvard—had already been established. With the need of education always in mind, our school system rapidly followed the pioneers that settled in the great West.

The South, the seat of slavery, was slow to adopt the public-school system but relied for education on the employment of private tutors and governesses patterned after the English system of the last century.

One of the most outstanding examples of the accomplishments of our educational system is the progress and development of the natives of the Philippine Islands. Many of us remember when outward-bound ships were taking scores of American teachers to our island possessions to establish there such American school systems, with the result that such strides have been made in the educational advancement of these backward people that the setting up of a new nation among the powers of the earth is being seriously considered by granting independence to the Philippines. Would that Russia could have had the benefit of a decade of our educational system. What misery and bloodshed could have been averted had the training of the Russian youth been intrusted to our sweet-faced school teachers.

The great strides of material and cultural advancement in this country can be traced and credited to the continual progress made in the upbuilding of our educational system. Native intelligence and ingenuity assisted by liberal education has enabled America to outstrip all other countries in raising the living standards of its population. Science applied to government in a brief century has made this Nation preeminent among world powers.

While great progress has been made in most branches of human endeavor, we find we have lagged in applying the science of finance to the needs of our people. Many disinterested leaders in political economy are agreed that our monetary system is obsolete, that it is failing to meet the demand that rapidly expanding business has placed upon it.

It is the expressed opinion of many of our political economists that our monetary system must be revised, broadened, and recast that business and the producing interest of this country may be restored to a measure of prosperity that will insure the support of our schools in the present state of efficiency. We must turn our attention to remedying the cause of this recession in material prosperity rather than to lowering our living standards and undermining our educational system by reducing the compensation paid the teaching body, thereby depriving our schools and the teaching personnel of the benefits of the advancement so slowly attained through the last two decades.

Real progress in this country is based on the advancement of our educational standards and not on a downward readjustment of business to meet the exigencies of a shrinking monetary system.

We must replenish the shrinking volume of our circulating money medium by freeing business of the shackles of an obsolete monetary system. Of everything else we have an abundance to maintain the high standard of prosperity attained in the past decade.

To continue on the path of progress our educational system must improve, not retrogress.

LABOR'S SHARE IN EXPENDITURES FOR WATERWAY IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a brief table prepared by engineers of the War Department showing the proportion of river and harbor work that goes to labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that a public-works program is now under consideration for the relief of the unemployed, it will be of general interest to the people of the United States to know the proportion of river-and-harbor and flood-control expenditures that actually goes for labor.

The Corps of Engineers of the War Department have completed a very careful study of the matter, and the result of their investigation shows that of expenditures for lock and dam construction 76.9 percent is for labor, for concrete bank-revetment construction 80.2 percent is for labor, for levee construction 78.5 percent is for labor, and in dredging operations 76.8 percent of expenditures is for labor.

Probably no other type of necessary public-works expenditures will show a greater proportion for labor than that embraced in river-and-harbor and flood-control works. The following letter and memorandum from Colonel Kingman, of the Corps of Engineers, are self-explanatory:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, April 28, 1933.

Memorandum for Judge MANSFIELD.

DEAR JUDGE MANSFIELD: At General Brown's direction, I am sending you several copies of a memorandum showing the amount of labor employed on river-and-harbor and flood-control works.

Sincerely,

JOHN J. KINGMAN,
Lieutenant Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

APRIL 27, 1933.

Subject: Amount of labor employed on river-and-harbor and flood-control works.

Memorandum for General Brown.

1. The following analysis, showing proportion of money spent for direct and indirect labor on work done by the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, with Government plant and hired labor, has been compiled from the records and cost accounts of the Engineer Department.

2. The indirect labor charges are based on the proportionate labor costs of commodities delivered from figures secured from a representative of the Tariff Commission.

	Lock and dam construction percentage	Concrete bank-revetment construction percentage	Levee construction percentage	Dredging operations percentage
Direct labor:
Labor used in construction, including plant operation	30.0	34.0	34.0	25.7
Labor used in repairing plant	4.0	8.0	10.0	16.2
Surveys, superintendence and overhead	7.2	5.4	9.0	9.1
Miscellaneous service			3.5
Total	41.2	47.4	56.5	51.0
Indirect labor:
Materials and supplies used in construction	32.9	30.0	14.0	18.1
Materials and supplies used in repairing	2.8	2.8	5.6	7.7
Miscellaneous supplies			2.4
Total	35.7	32.8	22.0	25.8
Total direct and indirect labor	76.9	80.2	78.5	76.8
Other costs:
Basic materials	16.1	14.8	10.5	15.0
Depreciation	7.0	5.0	11.0	8.2
Total	23.1	19.8	21.5	23.2
Total cost	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0

<sup>1</sup> It is interesting to note that the total percentage for direct and indirect labor varies only slightly regardless of the type of work.

NOTE.—When work is done by contract the contractor's profit, such as it may be, must also be met. Under the provisions of the law, a contract may not be awarded if the bid exceeds by 25 percent the estimated cost of doing the work by Government plant and hired labor. This provision serves to prevent the payment of excessive profits to the contractor. In point of fact, under present conditions, bids received are frequently less than the estimated cost of doing the work by Government plant and hired labor.

JOHN J. KINGMAN,
Lieutenant Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House, before 1929 our Nation sold more than $5,000,000,000 worth of goods to the rest of the world. For 1933 the volume of our foreign trade has fallen to less than $2,000,000,000. We have therefore lost more than $3,000,000,000 of our foreign business, and the shrinkage in domestic commerce is even greater.

Our great President is moving with characteristic dispatch to reclaim the foreign markets we have lost. He has called a world-wide economic conference in an effort to recover our world-wide trade. It should be the policy of the Congress to promote wherever possible the development of new industries that will build up our home markets, relieve unemployment, and expand the buying power of the people generally.

With this great problem in mind, Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill for the purpose of promoting the use of blended gasoline and alcohol for internal-combustion-engine fuel.

The bill has the endorsement of and is sponsored by a committee of citizens representing general farm interests throughout the Nation and is actively supported by the leading agricultural organizations and by a wide range of business interests concerned with the problem of increasing the farmer's purchasing power. The members of the Motor Fuel Alcohol Committee are Clifford V. Gregory, editor Prairie Farmer, Chicago, chairman; M. S. Winder, secretary American Farm Bureau Federation; E. A. Eckert, chairman executive committee, National Grange; Charles E. Hearst, president Iowa Farm Bureau Federation; Earl C. Smith, president Illinois Agricultural Association; William H. Settle, president Indiana Farm Bureau Federation; LeRoy Melton, president Farmers' Equity Union of America; and C. E. Huff, president Farmers' National Grain Corporation.

Of all the new uses for farm crops that have been suggested, the manufacture of industrial alcohol from corn and other farm products and its use blended with gasoline for motor fuel seems to promise most in the way of widespread and permanent benefits to the entire agricultural industry. The enormous consumption of motor fuel in America is well known.

If alcohol from farm crops was to supply a part of the Nation's consumption of motor fuel, a new use would be established for hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of surplus farm crops adapted to the production of alcohol for fuel. A 5-percent alcohol blend for all motor fuels consumed would require from 300,000,000 to 350,000,000 bushels of corn annually; a 10-percent blend would require from 600,000,000 to 700,000,000 bushels, if the alcohol is produced from corn alone. The revenue derived from the operation of the law would be a very considerable item toward reducing the Budget deficit, and the tax collected would be covered directly into the Federal Treasury.

In approaching the problem, the interested organizations have sought to develop a plan which will be easy and simple to administer and which will not impose undue burdens upon the petroleum industry and users of motor cars but will actually be to their advantage. The oil and automotive industries would profit from increased farm purchasing power. The enlargement of existing industrial-alcohol distilleries, the construction of new plants, would contribute immediately to increased employment of labor, greater railroad revenues, enlarged coal-mine operations, and other collateral lines.

THE PLAN PROPOSED

It is proposed to amend the Revenue Act of 1932 so as to apply an additional Federal tax of 1 cent per gallon for gasoline, not blended with alcohol, produced from domestic farm crops for the period ending December 31, 1933. For the period ending December 31, 1934, to tax gasoline not so blended 2 cents per gallon; and thereafter to tax unblended gasoline 3 cents per gallon. The tax differential in favor of the blended fuel is 1 cent per gallon for the first 18 months and 2 cents per gallon after December 31, 1934.

It is not contemplated that oil companies would actually blend all of their gasoline with alcohol at the low percentages specified. The proposed amendment provides that the oil producer who during any tax period acquires and blends alcohol to the amount of 1 percent of his gasoline sales shall be entitled to the lowest rate of tax, regardless of the fact that he may have blended 10 or 15 percent of his alcohol with certain grades of gasoline while the remaining fuel may be sold unblended.

To illustrate in another way: An oil company which purchased and blended 1,000 gallons of alcohol would be presumed to have produced 100,000 gallons of blended gasoline during the period for which the specified percentage is 1 percent.

There is an active demand for alcohol-blended fuel at present. It is believed that the merits of the new fuel will soon result in an enlarged market and that users will pay a premium for it, so that regions remote from sources of alcohol would not have their gasoline taxed beyond the present rate.

The alcohol-blended fuel will be popular with motorists, and its use will spread, so that the percentage of alcohol can be increased without difficulty to 5 percent after the first 18 months.

TECHNICAL QUESTIONS AND PRACTICAL USE

Conclusions as to the performance of the blended fuel, and technical points that have been raised, are based on experience in foreign countries and in the United States, where large-scale tests with hundreds of automobiles of all makes have recently been made by the Illinois Agricultural Association, the Keystone Steel & Wire Co., Iowa State College, and others.

Absolute alcohol mixes with gasoline in all proportions, making a blend that is noncorrosive, and is permanent under all conditions of use. There are no technical difficulties either in manufacture or use of anhydrous alcohol for fuel that cannot be readily overcome.

The addition of 10 to 20 percent of alcohol with gasoline noticeably improves the performance of the motor using the fuel. Characteristics from which better performance results are as follows:

Alcohol is an excellent antiknock agent, engines start easier with alcohol-blended fuel, the engine operates more smoothly, acceleration is greater, less carbon is formed, no gum accumulation occurs, and engines operating on alcohol blends show lower cylinder head temperatures and give measurably higher power than straight gasoline.

Before endorsing the legislation proposed the proponents of the bill recognized that it was necessary to know just what the blended fuel would do in the matter of increased mileage in automobiles of all makes and ages under actual road conditions. Tests by industrial companies in which hundreds of automobiles had been used throughout the past 2 years showed increased mileage as well as better general performance, but more definite information was wanted, therefore comprehensive tests were started in Illinois, Iowa, and Nebraska.

The Illinois Agricultural Association is a large distributor of gasoline in Illinois. Under special arrangement with Dr. Doran, of the Industrial Alcohol Commission, this association secured a supply of alcohol which was sold as a blended fuel with gasoline to the general public within a 50-mile radius of the city of Peoria, Ill. Up to April 19 approximately 500,000 gallons of 10-percent alcohol-blended fuel had been distributed. Report blanks went to each purchaser.

An analysis of reports from 712 customers returned by April 19 last, comparing the 10-percent blend with regular gasoline, brings out the following points:

Out of a total of 712 customers, 579 reported easier starting, 675 reported increased acceleration, 670 reported smoother operation, 673 less knock, 678 increased power, and 683 reported general performance of the motor better. Seven hundred and nine reports indicate that the trade will pay a premium of 2 to 3 cents per gallon for 10-percent alcohol blend.

Similar reports were secured from 29 users who heretofore had used ethyl gasoline, and who compared the performance of the 10-percent alcohol blend with that premium fuel. Twenty-five reported better motor performance on the alcohol blend, and 17 reported an average mileage increase of 3.09 miles per gallon.

One individual report which is of especial interest is that of Adolph Woolner, Jr., 439 Moss Avenue, Peoria, Ill. Between March 11 and March 23 he made comparative tests of the alcohol blend, regular and ethyl gasoline in the same car, over the identical road trip, and the results are summarized in the following report:

Ten-percent alcohol gas: Used 40 gallons 10-percent alcohol gas in 500 miles; average, 12.5 miles per gallon. Price at Peoria, 18.6 cents per gallon; cost per mile, 1.48 cents.

Regular gas: Used 40 gallons regular gas in 380 miles; average, 9.5 miles per gallon. Price at Peoria, 14.6 cents per gallon; cost per mile, 1.53 cents.

Ethyl gas: Used 40 gallons ethyl gas in 448 miles; average, 11.2 miles per gallon. Price at Peoria, 18 cents per gallon; cost per mile, 1.60 cents.

All the above tests were made in a Packard car, 1929 model, no. 640, weighing 5,400 pounds. The runs were made over the same route, from 439 Moss Avenue, Peoria, to Bureau Junction by way of Mossville, Rome, Chillicothe, Sparland, Henry, and Putnam. Return trip, the same route until Sparland; then taking the "hill" road to Mount Hawley Road and back to starting point, making a total of 128 miles for round trip.

Tests are being continued, not only by the Illinois Agricultural Association but in numerous localities in Iowa and Nebraska, where results are being checked. Large industrial corporations, among them the Keystone Steel & Wire Co., of Peoria, Ill., and the Earl Coryell Oil Co., of Lincoln, Nebr., have been distributing the blended fuel, with results that agree closely with those reported above.

The proposed amendment is only asked to assist in introducing the new fuel, and to overcome opposition by those who have not conducted large-scale tests of the fuel.

Foreign experience: Use of alcohol blended with gasoline is not new. Legislation encouraging or requiring the use of alcohol blends for motor fuel has been adopted by nine foreign countries—Austria, Brazil, Chile, Czechoslovakia, France, Germany, Hungary, Italy, and Latvia. National legislation is widely advocated, and now pending, in five countries—Argentina, Cuba, Lithuania, Poland, and Uruguay.

CONSIDERATIONS OF ECONOMIC AND NATIONAL POLICY

All thinking classes now recognize that this Nation cannot be prosperous if its farmers, and those dependent on them, are impoverished.

The farm-surplus problem in the United States is critical. Cutting acreage and production is difficult. Wherever new uses for farm products can be developed it is wise to do so as a matter of national policy.

Unquestionably agriculture will be better able to assist in the relief of unemployment if serious national effort is made to develop new industrial uses for raw materials grown on the farm. In the proposed use of alcohol we believe that any added cost would be compensated for by increased efficiency of the fuel.

Agricultural raw materials readily convertible into alcohol include corn and other cereals, rice, potatoes, root crops, fruits, and molasses from the domestic cane and beet-sugar industry.

It should be understood that the helpful influence of this project on agriculture would not be limited to corn, even if it were the only raw material used. It would affect favorably the price of every bushel of grain sold off the farm. The price of cotton and of other crops that compete with corn for acreage would be helped. With the pressure of the corn surplus lifted, southern farmers and dairy producers would benefit, as well as those in the Corn Belt. The general favorable effect on agriculture would pass to American banks, business, and industry.

It is estimated that from 2,000,000,000 to 2,500,000,000 bushels of corn annually are fed or marketed in the United States. A price increase of 10 cents a bushel on that basis would add from $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 to farm incomes, and a 20-cent price increase would add $400,000,000 to $500,000,000 to the income of the American farmer.

This does not take into account the effect on the income of producers of other farm crops, nor does it consider the large amount that would be paid out to American labor in alcohol factories, railroads, and coal mines.

The effect of decreased farm buying power on farm-machinery sales is shown by Department of Commerce reports for 1928, 1929, and 1931. The totals in the following table include farm implements and certain miscellaneous lines like barn equipment:

Total value manufactured
1928	$524,255,416
1929	606,621,812
1931	214,390,792

The Agricultural Year Book for 1933 says: "Sales in 1932 were materially below those of 1931."

The loss of farm buying power is shown in the motor-car trade as well. Sales of new motor cars in the country as a whole fell off 42.6 percent in 1932 as compared with 1931; in the nine Corn Belt States the reduction was 47 percent.

Anyone who travels in farm States can see the extent to which horses are replacing tractors in the fields, and how little farmers' cars are used compared with former years.

GENERAL BENEFITS TO THE NATION'S BUSINESS

The proposed bill creates a new industry in this country. The construction and operation of new industrial-alcohol distilleries would be of incalculable benefit to a number of other industries including manufacturers of copper, steel, and other equipment, coal-mine operators, railroads, and their employees.

The supply from five new plants, each consuming 25,000 bushels of grain per day, would be required to bring the total production available for motor fuel up to 300,000,000 gallons a year, or 2 percent of the annual fuel consumption. If 5 percent of the motor fuel is alcohol, the supply from 28 new plants, each using 25,000 bushels of grain a day, and producing 20,600,000 gallons of alcohol a year, would be required.

Each new plant, it is estimated, would cost the manufacturer $3,975,000. Labor employed in producing equipment and constructing one plant would amount to 2,720 men for a year. Each plant would consume 8,750,000 bushels of grain and 150,500 tons of coal a year. Operating labor would require 175 men per plant. Each such distillery would create new freight business estimated at $1,656,000 a year.

The magnitude of the new business that would be created by a program that would call for the establishment of 28 such units can be gathered from the following summary.

Twenty-eight new units of 20,000,000 gallons' capacity each would require:

Investment in plant, $111,300,000.

Men employed in building equipment and plant, 78,160.

Bushels of grain a year, 245,000,000.

Tons of coal a year, 4,200,000.

New freight service a year, $46,382,000.

Factory employees a year, 4,860.

CONSIDERATION OF PETROLEUM RESERVES

The nation which leads in developing alcohol sources for motor fuel is merely anticipating a probable future need. Petroleum is a national capital resource. Minerologists agree that exhaustion of the richer and cheaper sources of gasoline may occur relatively soon as compared with other national resources. As that time approaches, gasoline is bound to rise in price.

It is the province and problem of government to think about the future. The Federal Oil Conservation Board, in its fifth report published in October 1932, said in part:

An analysis of the oil reserves of the United States, based upon the consensus of well-founded opinions, indicates that present known recoverable oil reserves in the United States are of the magnitude of 10 billion barrels.

Although in its fourth report this board discussed some of the factors causing revision of estimates of oil supply and pointed out that during the last decade every estimate had required revision upward in the light of increased production factors, nevertheless it is timely to realize the significance which should be attached to well-founded figures showing that at the current rates of production, the equivalent of our present known oil reserves will have been withdrawn from their underground reservoirs in 10 to 12 years.

A sound national policy for a safe and sufficient motor fuel for the future warrants the development of industrial alcohol as an added supply to the great petroleum deposits with which we are blessed. [Applause.]

FARM RELIEF

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, with Senate amendments, disagree to Senate amendments 1 to 84, inclusive, and that it shall be in order to consider in the House Senate amendment no. 85 to said bill, with all points of order against said amendment waived.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the leadership just how much discussion is to be permitted upon this important amendment, and whether or not we are going to be permitted to amend it, or are we expected to pass it through the hands of some conferees, who will bring their report upon the floor and pass it after an hour's discussion?

Mr. JONES. Under this unanimous-consent request the other amendments would be sent to conference and amendment no. 85, which is the expansion amendment, would be up for consideration in the House subject to a motion, with such debate as the House may see fit to allow. A motion to concur will probably be made and the House will take action on that motion.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Has the gentleman any idea along these lines now? Are we to have an adequate amount of debate?

Mr. JONES. So far as I am concerned, I should like to see an adequate amount of debate on the amendment, but if the House saw fit to vote the previous question, it could do so at any time or the House could have extended debate by unanimous consent. As I understand, someone may be recognized to move to concur in the Senate amendment, which would give 1 hour's debate unless the time is extended by unanimous consent. I would have no objection to the time being further extended if no one objected to the request. But after debate we should have final action.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Has the gentleman discussed the matter with the minority leader to find out how he feels about it?

Mr. JONES. I understand the Speaker has had the matter up with him and has disclosed the plan with reference to the matter.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Do I understand correctly that there is a serious error in this bill and that the bill that is here now is not the bill that was passed by the Senate?

Mr. JONES. No; this is the bill that passed the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. And there is no error in the bill whatsoever?

Mr. JONES. There is no error in the bill as it came over this morning.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I heard there was an error in the bill and it would have to be reprinted.

Mr. JONES. There was an error in the first print of the bill, but it was corrected, and the bill came over this morning in corrected form.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is probably the most important piece of legislation that will be before the House at this session or in many years to come. It covers more ground than any piece of legislation I have ever known anything about, and it is so important that I feel I should be compelled to object to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones].

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will withhold any objection a moment, would it be satisfactory to the gentleman if we got unanimous consent in advance to extend the time for debate? I agree that it is an important matter. It is also important that it be acted upon. I hope the gentleman will be reasonable.

Mr. SNELL. We feel that amendment no. 85, the currency proposition, is a matter that changes the fundamental law of this land in regard to our currency and is of such vital importance to all the people everywhere that it ought to have careful and considerate attention by this House, and as far as we are able we Republicans want to demand such consideration. I do not want to do anything to delay the passage of this bill, but we insist, as far as we are able, on having ample time to go into it and discuss the proposition and offer such amendments as we think proper. The Senate took a week on it. I would not think it would be necessary to have as much time as that, but we should like a day or two to get ready for the discussion and we should have at least a day of full debate on the inflation proposition alone. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; if I have the floor.

Mr. RANKIN. To object now would only have the effect of postponing it for another day, and if the gentleman from Texas is willing to agree to a reasonable amount of time, why not proceed with the debate now?

Mr. SNELL. I think we ought to have a little time to go into the matter before we start the debate; the final draft of the bill has just come to my desk. I would be willing to have the debate tomorrow, but I would not want to consent today.

Mr. JONES. Would the gentleman agree to the unanimous-consent request if it is agreed that it is to be considered tomorrow and avoid the necessity of going through the process of securing a rule?

Mr. SNELL. How much time is the gentleman willing to give us in debate, and is he willing to consider it under general rules of the House?

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, the gentleman understands that an objection now will mean it will be necessary to bring in a rule.

Mr. SNELL. I understand that.

Mr. BYRNS. I think the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Texas can come nearer getting what they both want if they can agree upon time rather than go through the process of getting a rule which may or may not suit them.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman want to read this under the 5-minute rule and consider it as other important legislation is considered? This is an entirely new and radical proposition that has never been considered by the House.

Mr. JONES. I will agree with the gentleman on 3 hours' discussion. It is hoped that the adoption of this amendment will bring about a better commodity-price level. Surely that is a desirable object.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman cannot come to any further agreement with me that provides for just talk. Of course, the gentleman has the power to bring in a rule and force it down our throats. If you will give us an opportunity to amend it and to consider it in the usual way, we will make an agreement.

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman has made up his mind in advance that he is not going to agree to anything, there is no use discussing the matter. A rule becomes necessary in that event.

Mr. SNELL. We might just as well understand it now, that I will not make an agreement unless some of our rights are protected.

Mr. JONES. I was trying to get an amicable agreement with the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will let us consider the bill in the usual way—

Mr. BYRNS. We are proposing to consider it in the usual way, I will say to the gentleman. I know of no precedent which would impel the House to consider a Senate amendment paragraph by paragraph.

Mr. SNELL. In the gentleman's long experience in the House has he ever seen an amendment similar to this that changes the fundamentals of our currency system?

Mr. BYRNS. No; I never have.

Mr. SNELL. And then have a request made to pass it without any consideration?

Mr. BYRNS. But we are facing new conditions every day, and this is one Senate amendment. It does seem to me it ought to be possible to discuss this one Senate amendment as a whole. Of course, if Members want to pick out some particular paragraph to discuss they can do so, but I see no reason for extended discussion.

Mr. SNELL. There are 3 or 4 distinct propositions involved. There are some of them that some of us want to support, and, I explained, we can come to an agreement with you about it if you will let it be read in the House and considered as a new piece of important legislation ought to be considered.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman agree to have debate today and let it run over until tomorrow and have final action then?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, let me make this suggestion to the gentleman from New York. Every Member on this side appreciates the position of the gentleman from New York and the fact that he has cooperated so far in the legislation. Let me suggest that the practical situation in which he finds himself will be met if ample time is given to fully discuss the amendments to this bill. I submit to the gentleman that, in the situation in which he finds himself, that is all he can expect in the matter.

Mr. SNELL. It may be all that I can expect but not all that I claim we have a right to expect, even under unusual circumstances.

Mr. STEAGALL. I suggest that the gentleman agree to a debate of 1 day, and then if the gentleman desires to let it go over we can do so.

Mr. SNELL. I want to say with all frankness to the gentleman from Tennessee, the majority leaders, that we cannot agree by unanimous consent to just let this matter go through by simply talking about it. We want to have it considered under the rules of the House, with the right to offer amendments, and that is the only agreement I can make.

Mr. BYRNS. We are proposing now to agree to 3 hours' debate on these amendments. If we can take it up today, we can send it to conference and get the bill passed without any particular delay. The gentleman has referred to the delay that has occurred in another body. We all know that if this bill has any merit in it—and some of us think that it has—the quicker we can get it passed so as to bring relief to those we are trying to relieve the better. I can see no reason for having it go over for 2 or 3 days.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman think it is unreasonable, on a measure that changes the whole financial system of the United States, to have 2 days' discussion of it?

Mr. BYRNS. I think if the gentleman has been reading the debates in the Senate we are pretty well advised as to what may be said on both sides.

Mr. SNELL. There is a certain responsibility resting upon all Members of the House, and I am going to assert my right as a responsible Member.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman has that privilege.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] that the very thing we are trying to avoid is interminable debate on these amendments. I can see no reason for going on and considering this amendment under the 5-minute rule. It was not done when the gentleman's party was in power.

Mr. SNELL. I object to that statement, for we never tried to do anything of this kind before, and every old Member knows it.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, your party gagged the House efficiently on the tariff bill, and the country has been gagged by it ever since.

Mr. SNELL. I object to the gentleman's statement, because it has nothing to do with the present situation. I know what I am talking about.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, to expedite matters I demand the regular order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DIMOND, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. KVALE, on account of urgent business.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight tonight to file a report upon the consideration of the Senate amendments to the farm relief bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I hope seriously that the leaders on the Democratic side will not contemplate limiting this House to 3 hours' debate on an amendment which affects the currency problems of the Nation, which the other body has discussed for 2 weeks. I confess great disappointment at the mere proposal to have only 3 hours of debate.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection to even 4 hours or 5 hours, but I see no reason why this House should consume 2 or 3 days discussing the amendment, when it has been already so fully discussed. It seems to me that no good can be accomplished by an extended discussion covering 2 or 3 days. We must remember that this bill was proposed primarily to relieve agriculture, and here we are on the 1st of May, with the planting season already started, and nothing done by this Congress. We ought to pass the bill as quickly as we can, if it is to bring any relief.

Mr. SNELL. We are not to blame because all these things were added to the original bill.

Mr. BYRNS. They were added by the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. But we on this side of the House are not to blame for that.

Mr. BYRNS. Nor are we on this side.

Mr. BEEDY. The responsibility is with the majority party for taking this agricultural bill and extending it over the whole field of currency.

Mr. HOWARD. We will take the responsibility.

Mr. BEEDY. I think there should be no proposal here to force this down with less than 9 hours of debate.

Mr. BYRNS. I hope the Rules Committee will consider the question of time.

Mr. BEEDY. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I am one Member of this House who will not agree to the suggestion, in respect to matters which are to determine the very life of the Nation, that we in this body shall accept without debate what has taken place in the Senate. This is the most important bill that has been before this Congress, and there should be time enough given to the Members of the House to discuss it thoroughly. No subject is so little understood in the United States as the problem involved in these amendments in respect to the currency. There are three or four separate proposals in this inflationary amendment which have been attached to the bill. Each and every one of these propositions should be understood and discussed by the membership of this House, unless we are going to surrender absolutely the powers given to the Congress under the Constitution of the United States. Unless I can have assurance that there is going to be time enough to discuss each one of these different propositions in this particular bill, I am going to object even to the granting of time within which to file the report from the Rules Committee.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter for the Rules Committee to pass on the time that they will allow. After all, it will be a question with the House as to whether or not it accepts the rule reported by the Rules Committee.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman has control of the majority votes on this matter. Will not the gentleman assure us now that we will have more than 3 hours' debate? There should be at least 2 days.

Mr. BYRNS. I have just said that so far as I am personally concerned I would not object to even 5 hours, but I think that is long enough on this one amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. Reserving the right further to object, is the gentleman going to afford an opportunity to instruct the conferees, under the rule?

Mr. BYRNS. I cannot give the gentleman any assurance as to what the rule will contain. If I could, I would.

Mr. McFADDEN. Can the gentleman give us assurance that there will be more than 3 hours of debate?

Mr. BYRNS. I have just told the gentleman how I feel about it personally. I cannot answer as to what the Rules Committee will do.

Mr. McFADDEN. What is the gentleman's own view?

Mr. BYRNS. I have just told the gentleman that I would not object to 5 hours, but I think that is ample.

Mr. McFADDEN. Let me ask the gentleman this: Will the different proposals in the inflationary measure be considered separately, so that they can be discussed and acted on separately?

Mr. BYRNS. No. I have just said that I think the amendment should be considered as one amendment. That is the way it passed the Senate. Would the gentleman object, or would any other gentleman on that side object, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] were to renew his request for consideration of this bill tomorrow, with the understanding that amendments 1 to 84, inclusive, are to be disagreed to and sent to conference, and that then we are to discuss amendment numbered 85, the inflation amendment, for a period of 5 hours. That would obviate the necessity for a rule.

Mr. McFADDEN. I would not object to that if these matters can be divided and can be discussed and acted upon separately.

Mr. BYRNS. If the gentleman will agree to that, it will obviate the necessity for a rule.

Mr. SNELL. We cannot agree to that.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I will not agree to that, as one Member on this side of the House, because I should prefer to see the majority party bring in a rule. Let them enact legislation as they have in the past, as rubber stamps of the present administration. Why make believe that there is an agreement between us. If Congress is going to be a rubber stamp for the President, why pretend that we are in agreement? Many Republican Members are in complete disagreement with this inflation panacea. Let the Democratic majority bring in a rule, and I do not care how strong or arbitrary the gentleman makes it, because it will be passed just the same by the same votes that have heretofore surrendered all our constitutional authority to the President.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman has referred to rubber stamps. If we have acted as rubber stamps, we have caught the habit from the gentleman and his party during the last decade. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until called by the Speaker of the House in session, in order that the Committee on Rules may have an opportunity to bring in a rule today, so that this matter will not be thrown over until Wednesday.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in such a serious matter as this, for one, I regret that any considerations other than the wisdom of adequate debate have been introduced. I wish to point out that the function of the House is not only to reach decisions but also to acquaint the public in order that there may be intelligent public judgment upon what we do. I trust the gentleman will ignore any but this one consideration. As far back as the time of the Greeks there was a famous saying, "Strike but hear." For the sake of being heard and for the sake of contributing as we may to the final arbiter in these things—the people—I trust the gentleman's committee will give adequate opportunity for consideration of conflicting views.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until the call of the Speaker.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against that motion; but if the gentleman will listen, I think we can straighten it out. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Very well. I will make the point of order against the motion that the motion is not privileged.

Mr. GOSS. I make the point of order that the motion is not privileged, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. I should like to ask if the Speaker put the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] asking that the Rules Committee have until 12 o'clock tonight within which to file a report, and if any objection was made to that request after the gentleman from Tennessee indicated that he was willing to allow more than 3 hours' general debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the request again, without objection.

The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules have until midnight tonight within which to file a report on the matter under consideration.

Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, of course they can simply force us to stay here and come back a little later. They can do that, so let us agree to this request and let them file a report later in the afternoon and take up this matter tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. I wish to call attention to the fact that there are other important amendments in this bill to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power (H.R. 3835) besides title 3, financing.

As the bill passed the House citrus growers of Florida can only borrow on their groves on a valuation of $100 per acre, owing to the fact that no provision is provided enabling the appraiser to take into consideration the value of the trees on the land or the fruit on the trees. In other words, the appraiser only appraises the land and allows no value for the trees or for the fruit thereon. I understand the same restriction applies to apple and peach orchards. This is grossly unfair and as a matter of fact does not give the growers any relief. I am satisfied my colleagues did not think this provision would be so construed.

I want to call the attention of the conferees to section 41 of the bill, which is an amendment passed by the Senate, as follows:

LOANS TO FRUIT GROWERS

Sec. 41. That in making loans to owners of groves and orchards, including citrus-fruit groves and other fruit groves and orchards, the Federal land banks, the farm land banks, and all Government agencies making loans upon such character of property shall, in appraising the property offered as security, give a reasonable and fair valuation to the fruit trees located and growing upon said property and constituting a substantial part of its value.

If this amendment is concurred in by the conferees and the House, then the citrus growers of Florida may secure at least some relief.

Much has been said during the last few months about giving assistance to farmers, but the definition of a farmer is generally interpreted as only including those who grow wheat, corn, cotton, and other so-called "staples." The growing of oranges and grapefruit is an established industry and one of the backbones of Florida, and I firmly believe that Congress will not do the citrus industry a gross injustice by refusing to concur in section 41, as added to the bill in the Senate. I therefore urge the conferees in the strongest terms possible to retain this amendment in the bill.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes on the question of the expansion of the currency.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, is it the understanding that no more business is to come up?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know of any further business.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me if we are going to consider this inflation matter tomorrow, the general discussion should come up then, unless we want to sit here and discuss it all day today.

Mr. PATMAN. I see no reason why we could not discuss it some this afternoon.

Mr. SNELL. With the understanding that we can get some time on this side, that will be satisfactory.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to suggest to the Speaker that while there may be no other legislative matters it is my desire presently to submit a resolution. I understood the Chair to state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] that there would be no other business. I understood the Chair to mean by that that there would be no other legislative business.

The SPEAKER. Oh, yes; no other legislative matters.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to do so, but I must object, because there is another matter to come before the House which is very, very important and very serious. So I object.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad duty to announce to the House that on last Saturday morning the Honorable CLAY STONE BRIGGS, a distinguished Member from Texas, fell at his post of duty, the second member of the Texas delegation within recent months to die as a soldier dies in this great conflict in which the Members of the House and the country are engaged.

No man on either side of the House enjoyed or deserved a more universal respect and confidence than our friend who has just gone from us. He served well in his day and generation.

Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 123

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. CLAY STONE BRIGGS, a Representative from the State of Texas.

Resolved, That a committee of two Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as members of the funeral committee the gentleman from Texas, Mr. LANHAM, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BAILEY.

The Clerk will report the further resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 56 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 2, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

30. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting draft of a bill for the relief of Mr. Charles E. Molster, disbursing clerk, Department of Commerce, and Dr. Louis H. Bauer, a former employee; to the Committee on Claims.

31. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a joint resolution to authorize the attendance of Mr. Posheng Yen, a citizen of China, at the United States Military Academy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

32. A letter from the secretary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting a report of the activities and expenditures of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the month of March 1933, together with a statement of loans authorized during the month, showing the name, amount, and rate of interest in each case (H.Doc.No. 26); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

33. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting records of judgments rendered against the Government by the United States district courts, as follows: Department of Commerce, $670; Navy Department, $1,561; Treasury Department, $12,160.44; total, $14,391.44; to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. POU: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 124. Resolution providing for the consideration of H.R. 3835, an act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments; without amendment (Rept. No. 59). Referred to the House calendar.

Mr. POU: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 125. Resolution providing for the consideration of House Resolution 124, a resolution providing for the consideration of H.R. 3835, an act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments; without amendment (Rept. No. 60). Referred to the House calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SHALLENBERGER: A bill (H.R. 5362) to amend the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1932 relating to the tax on gasoline; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MANSFIELD: A bill (H.R. 5363) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SCHULTE: A bill (H.R. 5364) to provide relief for the loss of employment by Government employees; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. CLARK of North Carolina: A bill (H.R. 5365) providing for the recognition and enrollment as Cheraw Indians of certain Indians in the State of North Carolina; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: A bill (H.R. 5366) to reduce the compensation of Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners to $7,500 per annum; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H.R. 5367) to authorize owners of resort property to secure from the home-loan banks loans secured by mortgages and to authorize such banks to lend to members on the security of such mortgages; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: A bill (H.R. 5368) to extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange Act of March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465); to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CHAVEZ: A bill (H.R. 5369) providing for the issuance of patents upon certain conditions to lands and accretions thereto determined to be within the State of New Mexico in accordance with the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States entered April 9, 1928; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5370) granting certain public lands to the State of New Mexico for the use and benefit of the Spanish-American Normal School, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. POU: Resolution (H.Res. 124) providing for the consideration of H.R. 3835, an act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, resolution (H.Res. 125) providing for the consideration of House Resolution 124, a resolution providing for the consideration of H.R. 3835, an act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mrs. NORTON: Resolution (H.Res. 126) to authorize appropriation for expenses of subcommittee of Committee on the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Accounts.

Also, joint resolution (H.J.Res. 169) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for national representation for the people of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Territory of Alaska, memorializing Congress to give favorable consideration to the Wheeler bill, S. 2487; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, memorial of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, memorializing Congress relative to a tariff to protect the fishing industry; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAVEZ: A bill (H.R. 5371) to provide for payments to certain property owners in New Mexico for losses caused by the floods in the Rio Grande Valley during 1929; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5372) to authorize amendment of the act of February 25, 1927, for the payment of damages caused by reason of the overflow of the Rio Grande on August 17, 1921; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5373) for the relief of Juan Apodaca; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5374) authorizing the reimbursement of Edward B. Wheeler and the State Investment Co. for the loss of certain lands in the Mora Grant, N.Mex.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5375) for the relief of Albert Gonzales; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5376) for the relief of Sigmund Lindauer; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5377) for the relief of Arthur B. Hastie; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5378) for the relief of John W. Harvey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5379) granting a pension to Andrew M. Hall; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5380) granting a pension to Charles Cerny; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5381) granting a pension to William D. Kershner; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5382) for the relief of Felix Griego; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5383) for the relief of James D. McCaffrey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: A bill (H.R. 5384) for the relief of Sgt. John F. Hartman; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHANNON: A bill (H.R. 5385) granting a pension to Joseph Ladish; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANK: A bill (H.R. 5386) for the relief of John Hamilton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SWEENEY: A bill (H.R. 5387) for the relief of Joseph Gebo; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WIGGLESWORTH: A bill (H.R. 5388) for the relief of Napoleon Moran; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

809. By Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts: Petition adopted by Massachusetts House of Representatives, urging reasonable tariff protection for the fishing industry; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

810. By Mr. ARENS: Petition of New York Mills National Farm Loans Association that Federal land banks and Federal agencies should defer foreclosures until Government action on farm relief; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

811. Also, petition of Charles Munn, speaker of the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota, adopted by the house of representatives on the 8th day of April 1933, and signed by Frank Starky, chief clerk of the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota, that Federal action be taken relative to unemployment insurance, that it is unwise and unfair to Minnesota labor and Minnesota industries to have Minnesota be the first, or one of the few States, to adopt compulsory unemployment insurance laws, and also memorialize Congress to create a special commission or board to study this question; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

812. Also, petition of the Central Cooperative Wholesalers, A. J. Hayes, chairman, requesting the Senators and Congressmen of Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Michigan to use their efforts to secure an amendment of the Revenue Acts of 1926 and 1928, so that the Consumers Cooperative Association would be exempt under the revenue acts; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

813. Also, petition of the Central Labor Political Committees of Duluth and Proctor, R. A. Olson, chairman, and Milton Carlson, secretary, memorializing Congress to issue money and establish the value thereof, and that Congress extend to the several States of the Union the same courtesy which is extended to the Federal Reserve bank in the matter of loaning money, and issue directly to the said States on the security of the natural resources of such States, money to be loaned directly to the people through such agencies; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

814. By Mr. CRAVENS: Petition of Arkansas-Oklahoma Coal Operators' Association, protesting against the passage of the Black bill, S. 158; to the Committee on Labor.

815. By Mr. EVANS: Petition of John Alferi, favoring the payment of the bonus; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

816. By Mr. GIBSON: Petition of the American Legion, Department of Vermont, opposing the proposed cut in the funds appropriated for national defense; to the Committee on Appropriations.

817. By Mr. HOLMES: Petition of the Worcester Chamber of Commerce, Worcester, Mass.; to the Committee on Labor.

818. By Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: Resolution of Watonwan County Legislative Committee, favoring refinancing of farm mortgages and controlling inflation; to the Committee on Agriculture.

819. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, legislative board, Albany, State of New York, favoring the enactment of the Crosser bill, H.R. 4876; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

820. Also, petition of Briede & Rogovsky, Inc., wholesale tailors, Chicago, Ill., opposing the 30-hour week bill; to the Committee on Labor.

821. Also, petition of John Drzazga, of Jamaica, N.Y., favoring the 30-year retirement bill; to the Committee on Appropriations.

822. Also, petition of Young Men's Board of Trade, New York City, opposing ratification of the proposed treaty with Canada concerning the St. Lawrence seaway; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

823. Also, petition of Klein Bros., silk manufacturers, New York City, opposing House bill 3759; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

824. Also, petition of American Federation of Government Employees, Lodge No. 36, Brooklyn, N.Y., favoring optional amendment to 30-year retirement bill; to the Committee on Appropriations.

825. Also, petition of the American News Co., Inc., New York City, opposing House bill 3759; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

826. Also, petition of Parke, Davis & Co., New York City, opposing House bill 3759; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

827. Also, petition of the Baker Castor Oil Co., New York City, opposing House bill 3759; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

828. Also, petition of the National Grange, American Farm Bureau Federation, Washington, D.C., favoring the Goldsborough bills, H.R. 5073 and 5160; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

829. Also, petition of Edward Quittner, New Rochelle, N.Y., urging support of House bill 95, for an investigation of the motion-picture industry; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

830. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of the Young Men's Board of Trade, New York City, opposing the ratification of the proposed treaty with Canada concerning the St. Lawrence seaway; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

831. Also, petition of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen Legislative Board, State of New York, favoring the passage of the Crosser bill, H.R. 4876; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

832. Also, petition of Brooklyn Chapter, No. 28, Disabled American Veterans of World War, protesting against giving the President power to modify or cancel any contract unless it exempts insurance policies from the operations of its provisions; to the Committee on Appropriations.

833. Also, petition of American Federation of Government Employees, Lodge No. 36, Brooklyn, N.Y., opposing the Director of the Budget's recommendations and dictatorship, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

834. Also, petition of Parke, Davis & Co., New York City, protesting against the passage of House bill 3759; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

835. Also, petition of the Baker Castor Oil Co., New York City, protesting against the passage of House bill 3759; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

836. Also, petition of Klein Bros., New York City, opposing the passage of House bill 3759, or any similar bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

837. By Mr. HOWARD: Resolution memorializing the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States to institute prosecution against Swift & Co., Armour & Co., and Cudahy Packing Co. for violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as adopted by the House of Representatives of Nebraska; to the Committee on Agriculture.

838. By Mr. THOMASON of Texas: Petition of disabled veterans, business men, and other citizens of western Texas, transmitting resolutions adopted in regard to legislation affecting veterans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

839. By Mr. TREADWAY: Memorial of the House of Representatives of the General Court of Massachusetts, urging reasonable tariff protection for the fishing industry of the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

840. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Cecil W. Rote and other citizens of Oklahoma City, Okla., favoring compulsory retirement of all classified civil-service employees after 30 years' service; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1933

(Legislative day of Monday, May 1, 1933)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Couzens	King	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Cutting	La Follette	Russell
Bachman	Dale	Logan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	Loneragan	Shipstead
Barbour	Dill	Long	Smith
Barkley	Duffy	McAdoo	Steinwer
Black	Erickson	McCarrahan	Stephens
Bone	Fess	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Fletcher	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Bratton	Frazier	McNary	Townsend
Brown	Glass	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulkeley	Goldsborough	Murphy	Tydings
Bulow	Gore	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hale	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Capper	Hastings	Nye	Walcott
Caraway	Hatfield	Overton	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	Patterson	Wheeler
Clark	Hebert	Pittman	White
Connally	Johnson	Pope
Coolidge	Kean	Reed
Copeland	Kendrick	Reynolds

Mr. KENDRICK. I wish to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

FUNCTIONS OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION (S.DOC. NO. 53)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a report as to the functions of the Smithsonian Institution, the statutory authority therefor, and the total annual expenditures thereon, etc., also a list of employees receiving compensation at the rate of $5,000 or more per annum, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, with an illustration.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution relating to an increase in the currency of the United States through calling in all Liberty and Victory bonds

Whereas it is urgently necessary that the general price level be raised, and this can be accomplished most easily through an increase in the currency; and

Whereas this purpose can be accomplished in an effective and practical way through calling in for redemption all outstanding Liberty and Victory bonds, paying the owners with new currency secured by these bonds: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring). That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby urges the Congress of the United States to enact legislation directing the Secretary of the Treasury to call in and redeem all Liberty and Victory bonds now outstanding, paying for the same with a new currency issue which shall be secured by these bonds. In such legislation provision should be made for continuance of the sinking fund for repayment of these bonds to furnish additional security for the currency issue; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

SENADO DE PUERTO RICO.

I, Enrique González Mena, secretary of the Senate of Puerto Rico, do hereby certify that the following concurrent resolution was unanimously approved by the Senate of Puerto Rico on March 28, 1933, and by the House of Representatives on April 15, 1933:

"Concurrent resolution to request the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico in Washington to take the necessary steps so that the bill introduced by the Honorable HENRIK SHIPSTEAD in the United States Senate, entitled 'Authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to certain hospitals', be amended in the sense of making same expressly applicable to Puerto Rico

"Whereas the Honorable HENRIK SHIPSTEAD, Senator from Minnesota, has introduced in the United States Senate a bill authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to certain hospitals;

"Whereas in the present economic situation in which the hospitals of Puerto Rico find themselves, it would be highly beneficial to secure the extension to Puerto Rico of the benefits of this bill in case it should be passed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Puerto Rico (the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico concurring). To recommend to the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico in Washington that he take the necessary steps so that Senate bill No. 5251, introduced in the United States Senate by the Honorable HENRIK SHIPSTEAD, Senator from Minnesota, entitled 'A bill authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to certain hospitals', may be amended in the sense of expressly extending to Puerto Rico the benefits of such proposed legislation.

"SEC. 2. To direct, and it is hereby directed, that a certified copy of this resolution be sent to the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico in Washington, Hon. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS; to the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives of the United States; to the chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions of the Senate of the United States; to the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department, General Parker; to the President of the Senate; and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States."

For transmittal to the President of the United States Senate, Hon. John N. Garner, Washington, D.C., as provided in section 2 of said concurrent resolution, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the seal of the Senate of Puerto Rico, on this the 17th day of April A.D. 1933.

[SEAL]

ENRIQUE GONZÁLEZ MENA,
Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from C. W. King, Esq., attorney, Oklahoma Tax Commission, Oklahoma City, Okla., inclosing copy of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 3 of the Legislature of Oklahoma, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance, and the resolution of the legislature was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 3 (by Nance)

A resolution memorializing the National Congress to enact a law authorizing and empowering the several States to levy and collect license, franchise, gross revenue, registration or other forms of taxes upon or measured by capital represented by property and business employed in interstate commerce

Whereas interstate commerce has expanded to the extent that it covers every business enterprise in which internal commerce is engaged; and

Whereas such commerce has become so intermingled with the internal commerce of the several States, commonly referred to as intrastate commerce; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States is vested with supreme legislative power over commerce among States; and

Whereas interstate commerce, through a single company or corporation in many instances extends into all of the States of the Union, and the business of such company or corporation is so intermingled with internal or State commerce that the same is practically inseparable; and

Whereas the courts of last resort have ruled that in case of a State tax, other than the ordinary ad valorem tax, which substantially affects interstate commerce, or where interstate commerce is so connected and intermingled with internal commerce as to be practically inseparable, the State has no power to levy any form of special tax upon the property or business engaged in either inter- or intra-state commerce; and

Whereas the revenues of the several States are reduced and the exercise of power of taxation of property within the several States is thereby seriously impaired; and

Whereas, pursuant to the program of modern State taxation, it is the purpose to reduce ad valorem property taxation to a minimum by the application of other forms of taxation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oklahoma (the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma concurring therein). That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby requested to enact a law at the next session thereof, authorizing and empowering the several States to levy and collect license, franchise, gross revenue, registration or other forms of taxes upon or measured by capital represented by property and business employed in interstate commerce, in the same manner that such taxes may be imposed upon like property and business under the constitution and laws of the taxing State: Provided, however, That the total rates of such taxes shall not exceed the rate of taxes levied by any State upon property and business employed in internal commerce: And provided further, That such property and business be apportioned so as to include only that part of the property located and business conducted within the taxing State, and that no two States shall tax the same capital so employed, thereby avoiding double taxation; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be mailed to each Member of Congress, to the President of the United States, to the Vice President, to the Chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and to the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives.

Passed the senate the 9th day of January 1933.

Passed the house of representatives the 8th day of March 1933.

JOHN A. MACDONALD,

Acting President of the Senate.

TOM ANGLIN,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Correctly enrolled.

CLAUDE LIGGETT,

Chairman Committee on Engrossing and Enrolling.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Cragin State Bank Depositors Justice Committee, Chicago, Ill., appealing to Congress for the passage of legislation to relieve depositors in closed banks, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Dr. William H. Block, of New Orleans, La., relative to alleged acts and conduct of Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial and a letter and a telegram in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of the State of Louisiana endorsing Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, condemning attacks made upon him, and remonstrating against a senatorial investigation of his alleged acts and conduct, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Central Trades and Labor Council of Greater New York and Vicinity, New York City, protesting against the existing 15-percent reduction in the pay of Federal employees as tending to undermine the living standards of all workers, both in private and Government employ, which was ordered to lie on the table.

TARIFF DUTY ON OIL

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the legislature of my State, and ask that its title may be read and that the resolution then be referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and the title thereof was read, as follows:

A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to provide relief for the oil industry, the farmers, the unemployed, business, and the people generally by providing an adequate tariff or tax on oil that will place the domestic oil industry on a competitive basis with imported oil as shown by the reports of the Tariff Commission.

(See concurrent resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on yesterday, p. 2596, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

WACO, BEAUMONT, TRINITY & SABINE RAILWAY CO.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of Texas with reference to the Waco, Beaumont, Trinity & Sabine Railway Co.'s application for a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 29

Whereas Waco, Beaumont, Trinity & Sabine Railway Co. owns and operates two lines of railroads in east Texas, one extending from Weldon in Houston County via Trinity in Trinity County to Livingston, the county seat of Polk County, and the second, a branch line from Trinity via Groveton, the county seat of Trinity County, to Colmesneil in Tyler County, with 115 miles of main track, serving five counties in east Texas, together with numerous towns and cities; and

Whereas the operation of said railway company is essential to the economic life and prosperity of the region which it serves, with a population of about 50,000 people, and development of industrial life, which is in transition from mainly the manufacture of lumber to the greater and more important underlying resources; and

Whereas extensions of said railroads are required, namely, from Livingston to the Sabine ports of Beaumont and Port Arthur and from Weldon via Normangee to Waco, Tex., to create a new short, direct route from the Sabine ports to the interior of Texas, connecting with the various trunk-line systems heretofore constructed across the State of Texas, equalizing the position of the Sabine ports with other ports as to rates and distances and rendering the Sabine ports serviceable for the general public, which project has been approved twice heretofore by the Legislature of the State of Texas; and

Whereas as of July 12, 1927, the Interstate Commerce Commission, on the grounds stated, granted the said railway company certificates of convenience and necessity authorizing the railway company to construct said extensions, work on which was begun but now is suspended on account of the present general depression; and

Whereas in January 1932 the railway company submitted to the Congress of the United States, then having under consideration the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, its situation, and the Congress, being advised in the premises, added an amendment to the act making railroads in process of construction eligible for loans for completion of their projects; and

Whereas the Waco company has applied to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan of $5,150,000 to enable it at this time to carry out and complete its plans; and

Whereas consummation of said plans is of intense interest to the entire region between Waco and the Sabine ports; the work is calculated to give employment to several thousand people, afford a market for a large amount of material produced in the local territory, and relieve an acute situation of economic distress and difficulty; and

Whereas the plans of the railway company are sound and meritorious and if consummated under current conditions will not only enable the construction of the railroad with great economy but will contribute to the relief of current conditions and the restoration of prosperity in the section intersected and elsewhere: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives and Senate of the State of Texas, That the Legislature of the State of Texas hereby endorses and approves the application made by the railway company to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and hereby requests the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to grant and the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve the loan applied for;

Resolved further, That certified copies of this resolution be transmitted at once to the Chairman of the Board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and to the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington, D.C.

EDGAR E. WITT,

President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 29 was read and adopted by the senate March 16, 1933.

BOB BARKER,

Secretary of the Senate.

COKE S. STEVENSON,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 29 was read and adopted by the house of representatives March 17, 1933.

LOUISE SNOW PHINNEY,

Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS IN GERMANY

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point and appropriately referred resolutions, with an accompanying statement, adopted at a meeting of the Federal Bar Association of New York, Connecticut, and New Jersey, relative to persecution of the Jews in Germany.

There being no objection, the resolutions, with an accompanying statement, were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution introduced at the meeting of the Federal Bar Association of New York, Connecticut, and New Jersey, at the Hotel Commodore, on the evening of April 17, by Mr. Hugh Gordon Miller, seconded by John Eubank, Benjamin Hartstein, and others, and passed by a unanimous rising vote

Whereas it has come to our attention that many of our brother lawyers in Germany are being grievously persecuted and driven, without pretense of any process of law and with ruthless and unconscionable violence, insults, and humiliation, not only from the bench to which they were constitutionally elevated but from employment and the practice of their profession, without trial or any judicial procedure whatever. That at the same time their money is impounded and they are penalized for not keeping up their law establishments and continuing to employ their clerks and assistants, and are prevented from leaving the country and kept imprisoned in the confines of Germany, facing distress, slow starvation, and their children driven from the schools and universities, without which to many of them life is worth nothing, and in other ways treated with a cruelty and in a manner which for ruthlessness was unequaled even in medieval times and paralleled only among barbarians, on account of their race and faith; and

Whereas that race and faith (the Jewish race) has furnished many of the greatest lawyers, lawgivers, and judges of the human race, since Moses on Mount Sinai became the first great lawgiver until this day, when in our own country, among many other great offices, two of them now adorn the Supreme Court of the United States, and many of whom grace the Supreme Court in New York and New Jersey, and one of them now upholds the law as chief magistrate, the Governor of the State of New York, with great distinction, and recently others have been chief justices of England; and

Whereas it cannot, in the light of all recorded history, be claimed even as an excuse that they are dealing with a backward race: Be it

Resolved, That on account of those to a large extent officially admitted or otherwise established persecutions the Federal Bar Association of New York, Connecticut, and New Jersey, regardless of any physical atrocities (and even assuming none such has been perpetuated) extends in the name of law, culture, and science, which knows no national boundaries, to our fellow lawyers so persecuted in Germany our deepest fraternal sympathy.

Tyranny and oppression of the soul and spirit, deprivation of "liberty and the pursuit of happiness", to our profession anywhere in the world is atrocious, and has always been as important to the American lawyer as the deprivation of life. Any government or party flaunting that principle, in the judgment of American lawyers, offends the conscience of mankind and must meet with speedy and outspoken condemnation from the bar.

That our association desires to go on record as not only viewing such uncivilized and boasted conduct toward these members of our profession, whether physical or mental, with the deepest horror and condemnation but hereby express our public sympathy to them; and further that we hereby call upon all believers in human justice throughout the world to publicly condemn the indefensible course that has so far been taken toward those members of our profession, and other professions, by the present administration of the Government of Germany.

We assert that our position is the same as expressed by the British Foreign Secretary in the House of Commons on April 13 (the birthday of Thomas Jefferson, the author of the statute for Virginia for religious liberty, on which those clauses in our Federal and State Constitutions are modeled) that:

"This is not a Jewish outlook, or the outlook of a section or party. It is an Anglo-Saxon outlook.

"It would be a profound mistake for anyone to imagine the feeling in this country is limited to members of the Jewish community.

"It is a spontaneous expression of the principle of racial toleration."

Resolved, That we tender our assurance to Sir John Simon, the British Foreign Secretary, a leader of the English bar, that in those sentiments Anglo-Saxon lawyers, at any rate, stand on common ground.

We aver that this protest and appeal to what we believe to be a real German culture in the name of humanity and elementary justice, as practiced in all ages by civilized peoples, will be heeded when inflamed passions subside. That we are not concerned with the form of the German Government, and hereby affirm that our concern in this connection is merely that ordered justice may again be established by this great nation.

Knowing, nevertheless, that the present party of Hitler came into power on a platform declaring an intention to carry out such a persecution, we will not, and cannot in the name of humanity remain silent, while it is being thus put into effect, regardless of any camouflage for foreign consumption.

Resolved further, That there can be no true and actual feelings of fraternity or fraternal intercourse between the members of the Federal bar of New York, Connecticut, and New Jersey, and the bar of any nation so long as they permit or encourage the persecution of our brothers because of race or religion. That to be silent in the face of such continued, calculated, and premeditated horrors against our brothers as have shocked the world would be a betrayal of our position as upholders and ministers of justice, and make us unworthy of the heritage of our fathers; that any fraternal invitations from the bar of the United States to the bar of Germany in connection with the coming Chicago Exposition, or any other invitation to the bar of Germany which calls for fraternal intercourse, be at once recalled unless the German Government at once orders a stop to these persecutions; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President and Secretary of State of the United States, that it be called to the attention of both Houses of Congress, and that a copy of this resolution be transmitted to that great brother lawyer the British Foreign Secretary and the House of Commons with our compliments. We ask all professional and scientific bodies in America to follow suit.

A further resolution was adopted making Mr. Miller a committee to carry out the resolution.

In presenting the resolution Mr. Miller said:
"Gentlemen, no Jew suggested or had anything whatever to do with this resolution. It is a Gentile expression of outraged justice to our brothers of the Jewish race in Germany and our token of fraternal regard. Mere words mean little and the contemplation of such a thing in the twentieth century should sicken the conscience and revolt the soul of any human being not gone mad. Blind justice in this matter covering her face in horror cries out in an appeal to the court of last resort, a court which in the last analysis is final, the collective judgment of mankind which is molded to a large extent by the bar. Let this resolution be the answer, so far as this association is concerned.

"Jewish brains do not enrage their Anglo-Saxon brothers certainly in America, and apparently not in Great Britain. Thank God, Anglo-Saxon lawyers have inherited a sporting sense along with the traditions of liberty and justice."

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on today, May 2, 1933, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S.J.Res. 13) authorizing the Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, to release claims of the United States upon certain assets of the Pan American Petroleum Co, and the Richfield Oil Co. of California and others in connection with collections upon a certain judgment in favor of the United States against the Pan American Petroleum Co. heretofore duly entered.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH:

A bill (S. 1556) granting a pension to Milton Carroll Merryman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BYRNES:

A bill (S. 1557) for the relief of Harry Lee Shaw; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 1558) for the relief of the Security Trust Co., of Indianapolis, Ind.; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 1559) granting a pension to Nellie C. Manning; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 1560) granting insurance payments to Hugh H. Newell (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Finance.

RELIEF OF HOME OWNERS—AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 5240) to provide emergency relief with respect to home-mortgage indebtedness, to refinance home mortgages, to extend relief to the owners of homes occupied by them and who are unable to amortize their debt elsewhere, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, to increase the market for obligations of the United States, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

ALCOHOL MANUFACTURED FROM CORN, ETC.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 65, submitted by me on yesterday and now on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby requested to investigate, through the agencies of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Chemistry and Soils, and Agricultural Engineering of the Department of Agriculture, the practicability and advantages to agriculture of using alcohol manufactured from corn and other farm products, in motor fuel, and to report thereon to the Senate as soon as possible.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Minnesota what will be the cost of the investigation?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I can inform the Senator that the Department have the data already gathered, but it is desired to get them up here and have them referred to the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well, I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM—ARTICLE BY GEORGE W. EDWARDS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article on the proposed revision of the Federal Reserve System, by Prof. George W. Edwards, of the College of the City of New York.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTRODUCTION

The purposes of the legislation herein proposed are as follows:

1. The positive purpose is to bring about the expansion of investment credit in order to revive business activity.
2. The negative purpose is to control both the quantity and quality of such credit in order to avoid the financial evils of the period ending in 1929.

In other words the purposes are to control both deflation and inflation.

The means for attaining these purposes are as follows:

1. Extension of the powers of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve banks to control investment credit.
2. Extension of membership and facilities of the Federal Reserve System to investment institutions such as savings banks, investment banks, mortgage banks, and insurance companies.

I. Extension of powers of Federal Reserve Board and Federal Reserve banks

(1) THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD SHOULD HAVE POWER TO CONTROL THE QUANTITY OF INVESTMENT CREDIT

Reason: As the plan herein proposed provides for an expansion of investment credit, it is essential at the same time to provide for a check or control over overexpansion in the future. The Federal Reserve has not possessed sufficient power to control investment-credit inflation in the past, particularly in the period ending with the collapse in October 1929. Over these years the amount of investment in the form of new issues of stocks and bonds or new financing rose enormously and was far in excess of the amount of savings or capital accumulation. This excess of demand for capital over the supply caused the maladjustment in the capital market which finally collapsed in the fall of 1929.

The Federal Reserve through its power to raise and lower the rate of rediscount and through its open-market operations has been able to a large extent to stabilize the rates on commercial credit in the form of notes and bills. However, throughout the entire history of the Federal Reserve it has for the most part not been able to control the rates on investment credit which have fluctuated widely.

Operation: Under the above power the Federal Reserve Board would budget the capital market by closely watching the volume of new financing in relation to the amount of savings. If the volume of new issues continued to exceed the amount of savings over a long period of time, the Federal Reserve Board would then prevent further new issues until equilibrium between the demand and supply of capital had again been restored.

Precedent: This power to control the volume of investment credit was granted to the Bank of England during the war under the Defence of the Realm Act, and has since then been exercised informally. During the war the United States granted similar power to the Capital Issues Board.

(2) THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD SHOULD HAVE THE POWER TO CONTROL THE QUALITY OF INVESTMENT CREDIT

The quality of investment credit in the form of both foreign and domestic bonds became poorer and poorer in the years immediately preceding the crash of 1929. The fall in bond prices adversely affected not only individual holders of bonds but brought heavy losses to all classes of institutions holding bonds, such as commercial banks, savings banks, insurance companies, and even investment dealers themselves. In fact, the fall in bond prices was among the most important causes of the failure of most commercial banks in recent years, and for the wide-spread lack of confidence in banks by the general public. The collapse of the bond market also has made it difficult to undertake new financing. As a result of losses on bonds there is today wide-spread lack of confidence in bonds and in the entire investment system, and a discouragement of thrift. Because of his losses on securities, the investor is in revolt. As a result he has withdrawn his funds from banks, and refuses to buy any bond except United States Government obligations, and then only short-dated bonds. The result is a deflation in investment credit and a financial starving of industry.

Operation: The Board would determine the quality of investment credit by establishing minimum standards and by defining the purpose of new bond issues in the form of evidences of debt maturing over a year and sold to the public. This proposal would carry out the recommendations of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, for a "Government service for investors."

The proposed securities bill seeks to prevent the issue of fraudulent securities, but does not check the issue of securities of unsound credit. It is therefore proposed that the Board establish minimum standards of credit which must be met by any bond before it can be sold in interstate commerce.

Under the new securities bill the specific purpose of an issue must be stated. In addition, the Board should have the power to grant approval to a new issue only if it has a productive purpose.

The prospectus of every bond would contain a statement that the issue had met the minimum standards as established by the Board. Undoubtedly some issuing houses might seek to avoid this regulation by selling their bonds only within State borders. However, if the prospectus of such a local bond failed to show the certification of the Federal Reserve Board that minimum standards had been met, such a bond would meet with strong sales resistance.

Objection may be raised to this plan on the ground that it would seem to give the guarantee of the United States Government to such a bond. In answer it can be pointed out that the above plan gives no more guarantee to a bond than the application of the Pure Food and Drug Act does to any other commodity. The above plan merely certifies that at the time of issue a bond met certain minimum requirements. The plan in no way determines the price, which is a matter of bargaining between the investment house and the bond buyer.

The above plan may seem drastic and novel in character, but as a matter of fact a proposal embodying the same principle of approval of bonds by a regulatory body was suggested by so conservative and sound a banker as Paul M. Warburg in an address before the Bond Club of New York as far back as 1919 when he recommended the appointment of a voluntary committee in each Federal Reserve district, "which would be prepared to examine a prospectus before the securities are offered and would certify that certain papers necessary to authenticate the facts have been filed . . . that it is published over the signature and under the responsibility of the corporation or government issuing the securities or of the investment house offering the same . . . and that important facts have not been omitted. . . . If a committee of this character were organized, the public could soon be warned that no security should be considered unless the prospectus or offering showed the certification number of the securities committee of the district."

"Unless something of this sort be done, it is only a question of time for some grave disappointments or scandals to occur, discrediting future issues and interfering with the free and healthy development of our security markets."

A productive purpose is the best assurance that a bond will be repaid at maturity. A productive purpose for investment credit is parallel to liquidity for commercial credit. In other words, as the Board now has the power to define the eligibility of commercial paper which may be rediscounted, so it should also have the power to determine the desirability of an investment offered to the public.

At the present time the Federal Reserve Bulletin and the annual reports of the Board together with the publications of the local Federal Reserve banks disseminate valuable financial information. However, it is confined almost entirely to commercial credit, and to meet the present needs it should be widened in scope to cover investment credit. The Division of Research and Analysis of the Federal Reserve Board should undertake careful investment research and should publish the results for the benefit not only of the investor but also the banker and the officer responsible for the financial policy of his corporation. There is ample precedent for this power, since for many years the United States Department of Commerce has given out commercial credit information.

Thus in summary the Federal Reserve Board would have the control over the quantity or volume of both bonds and stocks and the determination of the quality of bonds only. Stocks, both common and preferred, should be issued without regulation as to quality except as specified in the new securities act, for it is necessary to permit freely the financing of new enterprises which involve an element of risk and which require financing by stocks of various grades.

To facilitate the Federal Reserve Board in carrying out these additional functions of controlling the quantity and the quality of investment credit, two additional organizations should be added to the Federal Reserve System. There should first be constituted a Federal advisory council for investments, similar to the present advisory council which confers with the Federal Reserve Board on the matter of commercial credit policy. This Federal advisory council on investments should be appointed in the same manner as the present advisory council for commercial credit, by the nomination of one member by each of the board of directors of the 12 Federal Reserve banks.

There should also be created a new issues committee similar to the present open-market committee of the Federal Reserve System. This new issues committee would be made up of 1 representative from each of the 12 Federal Reserve banks. This committee would take the initiative in controlling the volume of investment credit, but its decisions would require the approval of the Federal Reserve Board.

Precedent: Precedent for control of the quality of new financing is found in the Transportation Act of 1920 which confers similar powers on the Interstate Commerce Commission in the regulation of railway financing. Moreover the proposed securities act itself may provide for such control of the volume and quality of new issues. This act in its administration may be interpreted narrowly as simply a Federal blue-sky act, but it may be administered broadly to give the Federal Reserve Board power to regulate both the volume and quality of new financing.

(3) THE INVESTMENT DIVISION OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS SHOULD GRANT ADVANCES TO MEMBER BANKS ON THEIR NOTES SECURED BY THE DEPOSIT OF MINIMUM-STANDARD BONDS

Reason: Federal Reserve credit should be made available to facilitate financing not only through commercial but also through investment credit. Investment credit has become increasingly important in American corporate finance. As a result commercial banks have had less eligible paper to offer to the Federal Reserve for rediscount, while they have been increasing the amount of their bonds. The above proposal seeks to enable the member banks to obtain credit on their bonds from the Federal Reserve. A further reason for the policy of granting advances on bonds has been the increase in the listing of bonds on the New York Stock Exchange in recent years.

Operation: A member bank of the investment division of the Federal Reserve would offer its note collateralized by bonds possessing at least minimum standards and the Federal Reserve bank would grant an advance or loan for 15 days up to a certain percent of the value of the bonds. This percent would vary with the quality and marketability of the bonds. The rate on such an advance would be a penalty rate, or higher than in the case of a rediscount, and so to make such borrowing by a bank only in case of emergency.

Each Federal Reserve bank would be divided into two separate divisions, one for granting commercial credit in the form of rediscounts and the other for investment credit in the form of advances. Each division would have its own capital and the assets and reserves of each would be entirely distinct. However, both divisions of each Reserve bank would be under the same administration, and the Federal Reserve Board as the unifying force should have supervision over both activities of the revised system.

Precedent: Such advances can be granted under the Federal Reserve Act on United States Government bonds, but today they are being granted on almost any kind of asset. Most of the central banks of the world, including the Bank of England, grant such advances.

II. Extension of membership in the Federal Reserve System

(4) COMMERCIAL BANKS, MEMBERS OF THE RESERVE SYSTEM, SHOULD BE DIVIDED INTO THREE SEPARATE DEPARTMENTS, NAMELY, COMMERCIAL, INVESTMENT, AND SAVINGS

Reason: The trend toward banking integration or so-called "department-store banking" has long been in progress in this country. It has led to numerous banking evils, but at the same time in certain localities it has given communities a complete and efficient banking service. In order to retain these advantages the general principle of bank integration may be continued, but the evils of the past overcome by requiring a tight-water compartment system of separate departments or really separate banks in addition to the safeguards established by the Glass Act.

Operation: Such separation of three departments would be accomplished by separate capitalization and separate assets. Not only should the capitalization be separate, but in each case it should be adequate.

The commercial banks should be required to maintain an amount of net capital funds in proportion to their bond holdings. Under the present provisions of the Federal Reserve Act, commercial banks are required to meet definite reserve requirements in order to maintain their liquidity. However, one of the most important lessons of this depression is the fact that a bank must possess not only liquidity but also safety, or the ability of meeting losses on security holdings. The Glass bill is a move in the right direction in increasing the present minimum capital requirements for member banks. It graduates the amount of such capital by requiring a higher amount according to the size of the city in which the bank is located. A better plan would be to require that investments must not exceed a certain percent of the net capital funds (capital, surplus, and undivided profits minus amount invested in furniture, fixtures, bank building, and other real estate).

The law should prohibit the payment of dividends or the buying of any assets by a commercial bank, such as investments (and even require the immediate sale of investment holdings), until the minimum percent of net capital funds was restored.

Not only should there be a separation of capital but also a separation of assets for each department. This is particularly important for the savings department. At the present time commercial banks are permitted to receive not only commercial but also savings deposits. The law should require a segregation of these savings or thrift deposits. This recommendation was made by Mr. Joseph Broderick, banking superintendent of New York State, in his report of 1931.

The original Glass bill contained an excellent definition of thrift accounts which are defined as follows: "All deposits subject to not less than 60 days' notice before payment which are not subject to transfer by check and the total monthly balance of which in any individual case does not exceed $5,000." This definition should be reintroduced into the bill.

The funds deposited in these savings accounts should be invested only in safe and liquid assets and in bonds which meet the minimum standards as described above. Against these savings accounts the commercial banks would carry a reserve with the investment division of the Federal Reserve banks.

(5) SAVINGS BANKS SHOULD BECOME MEMBERS OF THE INVESTMENT DIVISION OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

Reason: This recommendation, as well as the following, seeks to develop a unified and complete banking system which does not at the present time exist.

Operation: This recommendation would apply to both the mutual institutions in the Northeastern States and the stock savings banks in the rest of the country. These banks would also be required to purchase, in proportion to their capitalization, an amount of Federal Reserve bank stock. Savings banks would also be required to carry a certain reserve against their deposits with the investment department of the local Federal Reserve bank. The percent of this reserve would be the same as in the case of the thrift accounts of the commercial banks.

In recent years the savings banks throughout the country have been facing a more and more pressing problem of liquidity. In realization of this problem Mr. Broderick, superintendent of banking in New York State, has very properly recommended the creation of a bank of rediscount for savings institutions within New York State. Similar facilities could be extended to all savings banks if they were included in the membership of the Federal Reserve. If the Federal Reserve banks were permitted to grant advances on the notes of member banks collateralized by bonds meeting minimum standards, such credit could be obtained by the savings banks in case of need.

(6) INVESTMENT BANKS SHOULD BECOME MEMBERS OF THE INVESTMENT DIVISION OF THE RESERVE SYSTEM

Reason: The Glass bill makes no provision for the regulation of investment banking. In fact, if the affiliates are divorced, the entire machinery of investment credit will be unsupervised. There is just as much need to supervise investment banking as commercial banking.

In the past, investment banking has been subject only to the same legal regulation as would apply to any other form of business, except for State blue-sky laws.

An investment bank would be defined as a financial institution engaged in the business of trading in securities in such manner that any of such securities are sold or offered for sale to the public. All investment banks should be required to incorporate and to possess a certain minimum paid-up unimpaired capitalization before they could sell securities in interstate commerce. These banks would then be required to purchase, in proportion to their capitalization, a certain amount of stock of the local Federal Reserve bank.

Such investment banks should be required to make reports of their inventory of these securities to the Federal Reserve bank of which they become members. This information would be kept confidential by the local Federal Reserve bank, but would be published weekly in composite form in such manner as the present reports on commercial banks. The publication of these figures would be a guide to investment bankers in determining their investment policy, and thus by self-control by the bankers themselves there would be need of regulating the quantity of investment credit by the Board only in case of threatened financial emergency. Not less than three detailed reports should be made annually on call of the Federal Reserve bank on dates to be fixed by the Federal Reserve Board. As a condition of membership such investment banks should likewise be subject to examinations made by direction of the Federal Reserve Board or of the Federal Reserve bank by examiners selected or approved by the Federal Reserve Board.

Such investment banks would be able to obtain advances on their notes collateralized by bonds which met the minimum standards.

(7) INSURANCE COMPANIES AND MORTGAGE BANKS SHOULD BECOME MEMBERS OF THE INVESTMENT DIVISION OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

Reason: At the present time these institutions are unable to obtain immediate cash without sacrificing their bonds on the market. The power to obtain advances would enable them to meet sudden demands for cash by their creditors. These advances are being granted by the Reconstruction Finance Committee today, but this function should be taken over by the Federal Reserve System.

CONCLUSION

This memorandum has so far explained in detail each specific recommendation. It is essential in an examination of these technical details of banking operation that sight is not lost of the essential purpose underlying these various recommendations. Taken separately these recommendations aim to extend the power of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve banks to control both the quantity and quality of investment credit, and to extend membership in the Federal Reserve System not only to commercial but to investment institutions as well. The above proposals also seek to protect the investor against unsound securities in the future. All these aims in themselves are important, but they in turn are only the means to the underlying object of enabling the financial system to perform its function of increasing once more the national income for all classes of society. This aim can be obtained not only by bringing about an immediate expansion of investment credit in order to revive business actively but at the same time by giving assurance that the quantity and quality of such investment credit could be controlled.

A Federal Reserve System as revised above should possess such powers of check and balance that the two ends could be attained as follows:

1. The first result should be a restoration of confidence on the part of the investor in investment bankers and new investment securities, due to the fact that the investment banker would be under Federal Government supervision and bonds would be required to meet minimum standards.

(2) This restoration of confidence should then bring out of hoarding the billions of idle dollars which have been accumulating and which have been awaiting investment ever since the fall of 1929. First the soundest and best-known utility, railroad, industrial, and municipal corporations should again be able to market their bonds. After such high-grade issues have been successfully floated, other companies less well known should in turn be able to dispose of their securities provided at all times they met the minimum standards.

(3) Such new financing should be promptly followed by definite beneficial results. In addition to the public works financed by Government credit, there would now be a vast amount of private works which would be financed by the companies able to obtain the funds in the security market. The amount of such financing which has been held back all these years is enormous. In many fields there is need of prompt and urgent renovation of the industrial plant and equipment. For in these years many technical changes have rendered the old plants obsolete and others have depreciated badly because there has been no money for maintenance. Immediately all over the country thousands of workers would be back on the job.

A further result from such new financing should be the improvement of the banks. At the present time many of these institutions are water-logged, for ever since the beginning of 1930 they have been carrying many corporations through short-time loans. These would now be funded and converted into long-term bonds sold to the public and the proceeds applied to the repayment of the loans granted to the corporations by the banks. They in turn would then be free to grant commercial credit to the merchant and business man for the financing of small-scale manufacture and retail operations.

The above plan thus proposes the financing of business revival through the expansion of private investment credit. In order to facilitate this natural expansion of private investment credit through the sale of bonds to investors, the above plan also provides for the application of reserve investment or credit to speed up such credit expansion. As explained above, the Federal Reserve banks would be given the power to grant advances to commercial banks, savings banks, investment banks, insurance companies, and mortgage companies. If in the operation of the above general plan there is need of accelerating it, the Federal Reserve banks would follow a liberal policy in granting credit. The advances could be renewed, the interest rate on such advances could be held low, and the margin between the amount of the advance and the value of the underlying collateral bonds could be reduced. In this way the volume of investment credit granted by the Reserve banks could be increased.

At the same time, the above plan provides for definite checks to such credit expansion. Conversely the rate could be raised, renewals could be reduced, and margins could be raised. But more important, the Federal Reserve Board would be able definitely to prohibit any further new financing and could apply the brakes on such expansion. In other words, the above system enables the Federal Reserve to control both inflation and deflation, which is the essential problem today.

JOHN P. ST. JOHN, OF KANSAS—TRIBUTE BY GEORGE H. HODGES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, Saturday, February 25, 1933, was the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of John P. St. John, former Governor of Kansas and subsequently nominee of the Prohibition Party for President of the United States. A memorial booklet on his life was published recently by the journalism class of Olathe High School.

A tribute was paid by ex-Governor George H. Hodges to his old friend on behalf of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

I ask unanimous consent that the tribute may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tribute was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union bespeaks the privilege of but a word of appreciation of their champion of the rights of man. This symbol (a bouquet of lillies of the valley) mutely attests their affection for the love of this man of men. Dedicating his life to the championship of woman and the enfranchisement of men from the bondage of drink, he has accomplished more for humanity than the combined efforts of any dozen men who live today.

If those mute lips could but speak, they would testify, as they have declared in the past, that his belief that a proper application of the Golden Rule would be that all women are born free and equal, as are men in every and all natural rights, and that they, like men, have every right to life, liberty, and happiness. He knew that the woman voter would purify the ballot, as she sanctifies the home, and with the dawn of Nation-wide equal suffrage the death knell would be sounded to every saloon in America.

There can be added to the efforts of the two saints, John of long ago, the vitality of the present, John P. St. John, the great apostle of prohibition. How unnecessary it would be for me to recount any special virtue—his entire being was but the vehicle of virtue. The recesses of his soul were illuminated to the world in an answer he made to an Olathe hotel man, "Why, Governor, I am obeying your order and feeding all the tramps that come along, but only about 1 out of 10 is worthy." The answer here befitted the man: "I'd rather feed 50 unworthy men than to have 1 turned away hungry."

The entreaties of men did not dissuade him, and with characteristic resolve he turned from the dominant party, spurned a seat among the councils of the Nation, and gave his life to his ideals. He knew he would be misunderstood, for the sluggish depth of the human soul is only stirred up and tossed as if by storm when a great reformer comes along and a new faith springs up and grows with supernatural energy. They scourged Christ before Pilate.

Our friend suffered the wickedness, the mockery, the lash of public bigotry and intolerance with the toleration and gentleness of the lowly Nazarene. Great men sow that others may reap. They work and plant for those who neither know the name of the doer or care in what unregarded grave his ashes shall repose. The thoughts of the past govern the laws of the present and the future.

What we may say or do, though it last not beyond the limits of a single life, is unimportant. That which shall live after we are dead as a part of the great mass of laws enacted by the dead is the only thought worth thinking, the only act worth doing.

Man is seldom accorded the privilege of seeing his life's work fruition, but our friend has gone beyond proudly conscious that that to which he had dedicated his life was finished, was completed. He took up his journey without fear and with a fortitude that will grace none more royally. Through their suffering, if suffering there may be, may our friends, as he has done, look calmly into the future with a heroism born of supreme faith in the lowly Nazarene (faith so necessary when we approach the end), trilling with our latest breath a sweet note of exultation as one who knocks on the gates of eternal morn. To have the sweeter consciousness of eternal life will mark the passing of the greatest characters we have ever known—our friends.

Each returning springtime, when the snowballs and lilacs hold high carnival, we pause and breathe a prayer above the sod and leave them free from care with God; clothed in robes immaculate, asleep 'neath a wilderness of spring flowers that fain would kiss their eyelids into waking, with ear attuned to the music of the infinite, our friend catches the celestial strain so beautifully sung by Tennyson—

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

Monuments are erected to the achievements of man, but this will be the greatest monument, the noblest heritage the world can give—the love and respect of his fellow man.

EDITORIAL FROM THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Record of April 13, 1933, not only for the purpose of showing what is contained in it but also because of the advice for the future which it gives and to show the course of events which took place following the time of the publication of the editorial.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

2+2=4

If people have no money, they cannot buy.
If people do not buy, stores cannot sell.
If stores do not sell, they cannot buy from factories.
If stores do not buy, factories cannot employ men to produce more goods.

If factories do not employ, the people have no money to buy.
The vicious circle of depression. We hope our readers do not think we are insulting their intelligence by a succession of Mother Goose truisms. But the obvious is often ignored by wise men.

All are agreed that something is wrong. In a land of plenty, honest, decent people should not suffer from want.

We have had a thousand and one remedies offered by national leaders—but all seem to ignore the obvious:

Without money, the people cannot buy.
The RECORD is much impressed by the speech of Senator LONG, of Louisiana, in the Senate Tuesday, because it states the obvious in direct, homely language that any man can understand.

The much-maligned Louisiana "Kingfish" may prove the Mother Goose that Washington needs to lead it out of involved thinking to the simple truths which will solve the present terrible situation.

In the 5 weeks of its existence, the Roosevelt administration has proven its energy and sincerity by a prodigious production of new measures to cure everything but the obvious.

When will President Roosevelt awaken to the obvious fact that without money the people cannot buy; that while he has been cleaning up weak banks he has tied up the spending money of 5,000,000 families; that he may raise the price of farm produce by his agricultural bill, but he hasn't put money into the hands of city folks to buy higher-priced foodstuffs; that by refinancing farm mortgages he strengthens insurance companies and savings banks but puts no immediate cash into the hands of families who need it; that he has done everything but attack the vicious circle of depression, which is as simple and obvious as a Mother Goose rhyme?

Meanwhile time runs against him. Unemployment increases. Purchasing power decreases. Danger of complete collapse grows more imminent. The only way out is the obvious way—to give to the people credit or currency with which to buy.

This can be done fairly, constructively, in many ways. The Government must immediately return to depositors in closed banks a major portion of their credits. It must finance the replacing of city slums with model tenements, the tunneling of the Delaware and other great rivers, billions of major construction to give work to every man who wants to work.

We still have confidence that once President Roosevelt discovers the obvious he will attack it and fight the depression as we fought the war.

But to discover the obvious he will have to turn to either HUEY LONG or Mother Goose in preference to some of his present advisers.

PROBLEMS OF OCEAN SHIPPING—ADDRESS BY ADMIRAL CONE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an interesting and admirable address by Admiral Hutch I. Cone, Chairman of the Shipping Board, delivered at the Twentieth National Foreign Trade Convention, Pittsburgh, Pa., April 28, 1933.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In its work of establishing and maintaining an adequate merchant fleet under the American flag, the Shipping Board has enjoyed the support of several large and influential organizations, all vitally interested in achieving the same objective. The American Steamship Owners' Association, the National Council of American Shipbuilders, the United States Chamber of Commerce, the National Manufacturers' Association, the Middle West Foreign Trade Committee, the Mississippi Valley Association, and the Propeller Club of the United States may be cited as examples of the type of organization to which I refer.

Prominent among these bodies is the National Foreign Trade Council, whose slogan, "Greater prosperity through greater foreign trade," clearly indicates where the council stands on the subject of American shipping. Composed of traffic and foreign-trade specialists, the council realizes—as everyone realizes who has given the matter serious thought—that our foreign commerce can be developed and handled in the most satisfactory manner only if the country possesses an efficient merchant marine. No other country has the same incentive to make a good job of it.

It has been suggested that I speak today on the subject, Problems of Ocean Shipping. In the present depressed state of international trade this is a pretty large order, for the problems are many and difficult. My only hope of covering the subject in the brief time allotted is to paint a broad picture of the situation without filling in the details.

You gentlemen are aware that the renaissance of the American merchant marine dates from the Great War, when, as part of our contribution to the cause of the Allies, we undertook the enormous task of building ships in sufficient number not only to transport and maintain an army of millions of men overseas but to replace the mounting marine losses of Great Britain, France, and Italy. You are also aware that the United States Shipping Board, in the post-war period, used the more serviceable units of this great fleet to reestablish the American flag on the world's trade routes, and that after varying vicissitudes most of the services so established were disposed of to private American purchasers. Today, with 85 percent of the vessels composing the American merchant marine in private hands, it might be thought that we have solved about all the major problems that faced the Nation in 1916 when it resolved to acquire a strong commercial fleet of its own.

But it is one thing for the Government to establish a great industry and quite another to perpetuate and safeguard it after it has been transferred to private ownership. Particularly is this true of that part of the merchant marine which operates in foreign trade—the field in which you gentlemen are especially interested. Here the American shipowner encounters a most ruthless and devastating form of competition. It is a field in which successful operation depends not so much on enterprise and skill—for all seafarers are enterprising and skillful—as on the comparative cost of equipment, labor, and supplies. Just as the Japanese artisan is able to produce electric-light bulbs at a figure with which American labor cannot compete, so the foreign shipyard produces ships at a cost that would ruin the American shipbuilder.

The foreigner's cheaper ships and lower operating costs impose on the American shipowner who engages in foreign trade a competitive handicap that would absolutely prohibit our citizens from risking their capital in ventures of this sort were it not for the fact that Congress has wisely provided certain aids designed to lower the building and operating differentials and thus make American competition possible. Without these aids our ships would either be driven from the seas or returned to the Government for operation at a cost to the taxpayer far in excess of the present subsidies.

Since our possession of a merchant marine in the foreign trade depends on the aids granted by Congress, the principal problem facing American ocean shipping today is to secure the continuance of those aids. No other problem is half so vital.

It might be supposed that in the case of an industry so necessary to the Nation's economic stability, no question would be raised as to the wisdom of continuing the aids from the Federal Treasury. But the fact remains that ever since the subventions were determined upon as essential to the carrying out of our merchant-marine policy, they have been subjected to continuous attacks both at home and abroad. Let us briefly examine the arguments of those who would abolish the subsidies to American shipping and thus in effect abolish the merchant marine itself.

Foreign opposition to our present policy of Government aids—aims granted in the form of construction loans and contracts for the carriage of ocean mails—is easy to understand if we compare the situation as it exists today with the situation that existed before the war. In the pre-war days foreigners held a stranglehold on our ocean-carrying trade, dictated freight and passenger rates, and for transporting American exports and imports enjoyed a revenue of hundreds of millions of dollars annually.

During the post-war period we have succeeded in developing our merchant marine to a point where its participation in the ocean carriage of American freight and passengers has made serious inroads in the near monopoly previously enjoyed by the foreign maritime nations. Alarmed at the trend of events, which has been rendered more acute by the slump in international trade, foreign shipowners demand that something be done about it. They profess to believe that we do not know how to operate ships; that we cannot train a sea personnel competent to hold its own with experienced foreign seamen; that our subsidies, far from being designed to make American competition possible, were deliberately intended to stifle competition; that, with world shipping already overtonnaged, we have recklessly gone ahead with an ambitious construction program; that, in short, since we lack the seamanship of our forefathers of the clipper-ship era, and can only operate our ships with Government assistance, we would do well to scrap our merchant fleet and abandon without further ado the whimsical notion of becoming a first-class maritime power.

Arguments such as these carry no weight with persons who have even a superficial knowledge of the facts. Without dignifying them by a detailed refutation, I will merely state, without fear of successful contradiction, that the present ills of shipping are not even remotely due to marine developments in the United States. They have been brought about partly by the unprecedented decline in international trade, partly by the construction of unneeded tonnage by our competitors, and partly by the failure of other maritime nations to emulate the example set by the United States in scrapping obsolescent ships. Any argument is good enough to bolster up a desperate cause, and when this country is accused by foreign propagandists of launching superfluous tonnage it becomes high time to consult the official records. What do they disclose?

The records show that during the past 10 years Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Germany, and the United States have built 2,100 ocean-going ships, each of 2,000 gross tons or over, totaling 14,000,000 gross tons. To this formidable number our own modest contribution has been less than 100 ships, of about 850,000 gross tons. Great Britain heads the list, with nearly 1,400 ships of 8,500,000 tons, outranking us in number of ships by 14 to 1 and in tonnage by 10 to 1.

In the same period the United States has led the world in breaking up cargo ships of semiobsolete types, while the total American-flag tonnage removed from registry during the past 6 months alone surpasses the scrapping activities of all other nations combined.

The real shipping surplus exists in those countries which have built up their commercial fleets to a point in excess of their own requirements. In order that this superfluous tonnage may be profitably employed, it is sent into trades properly belonging to other nations. And when—as in the case of the United States—the nation whose trade is thus invaded comes to the aid of its shipping to the extent of lowering competitive handicaps, every conceivable argument, regardless of logic or cogency, is, as I have shown, brought to bear in an endeavor to becloud the issue.

The fact that our foreign competitors view the renaissance of the American merchant marine with so much solicitude is at once a tribute and a warning. It is a tribute to the giant strides we have made since the war. It is a warning that we must be alert to defend the strategic position we have already attained on the trade routes of the world. Our competitors will enter the forthcoming world economic conference determined to launch a vigorous offensive against the American merchant marine. For months the Shipping Board has been preparing the case for American shipping.

Nearer home we encounter a more disquieting form of opposition to our present merchant marine policy. Some of our lawmakers—and a few persons not in public life—argue that the Federal expenditures so essential to the support of American shipping constitute an unnecessary drain on the Public Treasury. The efforts of the administration to balance the Federal Budget—and I take it for granted that every patriotic citizen supports that laudable endeavor—are used as an argument in justification of proposals to reexamine and revamp the national shipping policy as laid down in the Merchant Marine Acts of 1920 and 1928.

In proposals of this sort there is grave danger of becoming "pennywise and pound foolish." One is tempted to believe that Americans who seek to do away with the present subventions fail to realize the magnitude of the work already accomplished, the great financial stake involved, and the obvious fact that the Nation's future welfare depends in great measure on its commercial strength at sea.

They should be reminded that the United States, with a shore line of 15,000 miles, boasts more than 150 seaports which engage in foreign trade; that Federal, State, and municipal authorities have expended for seacoast, harbor, and channel improvements upwards of $600,000,000; that a survey recently completed for the Shipping Board by the Army engineers shows that the value of American seaport water terminals, utilized wholly for foreign trade, is nearly $1,000,000,000; that our shipyards alone represent an investment in excess of $100,000,000 and could not be replaced today at anything like that figure; and that the book value of our overseas merchant fleet has recently been estimated at $628,000,000.

Are we to abandon these superb facilities, developed at so great an expenditure of time, thought, and money, and turn the entire industry over to the foreigner? Are we to forego the $300,000,000 which in every normal year accrues to us in freight and passenger revenues through the operation of American ships? Are we to throw out of marine employment thousands of men, afloat and ashore? Are we to saddle American agriculture and industry with the handicap of increased ocean rates and occasionally disrupted service? Are we to intrust the development of our foreign markets to aliens? And finally, are we to leave the American Navy without an adequate number of effective auxiliaries for use in time of national peril?

While I yield to no man in a sincere desire to see every reasonable economy effected in governmental expenditures, I say to you gentlemen that unless we can honestly give affirmative answers to the questions I have just propounded we should dismiss as an unworthy pleasantry any suggestion that we abolish or curtail the aids granted by Congress in behalf of the American merchant marine.

Among the truths which must be faced in this time of economic dislocation is that the old days when foreign ships monopolized our ocean-carrying trade are gone, never to return. Overseas shipping may some day be rationalized on an international scale. Zones of influence may be agreed upon; trades may be apportioned among the nations; rates and charges may be standardized. In these and other ways world shipping may eventually achieve a gratifying measure of stability.

We can bring that day nearer by holding fast to what we have, with a view to further development of the fleet when prosperous times again return. Meanwhile, the amount spent annually in subsidies—approximately $19,000,000 for the fiscal year 1932—should be looked upon as an insurance premium paid to protect the vast investments which the American people have already made in American shipping, and for the promotion of foreign trade.

In conclusion, let me say that on March 20 the President of the United States appointed a new Shipping Board. As Chairman of that body, it is my pleasure to convey to you the Board's best wishes. We have a feeling that the American merchant marine needs your moral and material support, and that you in turn are not unmindful of the great help that American shipping can be to you in your efforts to blow the breath of life once more into international trade. Permit me to bespeak a closer bond of friendship between the two organizations, and to thank you for your kind attention.

LIMITATION OF HOURS OF LABOR

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent to have read for the information of the Senate an amendment which I propose to offer to House bill 4589, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, relating to the hours of labor in industry.

While this is not the exact bill which I introduced some time ago and which was passed by the Senate, it is in line with it. I expect to offer this amendment to the District bill; and if, later, the House does not have an opportunity to pass upon the bill which the Senate passed, it is my intention to offer that bill as an amendment to an appropriate bill.

I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). Without objection, the amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The following amendment is to be proposed to House bill 4589:

Insert in the proper place:

"No article or commodity shall be purchased by the United States, or any department or organization thereof, which article or commodity was produced or manufactured in any mine, factory, workshop, mill, quarry, or manufactory establishment, situated in the United States, in which any operator or worker was employed, after the enactment of this law, more than 5 days in any week or more than 6 hours in any day.

"Each contract made with a contractor for any public works shall contain a provision that the contractor will buy no article or commodity to use on or in any public work which was produced in any mine, factory, workshop, mill, quarry, or manufactory establishment in which any operator or worker was employed more than 5 days in any week or more than 6 hours in any day."

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MUSCLE SHOALS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1272) to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River, to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama; and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the pending motion is my amendment to strike out section 13 of the pending bill, found at page 14. I understand that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], in charge of the bill, proposes to perfect the section. I should be very happy to yield to him for the purpose of enabling him to perfect the section before going ahead with the motion to strike out the entire section.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have an amendment which may be considered now, or I will let it be pending, and the Senator can proceed with his remarks if he desires.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 16, at the end of line 2, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the percentages to be paid to the States of Alabama and Tennessee, as provided in this section, shall be subject to revision and change by the board, and any new rates established by the board, when approved by the President, shall remain in effect until and unless again changed by the board with the approval of the President. No change of said rates shall be made more often than once in 5 years, and no change shall be made without giving to the States of Alabama and Tennessee an opportunity to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska 2 or 3 questions respecting interpretations related to this bill. He was good enough to submit himself to questions last evening prior to the taking of the recess, but the recess came before I could make several inquiries on which I think some light is advisable.

Mr. President, I find no estimates in the report respecting the immediate expenditures that are contemplated by this bill. I wonder if the Senator could tell me, in a sentence or two, what immediate expenditures are contemplated by the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know that I can make a definite reply to the Senator. My own idea is that when the bill shall be passed the Bureau of the Budget will examine it and will submit an estimate to the Congress that will probably be incorporated in a deficiency bill this year.

The amount could vary greatly. For instance, in my opinion, one of the necessities for immediate work would be Cove Creek Dam—I am thinking now of the employment of labor—and the transmission line to it. If the bill remains as the Senate bill now stands, the probabilities are that the first thing that would be done would be the building of a transmission line. That work would be going on at the same time they would be clearing away and proceeding at the site of Cove Creek Dam. The transmission line ought to be constructed from Dam No. 2, so that in the construction of Cove Creek Dam they could have the benefit of the Government power which is now going to waste. If they do not build that transmission line at once they will have to buy power where they can get it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is there an estimate of the cost of the transmission line?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. An estimate was made several years ago, when prices were much higher than they are now, which was $6,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the estimate on the Cove Creek Dam?

Mr. NORRIS. The estimate on the Cove Creek Dam made at the same time was between $33,000,000 and $34,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So that the two immediate projects which the Senator identifies would involve roughly $40,000,000?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. But I will say to the Senator that while the entire amount estimated for the transmission ought to be appropriated, I think, yet there will be no necessity for appropriating the entire cost of the Cove Creek Dam because it is going to be 3 or 4 or perhaps 5 years before it can be built.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say that I have made some inquiry about costs and I have been informed that the costs at the present time are from 20 to 22 percent less than the estimates made several years ago, so that both items will probably cost not much over $30,000,000 at the present time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Could the new Tennessee Valley authority, under the terms of the bill, proceed without further legislation to build the transmission line and build the Cove Creek Dam?

Mr. NORRIS. They would have to have an appropriation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. They would have to have an appropriation first?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I want to ask the Senator if there is any possibility of confusion on that point in the language in section 15, on page 16, which refers to the privilege of issuing bonds? That privilege seems to attach, reading at line 19, "to the construction of any future dam or other facility." I want to know whether in the Senator's judgment that would not permit the bonding privilege to be used by the Tennessee River authority not only in connection with Cove Creek or the transmission line but any other of the facilities involved in this great project, without coming back to the Congress for any appropriation, provided it could be financed by bonds?

Mr. NORRIS. Probably; but let me tell the Senator something with reference to the bonds which are provided for. Incidentally, the bonding provision went into the bill on the suggestion of President Roosevelt. I never had incorporated such a provision in a Muscle Shoals bill before. I have some doubt, and expressed it to the President at the time, about the bonds being salable. He was thinking of the Port Authority in New York, where it worked very successfully, but there the property reconstructed all brought an income.

There is another place in the bill where it is provided that the board shall allocate the costs not only of the properties now there but of any new dam, and decide how much of it can properly be charged to navigation, flood control, power, national defense, fertilizer, and so forth. The bonds provided for in the Senate bill have to be based entirely upon the revenue feature of any improvement, which is the power feature. It would be an impossibility to do such a thing as to undertake to build Cove Creek Dam out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds. While the items of cost have not been allocated, anyone who has given any study to the question will necessarily reach the conclusion that Cove Creek Dam is in the main a flood-control navigation proposition, and I should say that the very much larger part of the expenditure will be allocated to those two items. The power feature is only an incident to it. There could be no bond issue excepting for the power part of it.

Let me say to the Senator further that I do not believe any engineer could tell definitely, until we had tried out the project, how much power will be developed at Cove Creek. The fact will be that they will have to take water enough out of that reservoir every year to leave room for the flood waters that form in the flood season of the year. I have an idea they will have to operate it several years before they will know within any definite degree how much water they can safely take out or, rather, leave in the reservoir.

As a practical proposition, considering the construction of Cove Creek Dam, I do not see how it is possible for it to be done through the issuing of bonds. If we had a dam that we were constructing there that was known to be mainly for power benefit, it would be an entirely different thing; but I would be unable myself to give the Senator a definite idea, and do not believe anybody else can give a definite idea as to just how much power we are going to develop or will be able to develop at Cove Creek. We do know that a large portion of the power that will be developed there will be secondary power, and the benefit to Cove Creek comes through navigation. The Government gets another benefit from it because when we are letting the water out in low season, decreasing the power at Cove Creek, we increase the power at Dam No. 2.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then it would be true, abstractly at least, that, insofar as the Board could find a market for bonds, it is unlimited in its right to proceed with any phase of this project?

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is a fair construction.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But there is a practical limitation to which the Senator has adverted?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and I think that really controls it. It seems to me from what I know about it that if I were going to build the Cove Creek Dam I would not think of any such thing at the present time as the issuing of any bonds, because in the first place I would have to confine the amount of the bonds to the power part of the structure which is going to bring a return in money. The bonds would be based on that. I do not believe the bonds would sell with the uncertainty that necessarily would surround that particular transaction.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If bonds are issued, the latter portion of the section then dedicates all the net proceeds from the sale of power to the payment of the bonds and the interest?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is no provision, is there, for reimbursement to the Federal Government in the power section of the $125,000,000 investment at Wilson Dam or reimbursement to the Federal Government for any of the power investments that might subsequently be made by direct appropriation?

Mr. NORRIS. No. The only provision in regard to that is the section of the bill which provides that after the expenses are paid the surplus in the hands of the board, less a sufficient amount to carry on the business, shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The only reference to rates that I find in the bill is the reference that they shall be "reasonable, just, and fair." I apprehend that contemplates the status of the consumer primarily?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator say that the rates are reasonable, just, and fair except as they comprehend also a legitimate reimbursement for the Federal investment allocatable to power in connection with the enterprise?

Mr. NORRIS. It would not be my idea that the Government ought to make a rate there that would be a gift of the power. It seems to me there are so many elements involved, with the exception of power and the possible exception that Congress might enact a law in the future levying a toll on the tonnage passing through the river, that I do not see how we could reach a conclusion that would enable us in advance to say just how much should be charged, at least until we have allocated and divided up all the costs.

If the board undertook to charge off all the expenditures for power, of course, they could not sell the power, because they would have to put it at such a price that would make it unsalable. On the other hand, in my own humble judgment, if the part allocated to power is properly apportioned and then rates were made based on that allocation, they could make a reasonable rate and make a great deal of profit. I anticipate, let me say to the Senator, that in the end, although it will be a good many years from now, we will get enough out of the power to pay the whole thing, but it will take a long time. At the present time, and for several years to come, there will be but little income from power because of the larger governmental provisions in the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is familiar with the fact that the House bill contains a sinking-fund clause with respect of each of the power dams. I am wondering why it is not advisable to establish the sinking-fund principle in regard to the Government's contribution, inasmuch as we undertake partially to establish it in respect to the bondholders' contribution. It seems to me the Federal Government, as an investor in this enterprise, is entitled to at least as much consideration as the bondholder, and probably a prior consideration. That section of the House bill, therefore, appeals to me very much. It seems to me it is supported by logic.

Mr. NORRIS. My own idea is that it is absolutely unworkable and that it would not mean anything if we put it in the bill. In the broader sense, when we comprehend the whole work to be done by the Government in the Tennessee River Basin, power is only an incident. It is an important incident, it is true, and one that in the years to come is going to bring returns; but the great bulk of the funds which are going to be expended there will not be for power and not with the idea of producing power. Power only comes in as an incident. It would be a sin, for instance, in my judgment, to build Cove Creek Dam and not provide for the development of power there, although if the Senator and I were building Cove Creek Dam and putting our own money into it and had nothing in mind except to make money, a perfectly legitimate project, we would not think of navigation and we would not care anything about flood control. We would keep the reservoir full of water all the time and there would be no benefit to navigation. There would be the same floods then that there are now, because there would be no reservoir to hold the flood waters. But the Government, having in view the benefit of navigation, having in view the prevention of destruction by flood control not only in the Tennessee River but in the Mississippi River as well, would spend public money for the purpose of making a flood-control dam there at the mouth of that great reservoir.

That is the real object that the Government has, I take it, in building that dam. The power comes in only as an incident. I could not tell the Senator now—I do not know; if I were going to reach a conclusion, it would be only a guess—as to how much of that ought to be allocated to power. After the dam has been in use 2 or 3 years it can be told with very reasonable accuracy. If I were guessing about it, I should say that of the Cove Creek Dam expenditure not more than 25 percent ought to be allocated to power. Perhaps that is too great. It may not be great enough, it is true.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his answers to my inquiries. The emphasis that he puts upon the collateral, social, industrial, and agricultural advantages to this great section of the country as a result of this legislation only illuminates completely the reason why I have submitted the motion to strike out section 13, starting on page 14 of the bill—a section which undertakes, in addition to all of these stupendous advantages, to pay in perpetuity an annual cash fee to the States of Alabama and Tennessee, a fee charged against the Treasury of the United States—in net effect, as I shall clearly show, charged against the Treasury—literally an admission fee to the States of Alabama and Tennessee before the Federal Government shall be permitted to enter these constituencies and bring these great beneficences to this area.

I think there is no morals and no logic in it. I think there is no precedent for it. So far as the general proposition is concerned, I have always proceeded in respect to these enterprises on the theory that we have no right to spend Federal funds for industrial activities or related commerce except on at least an approximate warrant of self-liquidation.

I voted for Boulder Dam upon that basis, Mr. President, and Boulder Dam self-liquidates $140,000,000 of its $165,000,000 construction cost before the States of Nevada or Arizona get a penny out of the surplus power proceeds. It was on the basis of that assurance—an assurance which is guaranteed by contracts made by the Secretary of the Interior—that I supported the Boulder Dam legislation, and it was on that basis that the legislation went through the Congress. But under this pending bill, Alabama and Tennessee do not wait for the reimbursement of the Federal Treasury before taking toll. They take toll whether Uncle Sam is repaid or not—and there is no provision in the bill that Uncle Sam shall be repaid at all.

There is a power proposition pending in connection with the St. Lawrence River to which the able senior Senator from New York (Mr. COPELAND) referred yesterday afternoon. Regardless of the merits or the demerits of the proposition itself, the fact remains that the Federal Government does not put down one stone in the power system to be developed in respect to the St. Lawrence until the Commonwealth of New York has guaranteed to pay the entire power cost and to reimburse the Government for the complete power investment. That is an utterly different contemplation from the pending draft upon the funds of the United States Treasury.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. After that has been done, who owns the power company?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The State of New York.

Mr. BLACK. Who gets the total income from it?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The State of New York. And in kindred analogy, I should love to sell Muscle Shoals to the States of Alabama and Tennessee and let them have anything they can get out of it, if they will put $125,000,000 back into the Treasury, or that portion of $125,000,000 which is reasonably allocatable to power at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator has not introduced any bill to that effect since he has been here, has he?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is entirely correct. I should be very happy to support one.

Mr. President, if unfortunately we are going to depart from the self-liquidation theory in these power enterprises, most certainly there is no reason, to my way of thinking, for a philosophy such as is contained in section 13, because under that philosophy we not only depart from the self-liquidation theory, but in addition we permit ourselves to be assessed an annual fee in return for having yielded up the self-liquidation theory.

What does section 13 do?

It proposes to pay the State of Alabama a 5-percent gross dividend—and I emphasize the word "gross"—each year from the power developed from Dam No. 2, or any present or future steam plant. It does not make any difference whether the operation shows a profit or not. It does not make any difference whether the Government breaks even on the operation. Always the first 5 percent goes to the State of Alabama; and since the Government must meet the deficit if the operation is not a fiscal success, inevitably that means that the 5 percent comes out of the Treasury of the United States under those circumstances and is a charge squarely to the taxpayers of the United States.

Alabama gets not only 5 percent of the gross in an annual dividend, regardless of whether anybody else gets a dividend, but it gets 2½-percent gross dividend on the excess power at Dam No. 2, which may come in as the result of the Cove Creek construction, and it gets 2½-percent gross on the power sales proceeds from any other dam that may be constructed under this great, wide authority. Meanwhile, the State of Tennessee in a similar bonanza gets 5 percent gross from the power proceeds at Cove Creek, for which we are about to spend thirty or forty million dollars of public money, and 5-percent gross on the power proceeds from any other dam or any other steam plant within the boundaries of the State; and then it gets 2½-percent gross from the proceeds of any excess power at Dam No. 2 as the result of the construction at Cove Creek, and 2½-percent gross from the proceeds of any other power developed at other dams within the State.

I should say, in order to make the record perfectly plain, that the sale of power to public units such as municipalities, and so forth, is excluded from the purview of the section, which is to say that those sales proceed without this tax.

The section certainly is improved by the amendment that has been submitted this afternoon by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] which permits an occasional review of these percentages and a change in them; but the basic vice and challenge stand there just the same, and I submit to the Senate that there is neither rime nor reason in any such innovation in respect to our dealings with enterprises of this nature.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. FESS. What was the determining factor in writing "gross" instead of "net" into the section? The Senator has made it perfectly clear that if it is gross it is a fixed charge, just the same as payment of interest or anything else that does not change, and if there be no profit the charge goes on; but if it were net, then there would be some security.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I understand that the theory upon which it is done is that this is in lieu of taxation; and on that theory it is assumed that since a tax is a fixed charge, regardless of profit or loss, this payment in lieu of taxation should be regardless of profit or loss. I think that is a fair statement of the matter. I am coming to that phase of the problem in just a moment.

Now, I want to reiterate that this perpetual franchise fee goes to the States of Alabama and Tennessee regardless of whether the Federal Treasury gets its money back, regardless of whether power is made and sold at a profit, regardless even of whether there is an operating deficit which would result in making these subsidies a direct drain upon the Treasury of the United States to be met by the taxpayers in all of the States of the Union.

I want to call your attention to the fact that this 5-percent proposal was not in the original Muscle Shoals bill, and there was considerable controversy as a result. In 1930 it made its appearance in the bill; and on April 4, 1930, I moved to strike it from the bill. My motion was defeated by a vote of 34 to 32. The closeness of that vote, it seems to me, justifies a resubmission of the issue to the Senate.

I realize that since 1930 the control of the Senate has passed across the aisle; but I am, nevertheless, heartened to renew this motion from the fact that among those who agreed with me in 1930, and who voted to strike this section from the bill, were such eminent gentlemen across the aisle as the Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Barkley; the Senator from Washington, Mr. Dill; the Senator from Georgia, Mr. George; the late Senator from Georgia, Mr. Harris; the Senator from Mississippi, Mr. Harrison; his colleague from Mississippi, Mr. Stephens; the Senator from Maryland, Mr. Tydings; and the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Walsh.

I want to remind you also that this clause is not in the House bill, which passed the House a short time ago by an overwhelming vote; and every Member of Congress from Alabama and Tennessee in the House of Representatives voted for the bill without the 5-percent clause in it, indicating that it is no very great reproach or crime if the Senate similarly should think of the Treasury of the United States first in passing upon this particular section of the bill.

I repeat that this 5-percent clause is a perpetual franchise fee to the States of Alabama and Tennessee. It comes ahead of interest or sinking fund on the bonds, if issued, that are to be sold to investors to carry on some of these great enterprises. Regardless of whether the bonds are liquidated, regardless of whether they earn and draw their interest, this immutable and everlasting franchise fee takes precedence, and moves into the earnings, and takes out its 5 percent. It is ahead of any reimbursements to the Treasury of the United States. It makes no difference what this adventure may cost the Treasury. We all hope, as does the Senator from Nebraska, that it will not represent an operating deficit at any time. Nevertheless, there have been operating deficits before in enterprises of this nature, and they probably will occur again. Any deficit is charged to the Public Treasury; and long before the Treasury is reimbursed—if ever—the States of Alabama and Tennessee take their 5-percent admission fee from Uncle Sam in return for his journey into that great section of this land for the purpose of taking it the greatest single benediction that it ever received!

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I assume from the Senator's attitude that he has made vigorous speeches against those laws heretofore passed since he has been here that provided money for the States of the Union where the Federal Government owns lands, and provided them money in lieu of taxation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the analogy is not accurate, because in none of those instances was the Government entering into these domains with additional public expenditures for the purpose of development.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is very badly mistaken. The Government has entered into those States, and has spent large sums of money for the building of roads, for the improvement of its public land, and frequently it has taken away the sole taxes from a county. Since the Senator has been here, he has voted for the appropriation of money in lieu of taxes for those States which have thus lost their taxes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes, Mr. President; but since the Senator has been here he has never voted for the expenditure of Federal funds in industrial activities on any such basis as the Senator from Alabama indicates, and he will not, so long as he knows what he is doing.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator draws a distinction between money spent for industrial activities and money spent to develop the land which the Government owns in the way of building highways and other improvements upon the property of the State?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly, because the Government is extending highway aid almost uniformly throughout the Nation.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; but the Government extends highway aid to the public lands in a way in which it does not extend highway aid where there are no public lands. The Government extends a limited amount of highway aid to the States proportioned upon their matching it, but it by no means builds all the roads through the States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I repeat that I am unable to see the slightest analogy in the example which my able friend from Alabama submits. In this instance the payment of this admission fee might actually force a deficit in the operation of these power plants, because if the revenue from the sale of power just balances the operating outgo, up to the point where this 5-percent admission fee is to be paid to the States of Alabama and Tennessee, obviously the payment of the admission fee forces the balance sheet into a deficit, and the deficit is charged to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The payment of money in lieu of taxes in States where there are public lands creates a deficit, which is, as the Senator says, a bonus to the States, and I might call the Senator's attention to the fact that if he will investigate he will find that this 5 percent will not begin to make up for the taxes lost by the States of Alabama and Tennessee, while in other instances the payment does.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am coming to that, and I shall have to repeat again that there is no relationship between public lands and the entry of the Government into the power business. So long as it goes in on a self-liquidating basis, and as an adjunct to other useful and necessary and legitimate public enterprises, like flood control, navigation, and so forth, I have no hesitation in going along, but I repeat that I decline to go along when the proposition is not self-liquidating; and I certainly reject any theory that we should be charged a commission upon our own largesse, and I want to amplify that thought in just a moment or two.

The Senator from Alabama has been discussing the need and the equity in some extra compensation to the States when the Federal Government enters Alabama and Tennessee for this great adventure in the development of vast areas in those Commonwealths. Let us see whether we do owe Alabama and Tennessee this perennial subsidy. We are proposing to do a very great deal for them at the expense of the balance of the country, and I am not quarreling with these collateral objectives. But I resent being charged for the privilege of thus playing Santa Claus.

The bill says in its preamble that we are undertaking this great enterprise—

For the purpose of maintaining and operating the properties now owned by the United States in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., in the interest of the national defense and for agricultural and industrial development—

I repeat that phrase—for agricultural and industrial development, and to improve navigation in the Tennessee River—

That is another thing we are proposing to do—and to control the destructive flood waters in the Tennessee River and Mississippi River Basins.

That is another thing we are proposing to do. Those are the objectives embraced within the preamble. Then when we move over into the body of the bill, to page 22, we discover that the objectives are so broad to which this great adventure is dedicated that it contemplates provision "for the general welfare of the citizens of said areas", and that general welfare a little further down on the same page contemplates the "physical, economic, and social development of said areas." We are proposing to proceed into Tennessee and Alabama for the benefit of the "physical, economic, and social development of said areas."

That is not all. The Senate committee report says, at page 2, as the Senator from Nebraska himself has so emphatically stated, that the generation of electric power, in the final analysis, is ultimately secondary to all these other great beneficences which are to be sent under Federal impulse into this section of the country, which now says that we should not enter with these beneficences unless we will pay an admission fee each year. Here are some of the things, according to the report, which we are going to do:

We are going to serve the maximum amount of flood control.

We are going to serve the maximum development of the Tennessee River for navigation.

We are going to serve the proper use of marginal lands.

We are going to serve the proper method of reforestation of such lands in said drainage basin suitable for reforestation.

We are going to serve the most practical method of improving agricultural conditions in the valleys of said drainage basin.

We are going to do all those things for this one fortunate section of the Nation. We shall do it at Federal expense. We are glad and happy to do it, but I submit we ought not to be charged an admission fee for the privilege of doing it.

Mr. President, let us turn for a moment to the House hearings on the Muscle Shoals bill, at page 61, and we will get this vision in a sentence. Representative BROWNING, of Tennessee, is testifying. Representative COCHRAN asked, referring to the power which is about to be developed:

Is there any use for all this power?

Representative BROWNING, of Tennessee, replied:

No; not at this time. There is no demand for that amount of power now, but if we develop the industrial empire down there that we hope for, there will be a use for that power.

In other words, this is a prospectus for an industrial empire, and they propose to charge us an admission fee for using Federal resources to create an industrial empire in this section of the Nation. An industrial empire!

I submit that we still have a primary responsibility to the Federal Treasury and to taxpayers everywhere. I submit that the Budget will not stay balanced, if it is balanced at all, without a continuity of vigilance, and this is one point at which we had better continue to walk sentry post.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I wonder if I understood the Senator correctly to say that he was opposed to subsidies?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is opposed to subsidies which are not either self-liquidating upon the one hand, or which are not productive of an equivalent direct advantage to the Government itself.

Mr. BONE. Last year this Government out of its Treasury gave steamship companies $28,000,000. Capitalized at 5 percent, that represents $560,000,000. That $560,000,000 goes out of the Treasury without any return; it is not self-liquidating. I assume that is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is a matter of argument.

Mr. BONE. I realize that, but if we object to subsidies, I am wondering how long we are to continue that sort of subsidy to private business enterprise; and that is a constant drain.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I think it was perhaps a necessary adventure when it was undertaken if we were to rejuvenate the American merchant marine, but I think we have come to a point where very shortly it will be necessary to look upon mail contracts, air mail contracts, and ocean mail contracts in a totally different light from that in which we have looked upon them before, if they do not very soon justify themselves as a matter of dollars and cents. But if the Senator from Washington outdoes me in his opposition to subsidies, of course, there is no question about his whole-hearted opposition to section 13 of the pending bill.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I do not want to interfere with the Senator's argument—

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is not interfering; he is very welcome.

Mr. BONE. The Senator will realize, I am sure, that one of the very common objections to public ownership of power lies in the fact that the properties are generally, under constitutional provisions, free from taxation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am coming to that, and I would prefer not to anticipate it. I shall be happy to listen to the Senator in just a moment after I have reached that phase of the problem.

Mr. President, I just want to point out this one further thought, that when Muscle Shoals was established in Alabama—

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment with reference to the subsidy feature?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. Last year we had under consideration, in connection with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, what I consider to be the greatest subsidy the Government has ever offered or ever given. That measure provided for subsidies of billions of dollars to private business. It carried subsidies which would permit and has permitted the payment of salaries of over $100,000 a year out of money borrowed from the Government. I offered an amendment to prevent at least that part of the subsidy and asked that the salaries of those drawing Government money be limited to $12,500, then that they be limited to $50,000, then that they be limited to $100,000, thinking that in some way we might save a part of the subsidy which the Government was giving out. Does the Senator recall how he voted on those amendments?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is the Senator through?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I voted for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation measure, which provides specifically within it that every dollar loaned shall be upon sound collateral, which shall return itself fullfold in the event of the failure of the loan, and if that sort of a warrant can be written into the power section of the pending bill, I shall be very happy to vote for it.

Mr. BLACK. How did the Senator vote on the subsidy to those who were borrowing Government money to run railroads, a great deal of which money most of us knew would never be repaid? The amendment offered would have prevented that which has occurred, the presidents and other officers drawing salaries in some cases of over $100,000 a year out of Government money.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the salaries of railroad presidents at a moment when I am trying to save Uncle Sam from annual assessments payable to the States of Tennessee and Alabama, which, so far as I am concerned, is utterly more incontinent than any salary I know of that was ever drawn by any railroad president. Whether railroad presidents are overpaid or not, the States of Alabama and Tennessee will be most emphatically overpaid if this particular section stays in the bill.

Now I want to renew the thought to which I was adverting when last interrupted. I want to say again that when the State of Alabama asked to have Muscle Shoals established within its confines there was not any talk then about charging the Government for the privilege of bringing this benediction into that great area of the Nation. There was no talk about an admission fee then. On the contrary, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of those other days indicates that when this dam was built in Alabama every single State officer, every member of the Alabama Legislature, every Member of Congress from Alabama, including both Senators from that State, petitioned Congress to proceed into Alabama with this development. Not only that, but the Legislature of Alabama in September 1915 authorized a joint commission, which included not only official spokesmen but many distinguished private citizens of Alabama, to come to Washington to importune the administration to proceed into Alabama with this great development. The situation is just the same now as it was then. It is just as great an advantage to a Commonwealth today as it was then to have the Federal Government enter it with its boundless resources and commit itself to great construction enterprises therein.

In fact, at this very moment there is hardly a State in the Union that is not begging for Federal funds to be used in construction projects as an offset to unemployment. I do not know of any of these situations in which the rest of us have asked for a commission for ourselves upon the very expenditure which we beg and pray to have made in behalf of our constituencies.

Tennessee is a stupendous beneficiary from this act, and I doubt very much whether anyone from Tennessee would deny it. It is a beneficiary in respect to flood control; it is a beneficiary in respect to navigation; it is a beneficiary in respect to agriculture; it is a beneficiary in respect to industrialization, because one of its own representatives testified that there is contemplated an industrial empire—that was his phrase, “an industrial empire”—as a result of this Federal benefaction. I submit that this Federal prospectus involves no justification for a perpetual cash bonus in addition, as if we were moving into Alabama and Tennessee upon some predatory or destructive mission.

Now, just briefly, as to the two excuses which are offered for the existence of this section of the bill. The first one is that it will compensate for the loss of State taxes on these properties which the States would obtain if developed under private auspices. In the first place, it is repeatedly stated in the testimony that there could and would be no such development under private auspices. In the second place, I again submit that there is compensation a hundredfold in the collateral advantages to which I have referred.

It is the theory of the bill—and if the bill shall be a success, the theory will be a success—that it is to provide cheaper power for the benefit of these great sections of the country; and if it does provide cheaper power, there is their quid pro quo, without charging a brokerage commission on the expenditure of their own Federal Government to produce these benefits for them.

The other excuse, as I understand, that is given for this section—a section, I again say, which is not in the House bill that was supported by every Member of the House of Representatives from Tennessee and Alabama—the second excuse is that it provides a tax item to offset a similar item in private utility operations.

The able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has demonstrated that a 5-percent figure is a very conservative and justified figure for the purpose of that calculation. I have no quarrel with that proposition. Furthermore I agree, as a matter of bookkeeping, that this tax item or its equivalent ought to enter the balance sheet of a public-utility operation in order to make the comparison fair; but, Mr. President, there is no requirement in this bill that the 5-percent fee shall be earned. Therefore the bookkeeping is academic, and we have no right to penalize the Public Treasury merely to create a meaningless balance sheet.

So, without further invasion on the Senate's good nature, Mr. President, I submit that the amendment to strike this offending section, which stayed in the last bill only by two votes, certainly ought to succeed at this time, in view of the benefits which, in addition to all the other benefits heretofore contained in Muscle Shoals bills for Alabama and Tennessee, are included in the pending measure.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, there are at least six reasons why I am opposed to the passage of the Muscle Shoals bill. Let me observe, at the outset and before naming them, that there is no sectionalism in those reasons. Indeed, I would not have the Federal Government invade the State of Vermont with the powers which this bill proposes to give over affairs that are strictly intrastate, and have ever been known to belong to the sovereignty of the State, for the price in money that is provided to be paid to the States of Tennessee and Alabama by the clause which is moved to be stricken from this bill by the Senator from Michigan.

The six reasons, briefly stated, are as follows: First, as an experiment the bill is untimely; second, as an investment of the people's money it comes at a time when they have no money to invest; third, any estimate of the income from the project as set up by this proposed legislation will show a loss; fourth, it put the Government into direct competition with private enterprise; fifth, additional generating equipment in this country is wholly unnecessary at the present time; and sixth, it threatens the welfare of depositors in banks and policyholders with loss through depreciation of public-utility bonds which constitute a large part of the assets of such institutions.

I propose, Mr. President, briefly to support these six reasons with evidence. As to the first reason why I am opposed to this bill, namely, that as an experiment it is untimely, let me say that there is no opportunity for debate over the question whether this is an experiment or not. It is so reported by the committee. It is stated in the report of the committee:

(4) For the operation of experimental plants on a larger scale than has ever before been undertaken in the history of the world, for the purpose of discovering new methods of production of fertilizers, with the object of cheapening the cost of fertilizers, not only to the farmers in the Tennessee Valley but everywhere in the Nation.

And the Senator from Nebraska yesterday in his explanation of the bill and argument in support of it stated:

We are trying to give the board the proper authority to carry on the greatest experiment that has ever been undertaken in the history of the world. That is what we are doing in the bill. It is for the cheapening of fertilizer.

So we are on common ground when we say that the bill is an experiment, the "greatest experiment in the history of the world"; and the claim which we make is that, with industry prostrate, with all the people of the Nation suffering from a great depression, with the burden of taxation unendurable at the present time, with a great amount of taxes wholly unpaid in this country and wholly uncollectible, it is an extremely inopportune time for the Congress of the United States to enter upon "the greatest experiment in the history of the world", which involves a very large sum of money, and, further, that it is inexpedient to do this thing at a time when the development of the art of producing fertilizer has reached the stage that it has reached today.

I call attention to a report of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, dated January 10, 1931, in which the following statement appears:

The idea persists also that the Muscle Shoals nitrogen plants are valuable as an experimental laboratory. Our committee found that "the great progress that has been made in recent years in nitrogen fixation has resulted from a widespread research in this field, both by governmental and private agencies." The consensus of opinion that it gathered was that "this progress will continue without any particular inducement or effort on the part of the Federal Government of the nature contemplated by Muscle Shoals."

Since our committee's special report on Muscle Shoals was written, the chief chemical engineer of the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils of the Department of Agriculture said at the hearings above mentioned, "I do not see the necessity of doing any research at Muscle Shoals. * * * I do not see that the equipment there is particularly useful in the program." Moreover, the head of the fertilizer and fixed-nitrogen investigations of the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils of the Department of Agriculture, who has been closely identified with nitrogen-fixation experimentation since the beginning of the war, said: "It seems to me it (Muscle Shoals) might just as well be disposed of on the best terms possible. * * * It seems to me the purposes for which it was originally built have been served."

Mr. President, there are figures and data contained in this statement which I have marked and which I should like to have printed in the Record at this point in my remarks, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The same facts which lead to the conclusion that Muscle Shoals should be disposed of by the Government, since it has no further value for national defense, apply with equal force to nitrogen as a fertilizer ingredient. Nitrogen is but 3 percent by weight of the average commercial fertilizer. Ninety-seven pounds of material in the supply of which Muscle Shoals has no special advantage must be added to these 3 pounds of nitrogen. The chemical engineer of the Department of Agriculture, quoted above, said: "My opinion is that the shortest road to cheap fertilizer is to help the manufacturer. * * * It has only been a few years since liquid ammonia cost from 30 to 35 cents a pound in cylinders. * * * Competition came along between various manufacturers, * * * and now it is reported as being sold for about 5½ cents a pound in tank cars." Asked whether sodium nitrate was manufactured for agricultural purposes at one of the large privately owned plants, he replied, "Yes, sir; they do; a trainload every day."

Ordnance experts testified that when Government operation of Muscle Shoals was planned in 1919, "ammonium sulphate was selling at $65 per ton. We estimated the Government could produce it at Muscle Shoals for $48.20 per ton. Ammonium sulphate is selling in the market today for $38 a ton."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, there are some facts bearing on the proposition that at the present time it is inexpedient to enter upon this enormous experiment found in a statement by the National Fertilizer Association of April 5, 1932, a more recent statement of facts. These facts show that there are now 205 phosphoric-acid plants in the United States connected with the fertilizer industry; that 6 of these plants are concentrated or triple superphosphate plants, producing 45 to 48 percent of the available phosphoric acid, and that for lack of demand they are practically shut down at this time.

Other statements occur in the list which I wish to have interposed at this point in my remarks, including the following:

Power waste involved: Assuming the manufacture of nitrogen by plant no. 2 as it stands and the production of phosphoric acid by an electric-furnace process plant to be built, the ultimate proposal of the bill is as follows: 40,000 tons of nitrogen, using 16,000 kilowatt-hours per ton fixed, 640,000,000 kilowatt-hours; 40,000 tons of phosphoric acid, estimating 11,500 kilowatt-hours per ton, 450,000,000 kilowatt-hours; total, 1,090,000,000 kilowatt-hours.

This represents twice the primary power now available at Wilson Dam, estimated at 438,000,000 kilowatt-hours, and slightly more than the total primary power of 1,037,000,000 that will be developed if and when Cove Creek Dam is built. The value of this power, taking the average price at present realized in Alabama of 1.2 cents per kilowatt-hour, is $13,080,000.

Would not this represent a criminal waste to bring about the production of 40,000 tons of nitrogen in a Nation that has a present capacity to produce over 600,000 tons, or 40,000 tons of phosphoric acid in the face of an existing capacity to produce over 1,000,000 tons?

For these reasons—and they are purely economic—they are nonpolitical; they are not sectional, and there is no emotion in them; they are facts, facts of economy—is it not obvious that of all times in our history, of all times during this long consideration of the Muscle Shoals legislation, no one could conceive of a poorer time to make this greatest experiment in the world's history than the immediate present time?

I ask that other portions of the statement of the National Fertilizer Association may be printed in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

1. That there are now 205 phosphoric-acid plants in the United States connected with the fertilizer industry.
  2. That 6 of these plants are concentrated or triple superphosphate plants, producing 45 to 48 percent available phosphoric acid (P<sub>2</sub>O<sub>5</sub>), and that for lack of demand they are practically shut down at this time.
  3. That 9 phosphoric-acid plants are located in Tennessee, and 21 in Alabama; that 40 are located in the adjacent State of Georgia, and 7 in Mississippi; a total of 77 phosphoric-acid plants in the Muscle Shoals region.
  4. That the available phosphate-rock deposits are located 75 miles northeast of Muscle Shoals, Ala., in Tennessee. Hence, production at Muscle Shoals would necessitate shipping 3 tons of phosphate rock from the Tennessee mines for each ton of phosphoric acid made, when it would be more economical to build a plant at the mines and transport only the power.
  5. That 3 of the 6 concentrated phosphoric-acid plants mentioned in paragraph 2 are located in Tennessee, 1 at Nashville and 2 near Columbia, from whence would be shipped the phosphate rock with which Muscle Shoals would build itself into a great phosphoric-acid manufacturing center.
  6. That superphosphate is the form in which farmers the world over prefer their phosphoric acid, and that the United States is now and for decades has been the largest producer of superphosphate in the world, having actually produced, as long ago as 1919, over 5,800,000 tons containing over 933,000 tons of available phosphoric acid.
  7. That our present total productive capacity of phosphoric acid is about 1,120,000 tons, whereas our demand in 1931 was 520,000 tons, and this year promises to be about 400,000 tons.
- In the face of such facts as these—and many others of great importance can readily be supplied—what excuse is there for the insistent proposal that direct Government or Government-subsidized private manufacture of phosphoric acid shall be undertaken at Muscle Shoals?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, as to the investment of the people's money, the proposal comes at a time when they have no money to invest. That is a premise which amounts to an axiom. It needs no proof. The only other premise necessary to point out in this syllogism is the premise of what are we stepping into for cost? How much will probably be hazarded in this adventure?

I have the pleasure and the honor to refer to an authority on this subject which is probably as sound as any authority to which we could refer, and that is the veto message of President Hoover on March 3, 1931, the message by which he vetoed a former edition of the Muscle Shoals bill. I refer to it on the point of the financial hazard of the people's money. Understand, we are dealing with other people's money and we ought to visualize this problem as if we were to go to every taxpayer in the Nation and determine whether it would be better for his welfare and the welfare of the country that the money should remain in his pocket, if he had it, to be employed in other uses than taxation, or whether it would be for the higher welfare of himself and his Nation that it should be paid out in taxation to support this enterprise. I read from page 2 of that message the summary of statistics regarding the properties and proposed extensions embraced in the projects, as follows:

The total valuation of the old property to be taken over for the power portion of the project is therefore $42,000,000 after the above deductions from original cost. The new expenditures from the Treasury applicable to the power business are estimated at $90,000,000, less $5,000,000 which might be attributable to flood control, or a total of $127,000,000 of capital in the electrical project. This sum would be further increased by accumulated interest charge during construction. As shown later on, several millions further would be required for modernizing the nitrate plants. The total requirement of new money from the Federal Treasury for the project is probably $100,000,000, even if no further extensions were undertaken.

I understand how difficult it is for a Senator in charge of a bill to answer didactically the questions which were asked of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] as to the amount of money hazard there is in the bill. I employ these figures, used by the President of the United States, in the faith that they represent probably the best information that the President could obtain at that time.

The pending bill provides for an equitable distribution, so far as possible, of the power in all the area surrounding the power project. That means not merely the establishment of transmission lines that link up the different dams and turbines on the streams, but it means the great transmission lines which reach out into the market. The cost of such lines is an important part of the consideration of whether this is a wise bill to pass at a time when the people have no money to invest. On that cost we find the following statement in the message to which I have referred:

It further provides that the policy of the Government must be to distribute the surplus power equitably amongst States, counties, and municipalities within transmission distance of Muscle Shoals and provides for the construction of transmission lines to effect this purpose. Such a transmission system for wholesale purposes only is estimated to cost $40,000,000. If it is proposed to sell power at retail to householders, then there would need be a great increase in the estimates of capital outlay and operation costs for such distribution.

Mr. President, we recognize that in this bill there is a provision for retail distribution by the corporation itself, the installation of the necessary transformers to step down the high voltage of the transmitted current, and deliver the current on its way to farms, to small enterprises, and to villages and towns, wherever they may be, all over that part of the country.

The third reason for opposition to the measure is that any estimate of the income from the project as set up by this legislation shows a loss. Referring again to President Hoover's message, we find the following on page 4:

Assuming that the whole 1,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours should be sold to municipalities or other power distributors, it would, on the basis of the realizations of the private companies of 7.2 mills, yield a gross annual income to this project of about $7,200,000, or a loss upon this basis of nearly $2,000,000 annually. This territory is now supplied with power, and to obtain such an income it would be necessary to take the customers of the present power companies. To secure these customers it would be necessary to undercut the rates now made by them. It is difficult to estimate the extent to which it would be necessary to go in such rate cutting in order to secure the business. In any event it would, of course, diminish estimated income and increase the losses.

It is obvious that any estimate of income contains a large element of conjecture, as the proportions of industrial and municipal load cannot be foretold. But any estimate of the income of the project as set up by this legislation will show a loss.

Mr. President, on studying the hearings held on a similar bill before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, a bill which contained practically the same provisions relating to manufacture and sale of power, it is discovered that there was obviously an objective by those who favored the bill to break down the rates charged to the ultimate consumer in the very territory where the plant is to be set up. It was pointed out even by those who were friendly to the measure that, even possessed as the Federal Government will be of exemption from regulation, exemption from taxation, the ability and absolute dictatorial power to fix rates and fix retail and resale rates—notwithstanding all these things, the Government would be at a disadvantage, because it would have to compete with private enterprise, which would fight for its life and reduce its rates to such a point that there would fall back upon the taxpayer the burden of sustaining that battle, and this measure would then be disclosed to be what it really is.

At a time like this when the taxes of the people are unbearable it seems to me that we should consider that an investment in the public-utility game, an adventure by the National Government in the business of producing power at the expense of the folks at home, is something that we should pause long before voting for.

I have mentioned the fact that there are private companies in that neighborhood that are already engaged in the manufacture and sale of power and in the service of that community. Against these companies the Federal Government steps forward by this bill, not as a benign government aiming to regulate and control within reasonable limitations the activities of a public utility, but the Government now steps out in an entirely new aspect and says to its citizens, "We are about to enter upon an entirely new phase. We will abandon the old constitutional position that Congress has occupied in the past and we will create a machine that we can send out into the markets, a sort of robot operated by the President of the United States, and back of him by the Congress of the United States"—a governmental agency, as this corporation is called in the bill itself. "We will send this machine out to destroy, to break down these private enterprises"—for what reason?—"because here and there over this country there are companies that have charged too much for their current; because there have been abuses in the capitalization of these companies; because these companies must earn more return than they ought to by reason of the watering of stock."

All of us have heard these reasons stated many different times and in different places. I am not undertaking to dispute the reasons, but what I do undertake to dispute is the proposition that the Federal Government should now enter into competition with private enterprise under any guise whatever, through a corporation created as this bill creates it or directly by legislation of Congress or directly by the acts of the President of the United States. Because this bill does put the Federal Government into direct competition with private enterprise, and because the promise of the bill is destructive competition, and because that competition is the most unfair thing imaginable in business I think we ought not to pass this bill.

I have made the assertion that it is unfair and that it is destructive. The reason why I have asserted that is that the United States of America and its instrumentality, this corporation—its agency, this corporation—is not subject to regulation by the States of Alabama and Tennessee and Kentucky and other States in the Union in which it does business. It is an absolute dictator; it may be a tyrant; and, because the bill contains that possibility, we ought not to pass it.

Another reason why I say it is unfair and destructive is that this corporation, this governmental agency, has a tremendous advantage over the private enterprise in respect to taxation.

Mr. President, if the bill now being considered by the Committee on Finance to levy a tax of 3 cents per kilowatt upon all electrical energy at the source were to pass—

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCARRAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the Senator say 3 cents per kilowatt?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is what the Senator said. Will the Senator from Texas kindly state what it is?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is 3 percent on the gross revenue.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator. He came in just in time.

If that bill were to be enacted and that tax levied against these private corporations that are in competition with the national organization or national agency which this bill undertakes to create, it is perfectly obvious that that tax alone would be enough to drag down those companies and to hinder them in their competition with the Government. It is obvious that if the Government is to undertake to protect its citizens in this venture, and save them from loss, it must have business; it must have customers; and it must take those customers away from the private enterprises that must pay this tax, whereas the Government does not pay the tax.

I have said that it was unfair, that it was destructive to put this agency of Government into competition with these private enterprises for another reason, and that is this:

We have forbidden any combination in restraint of trade by private enterprise. We have forbidden combinations which eliminate competition and tend to create a monopoly. We have forbidden private institutions to enter into contracts fixing the resale price of any commodity in interstate commerce. Is this a clog upon industry and business? There probably is not a Senator within the sound of my voice who does not know that it is, and has been throughout the existence of these measures. Yet the company to be created by this bill, this agency of Government, suffers under no such disability. Congress expressly invests it with full authority not only to fix its rates wholesale but to fix the price that shall be charged by any private enterprise that buys its goods at wholesale and undertakes to retail them. If that is not unfair, destructive competition, please tell me what is.

Of course, there is in this bill, there is in this project, flood control, a beneficent purpose; but the flood-control feature of this bill is the most insignificant part of it. The cost of the flood-control feature of this bill, if it were administered solely for flood control, would be but a small fraction of the burden that is being laid upon the taxpayers of the United States for another purpose; and what is it really? As we envisage the corporation created by this bill, we see a huge public-service corporation manufacturing electricity to go into the market in competition with the product of private enterprise with all these unfair advantages to enable it to destroy private competition.

For this reason I am opposed to this bill. One does not have to make the general statement that he is opposed to public ownership of public utilities to be opposed to this particular bill. One has only to visualize the possible effect of this measure and realize how much destruction is contained in its potentialities, to have a very good reason for not voting for the bill.

Mr. President, I desire to insert in my remarks at this point certain tables which show the projected effect of such a tax as that to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Effect of 3-percent tax on domestic and commercial electricity based upon 1932 revenues of all operating enterprises

Total sales of domestic and commercial service.....	$1,198,000,000
Deduct 10 percent for exemptions to customers included in above, but which the rulings of the Bureau of Internal Revenue considered "industrial", etc.....	120,000,000
Total revenues to which tax will apply.....	1,078,000,000
Tax of 3 percent on this.....	32,340,000
Less credit of 13.75 percent on Federal income tax, say.....	4,000,000
Total tax to Federal Government.....	28,340,000
Less credit on State corporation taxes, say.....	540,000
Total tax burden on enterprises.....	27,800,000

Same data if municipal systems are not included

[Private companies only]

Total sales of domestic and commercial service.....	$1,108,000,000
Deduct 10 percent as above.....	111,000,000
Total private-company revenues to which tax applies.....	997,000,000
Tax of 3 percent on this.....	29,900,000
Less credit of 13.75 percent on Federal income tax, say.....	4,000,000
Total tax to Federal Government.....	25,900,000
Less credit on State corporation taxes, say.....	540,000
Total tax burden, companies only.....	25,360,000

Effect of a 3-percent tax on gross revenues from all sales of electricity upon representative holding companies, based on 1933 operations

Holding company	Net income after preferred dividends (last available)	3-percent tax; not applicable to holding company	Tax is percent net	Effect on common-stock earnings per share
				As is	After tax
			Percent
American Gas & Electric.....	$9,184,856	$675,000	7.3	$2.17	$2.01
American W. W. & Electric.....	2,491,621	225,000	9.0	1.42	1.29
Cities Service.....	11,311,555	825,000	2.9	.30	.29
Columbia Gas & Electric.....	11,120,026	300,000	2.8	.96	.93
Commonwealth & Southern.....	3,390,437	1,165,000	34.3	.10	.6
Electric Bond & Share.....	5,132,736	335,000	6.5	.99	.92
American Power & Light.....	1,206,847	(?)	(?)	(?)	-----
Electric Power & Light.....	1,532,600	(?)	(?)	(?)	-----
National Power & Light.....	7,151,093	440,000	6.2	1.31	1.23
Engineers Public Service.....	1,692,242	245,000	14.5	.89	.76
Niagara-Hudson Power Co.....	12,196,611	635,000	5.2	1.40	1.33
North American Co.....	14,695,717	1,580,000	10.8	1.94	1.73
Standard Gas & Electric.....	3,298,504	685,000	20.8	1.52	1.20
United Corporation.....	6,358,398	635,000	10.0	.44	.40
United Gas Improvement.....	32,099,546	1,200,000	3.7	1.38	1.33
United Light & Power.....	1,500,000	550,000	36.6	.44	.28

<sup>1</sup> Deficiency.

<sup>2</sup> Preferred-stock holders bear tax.

Effect of 3-percent tax on domestic and commercial service upon group of 138 representative operating companies which are subsidiaries of large holding companies, 1932 operations

Total revenues from domestic and commercial service.....	$695,000,000
Deduct 10 percent for exemptions to customers included in above, but which the rulings of the Bureau of Internal Revenue considered "industrial", etc.....	69,500,000
Total revenues to which tax will apply.....	625,500,000
Tax 3 percent upon these revenues.....	18,765,000
Less credits against Federal income tax.. $2,580,000
Credits against State income taxes, say.. 320,000
Total deductions.....	2,900,000
Net amount paid by 138 operating companies.....	15,865,000

Of this amount:

In 2 companies bondholders pay.....	30,000
In 24 companies preferred-stock holders pay.....	1,840,000
In 112 companies common-stock holders pay.....	13,995,000

Of these payments by common-stock holders:

The general public owning common stock of these operating companies pays.....	4,520,000
Holding companies owning common stock of these operating companies pay.....	9,475,000

NOTE.—This tabulation regards Consolidated Gas Co. of New York as an operating company.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator has made a very strong statement, with special reference to the effect in competition with private enterprise that a project of this kind will have. What I am concerned about is that on the one hand the bill is lessening the ability of business to pay taxes, so that the Government can pay its expenses, and on the other hand it is definitely determined to draw from the Treasury in time more money.

I cannot get away from the idea that at this crisis, when the one thing that is necessary is the revival of business, without which there is going to be no reemployment of the unemployed, we are constantly embarrassing business, on the one hand, and thus denying to the Treasury the needed taxes, on the other, and cutting at both ends—reducing the ability of business to pay taxes, and increasing the demands for taxes by the increased expenditures. We are attacking the problem at the wrong end, and we will definitely see the results of it if there is not a change.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Ohio for his statement. Let me say that the remarks of the Senator from Ohio fit into an impression which I have had in the Senate regarding the trend of our legislation. That is, that there are two great opposing forces here, there are two great opposing interests here, and that we are trying to serve them both at the same time, which is something that it is humanly impossible to do. One of those is economy and the other is charity.

A claim made for this bill, and probably with some justice, is that it would immediately give employment to some who are now unemployed. One can grant that; one can give to the bill all the benefit and support that such an admission makes, and yet he ought not to vote for the bill, because the chief thing is the thing recognized and stated so well by the Senator from Ohio. That is, that in order to start business in this country, in order to encourage capital to come out and engage itself in the battle against depression, in order to put men at work in this country, we must place the credit of the Federal Government on a sound footing. We cannot come in here one day and pass an economy measure that tends to balance the Budget and save and restore the credit of the Nation and on the next day squander billions of money thus ripping the Budget open again, and by such a course do any constructive work in restoring confidence in this country and starting up the wheels of prosperity.

For that reason, admitting that this bill would put some men to work and some women to work, the extravagant cost of it is such at this particular time of depression that still we should not vote for it.

The fifth reason is that additional generating equipment is not necessary. I will not detain the Senate to read the material I have collected upon this subject. I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NORTH AMERICAN CO.,
New York, March 20, 1933.

Mr. H. P. WILSON,
Investment Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. WILSON: I am attaching four tables containing summary and supporting data resulting from my computations and setting forth my estimate as to the increased load in kilowatts which can be carried by the electric light and power companies of the country. The summary table (marked in pencil "no. 1") shows that the estimated maximum demand of the power plants of the country in 1932 was 16,728,500 kilowatts and that the installed capacity of these plants aggregated 33,592,500 kilowatts. Making due allowance for stand-by capacity necessary to insure continuity of service and reserve capacity necessary in case hydroelectric plants are affected by unfavorable water conditions, this installed capacity could carry a maximum demand of at least 21,491,000 kilowatts, representing an increase over the 1932 demand of 4,762,500 kilowatts, or 28.5 percent. The figures just quoted are for the total United States, and the summary table referred to contains similar figures for nine geographical divisions, the make-up of which by States is shown on a separate sheet.

Because of somewhat incomplete data for recent years, the computations underlying my estimate are rather involved. The year 1928 happens to be the only year for which there are available maximum demand figures which have been summarized by geographical divisions. These figures have been collected for 1928, 1929, and 1930, but for the last 2 years were summarized only for the entire country. The table marked in pencil as "no. 2" shows complete data by geographic divisions for the year 1928—that is, kilowatt-hours generated, kilowatt maximum demand, and kilowatt capacity, with the derived ratios of load factor (ratio between maximum load and average load), maximum demand in percent of capacity, and capacity factor (ratio of actual output to the output which would have been secured if the installed capacity had been operated 24 hours a day every day in the year). The total maximum demand shown in parentheses is the sum of the nine geographical division figures, whereas the total not in parentheses is an estimate of the simultaneous maximum demand for the entire country, referred to eastern standard time. You will note that for the country as a whole for 1928 the average load factor was 55.7 percent, and that the 1928 maximum demand was equivalent to 60.5 percent of the installed capacity, the 1928 capacity factor being 33.7 percent. The year of maximum output of the industry was 1929. The figures shown for that year in table marked in pencil "no. 3" indicate a capacity factor of 34.8 percent, or, in other words, a slightly better utilization of installed capacity than was true in 1928. The same table shows that the 1932 output as compared with the installed capacity available at the end of that year indicated an average capacity factor of only 26 percent.

Assuming that the actual load factors achieved in 1928 could be achieved now on existing capacity provided the increased load was presented to the industry—and I think that is an entirely reasonable assumption as undoubtedly the 1929 load factors were somewhat higher—the maximum demand represented by the 1932 actual output was estimated to be 16,728,500 kilowatts as shown in table 1. The next column in table 1 shows the actual capacity December 31, 1932, to which have been applied the 1928 ratios of demand to capacity, and this computation indicates that this capacity could carry at least 21,491,000 kilowatts of load. The difference between the figures in this column and the actual demand for 1932 estimated as described is shown in the seventh column of table 1 and aggregates 4,762,500 kilowatts, which figure represents the increase in load which can be carried. This increase averages 28.5 percent for the country as a whole and varies from 19.4 percent for the west northcentral geographic division to 85 percent for the mountain geographic division. The exceptionally large percentage increase in this latter division is due to the fact that the companies located in those States have suffered a more severe decline in load from their 1928 and 1929 peaks than has been suffered by companies in some of the other geographic divisions.

The attached table marked "no. 4" in pencil is in the nature of a check on the above computations, as it represents merely the 1929 generation in percent of 1932 generation and the 1932 capacity in percent of 1929 capacity. For the country as a whole the generation was 18.4 percent greater in 1929 than in 1932, indicating that such capacity as existed in 1929 had actually carried 18.4 percent more load than it carried in 1932. In the meantime, installed capacity itself in 1932 shows an increase of 13.6 percent over 1929. Adding these two percentages together results in a figure of 32 percent, which is in substantial agreement with the increase of 28.5 percent shown in the last column of table 1.

If you have any questions with respect to any of these figures or if my explanation as to their derivation is not entirely clear I shall be glad to have you get in touch with me. I am sending a carbon of this letter and these tables to Mr. Doolittle in Washington, and inasmuch as I have discussed with him my methods of computation, he is also in position to throw additional light on the derivation of these figures in case any is needed.

Very truly yours,

R. GILMAN SMITH,
Assistant Vice President.

GEOGRAPHIC DIVISIONS

New England: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island.

Middle Atlantic: New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania.

East North Central: Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin.

West North Central: Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas.

South Atlantic: Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida.

East South Central: Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi.

West South Central: Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Texas.

Mountain: Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, and Nevada.

Pacific: Washington, Oregon, and California.

Electric light and power industry in the United States

Geographical division	1932 generation	1928 load factor	Estimated 1932 maximum demand	Capacity Dec. 31, 1932	1928 ratio demand to capacity	Indicated possible maximum demand, 1932	Increased load which can be carried	Increase over 1932
	Kilowatt-hours	Percent	Kilowatts		Percent		Kilowatts	Percent
New England.....	5,241,465,000	44.2	1,353,000	2,658,600	62.6	1,664,000	311,000	23.0
Middle Atlantic.....	19,793,281,000	50.5	4,450,000	8,100,400	69.4	5,540,000	1,090,000	24.5
East North Central.....	17,819,998,000	52.0	3,910,000	8,101,400	67.4	5,460,000	1,550,000	39.6
West North Central.....	5,307,065,000	55.5	1,090,000	2,543,600	51.4	1,302,000	212,000	19.4
South Atlantic.....	8,774,596,000	47.3	2,120,000	3,999,700	64.6	2,580,000	460,000	21.7
East South Central.....	2,883,458,000	53.4	616,000	1,449,200	51.1	741,000	125,000	20.3

Electric light and power industry in the United States—Continued

Geographical division	1932 generation	1928 load factor	Estimated 1932 maximum demand	Capacity Dec. 31, 1932	1928 ratio demand to capacity	Indicated possible maximum demand, 1932	Increased load which can be carried	Increase over 1932
	Kilowatt-hours	Percent	Kilowatts		Percent		Kilowatts	Percent
West South Central.....	4,012,084,000	60.1	762,000	1,693,700	59.1	1,000,000	238,000	31.2
Mountain.....	2,335,671,000	79.0	337,500	1,098,600	56.8	624,000	286,500	86.0
Pacific.....	10,523,514,000	57.5	2,090,000	3,947,000	65.4	2,580,000	490,000	23.4
Total, United States.....	76,691,132,000	52.4	16,728,500	33,592,500	64.0	21,491,000	4,762,500	28.5

Electric light and power industry in the United States, year 1928

Geographic division	Kilowatt-hours generated	Kilowatt maximum demand	Kilowatt capacity	Load factor	Maximum demand in percent of capacity	Capacity factor
				Percent		Percent
New England.....	5,340,450,000	1,380,000	2,201,970	44.2	62.6	27.4
Middle Atlantic.....	19,458,680,000	4,392,000	6,327,783	50.5	69.4	34.8
East North Central.....	20,340,968,000	4,465,000	6,626,305	52.0	67.4	35.1
West North Central.....	4,817,706,000	990,000	1,923,358	55.5	51.4	28.6
South Atlantic.....	9,193,725,000	2,220,000	3,440,189	47.3	64.6	30.5
East South Central.....	3,055,822,000	653,000	1,278,982	53.4	51.1	27.3
West South Central.....	4,030,127,000	765,000	1,293,193	60.1	59.1	35.6
Mountain.....	3,722,889,000	537,000	945,735	79.0	56.8	45.0
Pacific.....	10,493,131,000	2,082,000	3,183,148	57.5	65.4	37.6
		(16,484,000)		(55.7)	(60.5)
Total, United States.....	80,453,498,000	16,265,000	27,220,663	56.4	59.7	33.7

Electric light and power industry in the United States

Geographic division	1929			1932
	Total capacity	Kilowatt-hours generated	Capacity factor	Total capacity	Kilowatt-hours generated	Capacity factor
	Kilowatts		Percent	Kilowatts		Percent
New England.....	2,311,871	6,016,471,000	29.7	2,658,600	5,241,465,000	22.4
Middle Atlantic.....	6,907,763	21,587,025,000	35.7	8,100,400	19,793,281,000	27.8
East North Central.....	7,438,333	22,846,684,000	35.1	8,101,400	17,819,998,000	25.0
West North Central.....	2,076,246	5,387,220,000	29.6	2,543,900	5,307,065,000	23.7
South Atlantic.....	3,520,237	10,378,505,000	33.6	3,999,700	8,774,596,000	25.0
East South Central.....	1,350,246	3,397,435,000	28.7	1,449,200	2,883,458,000	22.7
West South Central.....	1,421,938	4,887,615,000	39.2	1,693,700	4,012,084,000	27.0
Mountain.....	1,042,733	3,785,516,000	41.4	1,098,600	2,335,671,000	24.2
Pacific.....	3,489,270	11,797,957,000	38.6	3,947,000	10,523,514,000	30.4
Total, United States.....	29,558,637	90,084,428,000	34.8	33,592,500	76,691,132,000	26.0

Electric light and power industry in the United States

Geographical division	1929 kilowatt-hour generation	1929 generation in percent of 1932 generation	Capacity Dec. 31, 1929	1932 capacity in percent of 1929 capacity
		Percent		Percent
New England.....	6,016,471,000	114.8	2,311,871	115.0
Middle Atlantic.....	21,587,025,000	109.0	6,907,763	117.2
East North Central.....	22,846,684,000	128.2	7,438,333	108.9
West North Central.....	5,387,220,000	101.6	2,076,246	122.6
South Atlantic.....	10,378,505,000	118.3	3,520,237	113.6
East South Central.....	3,397,435,000	117.7	1,350,246	107.3
West South Central.....	4,887,615,000	121.8	1,421,938	119.1
Mountain.....	3,785,516,000	162.0	1,042,733	105.3
Pacific.....	11,797,957,000	112.0	3,489,270	112.7
Total, United States.....	90,084,428,000	118.4	29,558,637	113.6

Mr. AUSTIN. This material shows that the present equipment of the United States generally, throughout, is sufficient to produce much more current than the demands of this country call for at the present time, and that there is no need of any such increase or addition to the present equipment to produce electricity.

I also have some material here which shows that at the present time, right in the territory of the Muscle Shoals project, there is already generating equipment of private power plants which is in excess of the demands for power. I ask to have these things inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALABAMA POWER CO.,
Birmingham, Ala., August 20, 1931.

Hon. W. R. AUSTIN,
Burlington, Vt.

DEAR SIR: In view of statements from time to time in the public press and on the floor of Congress concerning the attitude of Alabama Power Co. toward the Muscle Shoals project, your attention as a Member of Congress is respectfully invited to the enclosed pamphlet reciting the history of past relations of the company with the Federal Government with regard to the purchase of power.

Since the completion of the Muscle Shoals hydropower plant in 1925 the company has purchased varying amounts of surplus power under a day-to-day contract in replacement of power it otherwise would have generated in its steam plants; the right to purchase power being revocable by the Government at any time. The company at all times has been willing to contract for a much greater volume of power and pay an increased price therefor if assured of reasonable notice of the cancellation of such contract. As shown in the enclosed pamphlet, dated February 10, 1931, under an offer terminable on 18 months' notice, submitted September 4, 1928, at the request of the Secretary of War, the receipts to the Government for the year 1931 would be not less than $2,200,000 instead of $595,000, the estimated amount under the present day-to-day contract.

In a recent report (S.Doc. 222, 71st Cong., 3d sess.) the Secretary of War said:

"Considering the present equipment of the properties at Muscle Shoals and the fact that all contracts must be revocable without notice in order to leave this property free for whatever action Congress may desire to take, the contracts with the Alabama Power Co. give the Government by far the highest obtainable financial return."

At present the generating equipment of the private power plants in the Muscle Shoals territory is in excess of the demands for power. The company is, however, willing to lease the power-generating plants at Muscle Shoals or buy at a fair price and on reasonable terms all power generated, or buy such surplus power as may not from time to time be used in the manufacture of fertilizer or other products, and will thus cooperate in making a success of any well-considered program for operating the nitrate plants for the benefit of agriculture and the industrial development of the Tennessee Valley.

In the event the Government continues to operate the power plants, the company feels that the Government should not also engage in the distribution of electric energy in competition with thousands of citizens who are stockholders of the company and in other privately owned power companies operating in Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Georgia. Such action on the part of the Government would be not only unfair to these investors but also would be contrary to sound governmental policy and to the regulatory and taxation policies of the surrounding States.

Very truly yours,

ALABAMA POWER CO.,
By THOS. W. MARTIN,
President.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I now come to the last reason—and I am going to make it brief—which I have stated that I have for not supporting this measure, namely, that it threatens the welfare of depositors in banks, and policyholders with loss, through depreciation of public-utility bonds, which constitute a large part of the assets of such institutions.

Too many times has it become necessary here to point out that appeals of prejudice against corporations, and attempts to defeat or promote a certain objective by shouting invectives at banks, and railroads, and insurance companies, are misguided, are not well considered. In the first place, that type of appeal ought not to be made upon consideration of legislation. In the second place, when we are talking about banks and insurance companies, we are talking about institutions which are the representatives of the people of this country. Insurance companies have promised in writing to pay to the estate of a poor man on his death, or before death to him, according to the contract, sums of money which are the product of his thrift through life. So it is with banks; they promise to pay, and they owe the duty of paying, to the frugal people of the United States, those small sums which have been collected in the banks, deposited there, and if their power to do that is destroyed, immediately the welfare of the people of the United States is destroyed.

Mr. President, is this a serious threat that is contained in this bill or is it merely a trivial ground for argument? I asked the Department of Commerce for information regarding the holdings of the bonds of public utilities, and I received this reply, a letter dated April 12, 1933, signed by O. P. Hopkins, Acting Director:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE,
Washington, April 12, 1933.

Hon. WARREN R. AUSTIN,
Senate Office Building, Room 311,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with your request, we are giving below the statistics on the investments of banks and life insurance companies in public-utility securities. These confirm the figures which were given your office over the telephone today by the Economic Research Division.

Statistics compiled by the Comptroller of the Currency indicate that the total investments of the banks in railroad and other public-service corporations as of June 1932 amounted to $4,276,059,000. The Comptroller's reports do not segregate the holdings of railroad securities. These figures are compiled annually, the latest figures being those quoted above.

The figures on investments of the life insurance companies are furnished to us by the Association of Life Insurance Presidents and cover companies having 82 percent of the admitted assets of life insurance companies. As of January 1933 these companies had investments in railroad securities of $2,638,000,000, and in other public-utility companies of $1,671,000,000, or a total investment in public utilities of $4,309,000,000.

The valuation of these securities represents the "book value" in each case, and not the market value.

O. P. HOPKINS, Acting Director.

Mr. President, I should like to insert in the RECORD at this point a table of estimates of bonds of public utilities other than railroads held by financial institutions in the United States at recent dates. This collection of statistics seems to be necessary on account of the failure of the department's records to show any classification at all.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Estimates of bonds of public utilities other than railroads held by financial institutions in the United States at recent dates

Type of institution	Date	Amount
Life insurance companies.....	Dec. 31, 1932	$1,802,705,000
National banks.....	Sept. 30, 1932	668,403,000
Banks other than national.....	June 30, 1932	444,528,000
Savings banks.....	do.....	646,614,000
Total owned by banks.....	1932	1,759,545,000
Held for trust accounts by national banks.....	June 30, 1932	277,268,000
Total controlled by banks.....	1932	12,036,813,000
Total banks and life insurance companies.....	1932	13,839,518,000

<sup>1</sup> Excluding holdings for trust accounts held by banks other than national.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is general. I want to call attention to a specific case, because this tends to illustrate how much of a threat this bill is to the policyholder.

I hold in my hand a statement of the New York Life Insurance Co. made public on February 10, 1933, as its annual statement of December 31, 1932, in which appears the heading, "The following table shows the assets of the company under various headings and the percentage of each to the total."

I am going to call attention to only two items:

State, county, and municipal bonds..... $129,486,343.11
Percent total assets..... 5.56

The second item is:

Public-utility bonds..... $147,550,734.61
Percent to total assets..... 7.47

Mr. President, I represent that that company probably is typical of all large insurance companies, and that it is apparent that the depreciation of 7.47 percent of its total assets, which logically would follow the enforcement of this bill if enacted into law, by the destruction of private enterprise, or by such a competition as would reduce it to a non-paying basis, would have to be reflected through the policies to the policyholders. As to banks, this statement which I file tends to show that banks would be similarly damaged by such injury.

Mr. President, without stating other reasons for objecting to this bill which I have, some of which are, I believe, important, I may say that for the six reasons which I have undertaken to support by evidence, I must vote against the Muscle Shoals bill.

EFFECT OF THE ECONOMY LAW

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I shall not attempt to discuss the Muscle Shoals bill at this time. Rather I beg leave to invite the attention of the Senate to the manner in which the so-called "economy law" is working out, and to bring before this body some specific cases.

Permit me to quote from the Blaine County Press of April 20 the following:

CLAREMONT, ILL.—Using a sharp butcher knife to cut his throat, Arthur C. Freeman, 59, committed suicide this morning at his home in Claremont Township. His son, Arthur, found his body about 11 o'clock this morning in his bedroom. The knife was found at his side. He had severed his jugular vein, but had not cut into his windpipe. Freeman had been despondent for several days. A Spanish-American War veteran, he was worried over the approaching loss of his pension from the new Federal regulations cutting veterans' expenditures, and feared he might lose his farm home, which he had recently purchased.

That is similar to an item appearing in the Detroit papers a little while ago, excepting that in the latter case the wife of a Spanish-American War veteran, not able to go on further after suffering the loss of the little pension they had received, took her own life.

Mr. President, my attention has just been called to a letter written by Maj. Richard F. Sortomme, United States Army, retired, from Tucson, Ariz., to Hon. James A. Freer. Permit me to quote from this communication:

Within 24 hours of the issuance of the President's Executive order three patients died at the veterans' hospital here. During the next 24 hours four more died. In addition, nine were transferred from double rooms to terminal rooms, indicating they were nearing the end. Fourteen more have suddenly taken a turn for the worse and are expected to die. One patient, when informed by his wife of the order, was reported to have said, "There appears to be no hope left, so I might as well give up fighting."

He was stated to have turned over and died within 5 minutes. Another was stated to have died within 15 minutes after being informed by his wife of the new order.

A former war nurse, reported to be suffering with TB, and living with a family out on the desert, is now said to be sinking rapidly because of worry resulting from this act. Having served overseas, it seems it was only a few years ago that she finally broke down too late to come in under even the presumptive act.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am glad to yield to my friend the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I should have been paying attention, but my attention was distracted. Is the Senator speaking on the economy bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Precisely; and mentioning some specific cases of those whom the economy bill has killed. I am glad, of course, as is the Senator from Louisiana, being conscience-free in this matter, that their blood is not on our hands.

Mr. LONG. From what is the Senator from Indiana reading?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am reading from various authorities and from various sources.

Mr. President, what I shall now read comes from the Danville Times, of Danville, Ill., of April 28:

A sorry sight in Danville is the discharged veterans from the local home here actually "panhandling" in the streets to get something to eat and a place to sleep. How will Danville take care of the approximate 1,500 who will be discharged from the local home without transportation or means of support?

Of course, the blow will fall next July 1, Mr. President, when the order goes into effect in all its cruelty and inhumanity.

Here is a letter from Harold Werber, Post 227 of the American Legion, which was sent to the Boston Post of April 10, 1933, and forwarded to me by Jeremiah Sullivan, of Dorchester, Mass. This legionnaire writes the editor of the Boston Post:

Recently in Roxbury a crowd of young men ridiculed and jeered a passing veteran in a Legion uniform. Resenting the insults, he was beaten so badly that he had to be removed to a hospital. There it was found that he was a tubercular case, resulting from gas, and had had his left arm shattered at St. Mihiel, so that self-defense was impossible.

These young men who yelled "Tin soldier!" and "Bonus hound!" at him were not entirely to blame. They, like most other citizens, have been worked into a state of mind bordering on hysteria by the truly horrible propaganda directed against the veteran. Cartoons have pictured him as an armed thug about to raid the Federal building; radiobroadcasts have been insidiously unfair, and certain organizations have so misled the public that today the average veteran is bitter and disillusioned. He has been given no voice, no day in court.

Here is a newspaper clipping, Mr. President, from the Dayton Herald of April 23, which has just come to my hands. The principal headline of the story is:

County turns down plea to transport veterans to homes. Cost becoming too much of a burden, commissioners tell association.

I will read from that in just a moment, but permit me to say, Mr. President, at this point that our national security is threatened by the folly of false economy—a false economy for which the President is responsible and which is administered by a young and untried Director of the Budget who has had a grand total of 2 months' experience in handling the financial affairs of the Nation. How amazing that our destinies should be entrusted by the President to such youthful and inexperienced hands. It would be humorous were it not for the fact that he is actually imperiling public safety.

Already hundreds of millions have been taken from the disabled veterans by a cruel law demanded by the Chief Executive, and by him made even more cruel. The Budget Bureau Director is his chief executioner. The vested rights of those who served in the Spanish-American War have been ruthlessly violated. The policy of short-sighted Budget cutting is actually jeopardizing our national existence. Our safety as a Nation depends upon our national insurance, and our national insurance is our national defense. This is being destroyed by the inexperienced Mr. Douglas.

A nation which disregards her security and safety to such an extent that she allows her Regular Army to be cut down in numbers to a figure less than that allowed Germany under the Treaty of Versailles and permits a young Budget Director to weaken the Navy and Marine Corps to a point of futility is certainly on the road to ruin.

Thanks to the supereconomists, we have a third-rate Navy, with hardly facilities for an adequate showing should an emergency demand it. This may come in the twinkling of an eye. Congress has abdicated most of its power to the President and to his Director of the Budget Bureau, but it must be remembered that, under the Constitution, it cannot abdicate its responsibility to the people. This responsibility is terrifically increased today by reason of unrest throughout the world.

I have before me a clipping from the Dayton, Ohio, Herald of April 23. I just mentioned it, and I will read more from it in a moment, but the import of this story, Mr. President, is that the veterans are being thrown out of the Government hospital in Dayton in the most cruel fashion as a direct result of the so-called "Economy Act" as administered by the youthful Mr. Douglas; and were it not for the patriotic citizens of Dayton these disabled men and women, cruelly abandoned by an ungrateful Government, would be left to starve and die. They had even been denied transportation to their homes. For this inhuman treatment the President, of course, is to blame, but, since Mr. Douglas is his willing agent, it is interesting to recall what the latter said when he was running for office last year. Then he wrote as follows from Phoenix, Ariz., under date of September 8, 1932:

Hon. R. C. STANFORD,
Ellis Building, Phoenix, Ariz.

DEAR JUDGE STANFORD: I am writing this letter to advise you fully concerning my stand on legislation in regard to the Spanish-American War veterans.

It is not now, never has been, and never will be my intention to require of the Spanish-American War veteran proof of service-connected disability. I realize that, after the lapse of all these years since the Spanish-American War, it would be impracticable if not utterly impossible for the vast majority of these veterans to prove such service connection, although it actually exists.

I have not now, nor did I ever have, any idea of disturbing any legislation concerning the Spanish-American War veterans, except those economically independent.

Trusting that this satisfactorily explains my stand in regard to the matter of special interest to you and the hundreds of other Spanish-American War veterans throughout Arizona, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

L. W. DOUGLAS.

Of course, Mr. President, he has completely repudiated his campaign pledge, and today, with President Roosevelt's sanction, requires proof of service connection for Spanish-American disabilities of 35 years ago, when everybody knows that in that day service records were practically unknown and, of course, were not kept. The average age of these veterans is nearly 60 years, and many are much older. Their treatment by the Government under the President's direction and that of Mr. Douglas is utterly cruel and inhuman. Our young Budget Director is making a travesty of the Budget, and it is being done at the direction of the Chief Executive of the Nation. The tragic part of it is that in the end the American people must suffer for the youthful indiscretions, inexperience, and experimentation of the Budget Director.

Mr. President, of course there is no occasion to magnify Mr. Douglas. I recognize he is just a tool of the President; he does what the President tells him to do; but the President cannot escape the responsibility. Rumors are going around that he goes back to the President with a $380,000,000 cut, and Mr. Roosevelt says, "That is not enough; it must be $400,000,000; go back and cut and cut and cut until you have wiped out $400,000,000", regardless of all elements of justice and mercy or of decency. Mr. Douglas goes back and cruelly cuts and cuts and cuts.

Let us see about Dayton and what is going on there. This is one thing for which the President will be remembered in history. I hope his administration succeeds in assisting the country to prosperity, and whenever I think it is right, with a whole conscience, I shall vote to help in any laudable ambition the President may have in that direction; but whether he shall succeed or not, Mr. President, he will be remembered throughout all time for this injustice, cruelty, and inhumanity to the defenders of the Nation. That is one thing, Mr. President, that we may depend upon.

As to the story from Dayton, they have disabled veterans in the hospital there. I understand that the Chief Executive has ordered, through Mr. Douglas, that the disabled veterans be thrown out. They are also going to eliminate all the branch offices, the regional offices of the Veterans' Bureau; that has been ordered; all wiped out; 54 regional bureaus in 47 States, in all but the State of Delaware, which has none. They are concentrating all those cases here in Washington, so that in the very nature of things it will be 2, 3, 4, or 5 years before the Government here in this central place can attempt to adjudicate these 2,000,000 cases. What a difficult time Members of the Congress in both Houses will have to secure justice for their constituents when that day comes—and it is just around the corner; the order has been issued. So at Dayton this is what is taking place:

Russell Schlafman is the treasurer of the Montgomery County Veterans' Association out there, it seems. One of the commissioners is John Brumbaugh. John Brumbaugh told Schlafman:

"The Government should take care of them"—

That is, the disabled veterans who are being thrown out of the hospital—

"The Government should take care of them, but it is not; and we now have 40 disabled dependent veterans in our home on East Second Street that have been turned out of the home", Schlafman retorted.

In another place in the news item it is stated:

Since April 1 the commissioners have been providing for an average of 35 veterans a day at the temporary home established at 123 East Second Street.

Further on appears this statement:

Schlafman said that many of the disabled veterans discharged from the home have service disabilities as shown by their discharge papers, but in some cases such disabilities have been disregarded entirely.

Still further along in the article:

Schlafman said that he was informed Thursday that 8 war nurses between the ages of 35 and 50, all unable to provide for themselves and 4 of whom receive medical attention, are to be discharged from the home shortly and permitted to shift for themselves.

"Three of these women who were heroines during the war, contracted tuberculosis and another has a tropical fever contracted while in the service in Panama," he said.

Mr. President, I ask that the entire article may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Dayton (Ohio) Herald, Apr. 23, 1933]

COUNTY TURNS DOWN PLEA TO TRANSPORT VETERANS TO HOMES—COST BECOMING TOO MUCH OF A BURDEN, COMMISSIONERS TELL ASSOCIATION

Request of Russell Schlafman, treasurer of the Montgomery County Veterans' Association, for transportation for 6 veterans, discharged from the soldiers' home, back to their homes, was refused Thursday by the board of county commissioners, who advised him that the county can no longer stand the growing cost of caring for veterans.

"It seems to me that there should be some way found to get the Government to take care of these veterans and provide transportation back to their homes when they are discharged," Commissioner John Brumbaugh told Schlafman.

MAKE SUGGESTION

"The Government should take care of them, but it is not, and we now have 40 disabled and dependent veterans in our home on East Second Street that have been turned out of the home," Schlafman retorted.

"You might get in touch with Congressman BYRON HARLAN and see if he won't do something about it," he added.

Since April 1 the Commissioners have been providing for an average of 35 veterans a day at the temporary home established at 123 East Second Street. Twenty-five veterans have been given transportation back to their homes by the county, and the veterans' organization has succeeded in locating friends and relatives of that many more who have provided transportation.

The organization has also been successful in getting authorities at the home to readmit a number of disabled veterans after they were discharged, by showing officials that the veterans are in need of medical attention and have no means of getting it except from the Government.

POPULATION CUT

Schlafman said that many of the disabled veterans discharged from the home have service disabilities, as shown by their discharge papers, but in some cases such disabilities have been disregarded entirely.

Since April 1, the population of the home has been reduced from approximately 5,400 to approximately 3,700, which means that 1,700 veterans have been discharged in that short period of time, in spite of the fact that the provisions of the National Economy Act do not take effect until July 1.

Officials of the home have stated that the majority of those leaving the home are on furlough and that the others are discharged because of being cured. These statements are refuted by the veterans organization which has declared that the men on furlough are on "enforced furlough", which means that they cannot return to the home until the officials permit them to re-enter, and that many of those discharged as being cured are actually in need of daily medical attention.

HAVEN FURNISHED

The haven on East Second Street is now completely furnished with cots, bedding, a cooking stove, and cooking utensils. The latest addition was received Thursday, it being a brand new electric refrigerator provided by Powell Crosley, of Cincinnati, who is a war veteran.

Schlafman said that he was informed Thursday that 8 war nurses between the ages of 35 and 50, all unable to provide for themselves, and 4 of whom receive medical attention, are to be discharged from the home shortly and permitted to shift for themselves.

"Three of these women who were heroines during the war, contracted tuberculosis, and another has a tropical fever contracted while in the service in Panama," he said.

Schlafman said that his organization intended to continue its fight against "any program that deprives disabled veterans of their just rights."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I wonder why the Senator does not take this matter up with the National Economy League. I think he is wasting time here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the Senator agree with me that the National Economy League are largely responsible for the legislation?

Mr. LONG. I think they have had it in charge. I think the Senator is wasting time to present the matter to the United States Senate. The National Economy League, financed by 15 distinguished multimillionaires, seem to have the matter in charge. I think the Senator from Indiana, instead of trying to get relief through Congress, should not waste his time here, but should go to those 15 multimillionaires who have been running the matter and see if he can achieve results there. He will not get any results here. The matter has been here. The bill was prepared here and passed here. It is strictly a matter of those multimillionaires who decided to take the soldiers off the pay roll. When the Senator knows who has the matter in charge, why mess around here with it, where it will not do any good?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I fear there is a great deal of truth in what the Senator has said. But permit me to say to the Senator that I hope to offer an amendment to the tax bill when it comes before the Senate which will deal directly with the gentlemen of the Economy League. I hope the Senator from Louisiana will assist me in having it adopted by the Senate and by the Congress and enacted into the law of the land. Then this group of individuals in the Economy League will have an opportunity to make their proper contribution to the cost of running the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senate now to the fact that this youthful Director of the Budget is asking—and of course he would not ask unless he had the approval of his chief, the President of the United States—for authority practically to destroy the armed services of the country, the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps.

In that connection I should like to read from an editorial appearing in yesterday's Washington Times, written apparently by James T. Williams, Jr.:

Owing to misdirected economy in recent years our Navy has sunk to third place among the navies of the world.

"Whether from short-sightedness, from selfish indifference, or from sentimentality," recent Congresses have whittled down our Regular Army until its combat forces now available for the defense of our homeland are actually smaller than Great Britain maintains, smaller than even Germany is permitted under the Treaty of Versailles.

Yet this is the disappearing Army and the third-rate Navy which a new and untried Director of the Budget, after less than 2 months' experience in that office, is asking from Congress dictatorial powers to demoralize and well-nigh destroy.

Before the Congress abdicates its constitutional authority and responsibility "to raise and support armies" and "to provide and maintain a Navy" and surrenders these powers to an ambitious Budget Director or to any other executive agent, surely those Senators and Representatives who take their oath of office seriously will wish "to read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest" the warning words of the great American who was quoted in that letter which the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, received at the White House the other day.

Mr. President, I ask that the entire article be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Times, May 1, 1933]

FALSE ECONOMY SAPS OUR COUNTRY'S DEFENSE

By James T. Williams, Jr.

In his mail the other morning, President Roosevelt found a letter that must have made a strong appeal to his sympathy because it contained these timely words of counsel from the writings of his illustrious kinsman and predecessor in the White House—Theodore Roosevelt:

"Neither a nation nor an individual can surrender conscience to another's keeping. Neither can a nation, which is an entity and which does not die as individuals die, refrain from taking thought for the interest of the generations that are to come, no less than for the generation of today; and no public men have a right, whether from short-sightedness, from selfish indifference, or from sentimentality, to sacrifice national interests which are vital in character.

"The United States Navy is the surest guarantor of peace which this country possesses. It is earnestly to be wished that we would profit by the teachings of history in this matter. * * * To stop building ships for 1 year means that for that year the Navy goes back instead of forward. The Navy can only attain efficiency if enough officers and men are provided.

"Again and again in the past our little Regular Army has rendered service literally vital to the country, and it may at any time have to do so in the future. Its standard of efficiency and instruction is higher now than ever in the past. But it is too small. There are not enough officers; and it is impossible to secure enough enlisted men. We should maintain in peace a fairly complete skeleton of a large Army. In particular, it is essential that we should possess a number of extra officers trained in peace to perform efficiently the duties urgently required upon the breaking out of war."

When the Great War ended, our Senators and Representatives in Congress were deeply mindful of the fact that we had entered that conflict in a deplorable state of unpreparedness. We were in the war for a whole year before we could train and equip one division of 25,000 men to engage in battle.

FORGET LESSONS OF WORLD WAR

And not until we had been in the war for a year and a half was it possible for the United States to organize and put into battle an all-American Army. Even then practically all our machine guns, artillery guns, and ammunition, airplanes, and other important equipment had to be supplied to us by French and British factories.

Throughout all that time the armed forces of France and Great Britain stood between us and the armed forces of Germany and Austria, with which we were at war.

After months of study and review of opinions of our most experienced civil and military leaders, Congress profited by the lessons of the Great War. In 1920 the National Defense Act was passed. This authorized the maintenance at all times of a Regular Army of sufficient strength to insure the timely mobilization of the citizen army and an adequate reserve of essential war munitions to tide over the time necessary to mobilize industry.

This meant the maintenance of a Regular Army of approximately 300,000 officers and men, with a war reserve of arms, equipment, ammunitions, and other supplies for a minimum combat force of a million men.

These elements were intended to supply the foundation upon which the citizen army, consisting of the National Guard and the Organized Reserves, could be mobilized in a major emergency.

Then, as we got farther away from the Great War, and began to forget its major lessons, Congress started whittling down the strength of the Regular Army by failing year after year to appropriate adequately for its maintenance.

No change was made in the National Defense Act, but by reducing annual budgets our Army was cut first to 175,000, then to 150,000, to 125,000, until today it is only about 118,000. And instead of 14,000 officers we have only 12,000.

At the end of the Great War, Congress decided that our national security required that we maintain at all times a Navy "equal to the strongest in every class of combatant ship."

We would have such a Navy today had Congress kept faith with the country and carried out its obligations under the Washington treaty, by which we sacrificed superiority on the seas for equality with the British Navy.

But Congress is again forgetting the lessons that the American people learned from the Great War. Congress is ignoring the warning words of Theodore Roosevelt. Congress is refusing, as it did before the War of 1812, before the Civil War, before the War with Spain, and before the Great War, to "profit by the teachings of history" in this vital matter of national defense.

National defense is national insurance. No prudent citizen begins his economies in a time of depression by cutting down his insurance or by letting it lapse.

NAVY HAS SUNK TO THIRD PLACE

If it be the duty of the head of a family to economize in every other direction before letting his insurance lapse, it would seem to be the imperative duty of the head servants in the Federal city of the great American family that is the household of the Nation to eliminate unnecessary expenditures in other executive departments before reducing our national insurance by cutting the combat strength of our Army and Navy.

Owing to misdirected economy in recent years, our Navy has sunk to third place among the navies of the world.

"Whether from shortsightedness, from selfish indifference, or from sentimentality," recent Congresses have whittled down our Regular Army until its combat forces now available for the defense of our homeland are actually smaller than Great Britain maintains, smaller than even Germany is permitted under the Treaty of Versailles.

Yet this is the disappearing Army and the third-rate Navy which a new and untried Director of the Budget, after less than 2 months' experience in that office, is asking from Congress dictatorial powers to demoralize and well-nigh destroy.

Before the Congress abdicates its constitutional authority and responsibility "to raise and support armies" and "to provide and maintain a Navy" and surrenders these powers to an ambitious Budget Director or to any other executive agent, surely those Senators and Representatives who take their oath of office seriously will wish "to read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest" the warning words of the great American who was quoted in that letter which the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, received at the White House the other day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But why continue? From all over the United States we are hearing of injustices wrought by the so-called "Economy Act", this infamous, utterly indefensible legislation enacted by the Senate and the body at the other end of the Capitol at the direction, aye, on the demand of the man who now is President of the United States, he himself Commander in Chief of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, and responsible for this unfair, unmerciful, unjust, cruel, and inhuman treatment of those who offered their lives for the honor, the majesty, and the flag of this great Nation, which has been admired and envied by every other power on the face of the globe.

Mr. President, while there are many other specific instances of cruelty that I might bring to the attention of the Senate, I shall not detain Members any longer, but I hope sincerely that we may at an early date undo this great wrong we have done to those who wore the uniform. This Nation never can be on the upgrade again until that legislation is wiped off the statute books, repealed, and until the Government again shows the world that the American Republic is grateful to those who have defended it in time of peril.

MUSCLE SHOALS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1272) to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River, to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama; and for other purposes.

Mr. METCALF obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Couzens	King	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Cutting	La Follette	Russell
Bachman	Dale	Logan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	Loneragan	Shipstead
Barbour	Dill	Long	Smith
Barkley	Duffy	McAdoo	Steiwer
Black	Erickson	McCarran	Stephens
Bone	Fess	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Fletcher	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Bratton	Frazier	McNary	Townsend
Brown	Glass	Metcalfe	Trammell
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Murphy	Tydings
Bulow	Gore	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hale	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Capper	Hastings	Nye	Walcott
Caraway	Hatfield	Overton	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	Patterson	Wheeler
Clark	Hebert	Pittman	White
Connally	Johnson	Pope
Coolidge	Kean	Reed
Copeland	Kendrick	Reynolds

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS and Mr. DIETERICH] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, for the past 15 years there has been before Congress the proposition of creating a permanently operated Government power and fertilizer plant at Muscle Shoals. This measure has been of great importance because it establishes the principle of government in business. In the past, the arguments in favor of Muscle Shoals have been confined largely to the theory that governmental competition with private power interests would eliminate many of the abuses on the part of these interests, the value of the project for flood control, and the possibility of increased agricultural production through cheap and efficient fertilizers.

It is now claimed that the Muscle Shoals project is an emergency measure, and that it will give employment to some 250,000 men; that it will create a miniature Utopia in the lowlands of Tennessee and Alabama. It is a fact that there is in this country some sentiment in favor of governmental operation of most forms of business which have the aspect of interstate commerce, or which are created directly out of the natural resources of the country.

In the past we have attempted governmental operation of the railroads as an emergency measure, and closed that experiment with a shameful record. The same lesson should have been learned in our experience with the United States Shipping Board, and in a measure with the more recent efforts to enter into the business of buying and selling farm products. But these were temporary expedients, if indeed we are charitable enough to call them expedients. The Muscle Shoals project is proposed for the purpose of putting the Government permanently into the business of producing and selling power and manufacturing and selling fertilizer.

It is no simple matter in ordinary times for the Congress to confine the Government to legitimate functions. It is exceptionally difficult in times like these to keep our feet on solid ground, so we may enact helpful emergency measures without causing a change in our whole national policy. We are inclined to take unusual liberties with the Constitution under the theory that that document was written to steer the Nation under normal economic and social conditions.

The Muscle Shoals project is deliberately intended to destroy business by pouring millions of dollars, torn from the people in excessive taxation, into competition with that business. We are taxing electricity in order that we may have funds to compete with those who produce electricity and we are taxing fertilizer in order to have funds to drive the fertilizer industry out of business.

One of the debated differences between the House and Senate bills is whether or not the Government will manufacture and sell fertilizer. I understand that the anticipated capacity for fertilizer production of the Muscle Shoals project is some three times all the fertilizer used in the United States in 1932. Accordingly, the Tennessee Valley Authority will be forced to increase the consumption of fertilizer by 200 percent in order that the plants may be operated at capacity. How may this be done? Only by a systematic campaign to educate the farmers in the use of this Government-produced fertilizer and by selling it at new low prices.

The first campaign will have for its intended result an increased production of basic farm commodities, particularly cotton; for it is in the cotton land that a vast percentage of fertilizer is used. But the sole purpose of the farm bill recently enacted was exactly the opposite. We have bestowed upon the Secretary of Agriculture unprecedented power to tax the people in order to reduce production of basic agricultural commodities. We have levied additional millions in taxes in order to decrease this production. We went even farther than that: We offered to reward the farmer with cash mulcted from the taxpayers for not using fertilizer. I quote the language of the bill:

Without increase in commercial fertilization per acre.

How on earth can we explain away such flagrant inconsistencies in our efforts to bring this country out of its present emergency?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. METCALF. I do not like to yield at present. It destroys the continuity of my remarks.

Mr. NORRIS. I am sure the Senator does not want to make a misstatement. He is talking about the Senate bill.

Mr. METCALF. I spoke about both of the bills, as the Senator would have noticed if he had listened carefully.

Mr. NORRIS. I have listened carefully. The Senator has not quoted from the Senate bill. There is no such language in it.

Mr. METCALF. I spoke about the House bill, and this is what I said:

One of the debated differences between the House and Senate bills is whether or not the Government will manufacture and sell fertilizer.

I am careful not to make mistakes. I do not intend to do so.

On the one hand we are taxing the people to produce more fertilizer and to encourage its use, and on the other hand we are taxing them to pay the farmer not to use it. In one bill we wage a colossal campaign to boost production, and in the other a campaign to decrease it. We are at one and the same time spending money to lessen farm products and to increase them.

It is said that this measure will give employment to thousands of men. What will become of the 25,000 workers in the fertilizer plants now operating in 36 States, and of the 100,000 who depend upon them for food and clothing? What will happen to the 12,000 citizens of Maryland, the 11,000 citizens of Georgia, the 8,000 citizens of North Carolina, and the thousands from other parts of the country who depend for a living on work in these plants? Are we going to move the 12,000 of Maryland's population to the unpopulated regions of Alabama, or are we going to rely upon the charitable inclinations of the people of that State to feed and clothe them? What about Virginia, Florida, South Carolina, and New Jersey? What about the stockholders and bondholders of the $350,000,000 fertilizer business already operating in three fourths of the States of the Union? I suppose they do not count. We are going to say to them: "Pay these new taxes to Uncle Sam so that he may make your bonds worthless, that he may close down your factories, that he may throw your workers out of jobs. Be patriotic, and help your new competitor, who is unhampered by law, untaxed on his property, who may condemn land, and whose losses are only the taxpayers' money."

One of the best-known principles of that school of thought which is supporting this measure is that there should exist free and open economic competition between the people and between the corporations of this country. We have numerous laws intended to enforce and protect this principle and to inflict penalties upon those who may violate it. But the adherents to this school are today, in proposing to inflict competition on the power and fertilizer industries, more unfair than the most flagrant case ever cited in the history of our country. If we want free and open competition, then why do we not grant to our competitors the same rights and privileges and immunities we are to use to compete with them?

This bill gives to the Tennessee Valley Authority the power of eminent domain. It will have the power to condemn land for transmission lines and power plants. It may tear down houses and excavate city streets. Why do we not grant that power to our proposed competitors?

The corporation may sell or give away products for experiment, or for sales talk. Can our competitors tax the people for this purpose? No; they must pay, and pay, and pay for this industrial promotion; and it is such promotion which has made the United States the tremendous economic power which it is today.

The Government may borrow money for 3 to 4 percent in interest and still maintain its bonds at par regardless of any losses at Muscle Shoals. Show me, if you can, a power company or a fertilizer factory with 3-percent bonds outstanding to its creditors.

The property of the Muscle Shoals corporation, being a part of the public domain, will be exempt from taxation. Are the fertilizer properties of Maryland and Georgia exempt from these levies?

Long before private industry may even anticipate a dividend a large share of the earnings must be set aside for the payment of income and corporation taxes. Will Muscle Shoals' immunity be upholding the principle of open and free competition? No! It will pay 5 percent of its gross income to Tennessee and Alabama instead.

The Tennessee Valley authority will have available for its use every branch of the Government—research experts, engineering advice, executives, and hundreds of services for which private industry must necessarily pay. Muscle Shoals will exempt itself from the jurisdiction of legally constituted public-utilities commissions in the States where it is selling power. It need consider no dividends for its stockholders or interest on its investment, for its stockholders are all the people of the United States, who, in a case like this, may expect little consideration from the taxing power.

If there ever existed an example of unfair competition, this bill is it. It reeks to high heaven with the odium of the usurpation of a Government's constitutional powers for the purpose of industrial competition with the people who furnish these powers. Every power industry or fertilizer industry, regardless of its size or the character of its charter, is really composed of the bondholders and stockholders who are its basic creditors. When we enter competition with any private industry we are entering into competition with the humblest citizen, who, by virtue of years of thrift, has managed to invest the money for which he has sacrificed in the obligations of industry in order that in his declining years he might have some assurance of the necessities of life. To destroy these bonds or to destroy this stock is to my mind one of the most cruel and unprincipled acts which a government might take. Not only does it scent of Communism, but it is characterized by the cruel and destructive stroke always prevalent when a government makes a violent change in its fundamental nature.

I venture that if we should give to any private industry, regardless of its size or nature, one half the rights and privileges and immunities and exemptions which we are paternally bestowing upon Muscle Shoals, that no Government-operated industry would last 6 weeks in competition with it. We are exempting the Tennessee Valley authority from a great portion of the basic costs which necessarily must characterize any private enterprise.

That is not all. We are assenting to a method of accountancy that would be an insult to Insull. The Tennessee Valley authority may charge off all sorts of losses to flood control, navigation, and research. Much of its expenditure may be for the traditional bugaboo of "relief to agriculture." I think no mathematician in this country would care to wrangle with the formulas of accountancy which may be used to show a profit on this project. And there can be no collapse such as followed the high accountancy of Krueger, for the taxpayers will continue to pay and the corporation will continue to waste. But, disregarding the odious principle of Government in business, we surely should have been convinced by now that this proposition is uneconomical and unsound.

Consider the report of Col. M. C. Tyler, which resulted from the most complete study of a river project in the history of hydroelectric power. Colonel Tyler shows that the Cove Creek Dam and power station would cost in excess of $34,000,000. That is exclusive of navigation works. This plant would be equivalent to a steam plant, with an estimated cost of $70 per kilowatt, or approximately $10,000,000. Assuming fixed charges of 10.5 percent for the steam plant and 8.5 percent for the water power, he shows that the Cove Creek project would cost almost exactly twice as much as the value of its power would warrant. Even this unfavorable comparison depends upon the assumption that there would be a sale for over 400,000,000 kilowatt-hours.

Furthermore, the estimated cost of construction does not include transmission lines to the markets for electrical energy. That is, indeed, if there will be a market. The Government, of course, may be able to sell this power much cheaper than the power plants now operating in that section because of the numerous reasons I have already mentioned. But even if the Government cut the rate 20 percent below the private public utilities, Colonel Tyler estimates that over a period of 15 years the customers of the Government would be saved less than $18,000,000, while, at the same time, the Government would suffer a deficiency in excess of $39,000,000.

How will this tremendous loss be justified? How on earth can we justify taking a decent living from the soldiers who suffered on the battlefields of France and pour it into the mudholes of Tennessee? The only way in which the Tennessee Valley authority will be able to make this Frankenstein assume the appearance of economic decency is by juggling the various ledgers of navigation, flood control, farm relief, and power until the abstract and immeasurable values have assumed much of the burden of cost. As a consequence, an already overtaxed people will go down into their pockets and pay a tremendous sum to establish a principle of Government ownership in this country, and the only concrete result will be the destruction of the investments of some private industry and another proof of the futility of a communistic experiment on the part of a democratic Government.

O Shade of Jefferson, where were you that day
When Muscle Shoals was built to stay?

It might be good judgment for this Government to endow a project of this kind under opposite circumstances. If the Congress could hear a crying need for additional farm produce, and there existed no reasonable means of securing fertilizer; or if such fertilizer had to be imported; if the people of Tennessee and Alabama were without electricity, or if their homes were in constant danger of floods; if there were no means of economical transportation other than the Tennessee River, then we might be justified in giving consideration to a bill of this kind. But the reverse is true. We are suffering from a surplus of farm products and are planning to pay our farmers to use less fertilizer. The region to be served is already honeycombed with electric transmission lines. Seven major power companies operate within 200 miles of Muscle Shoals. The annual power production has been increased from 2,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours in 1920 to nearly 5,000,000,000 in 1932. The residents of these States and of other States own a total of $371,000,000 in bonds and preferred stock of the five major companies. The generating stations and transmission lines have a good record for dependability of service at each important load center. The cost of this service will make a fair and reasonable comparison with the city-owned plants of the United States.

This region already is being served adequately with electric power, and there being no necessity for fertilizer production, the only other direct use of the Muscle Shoals project will be the improvement to navigation. A glance at a railroad map of this region should demonstrate to the satisfaction of any reasonable person that rail facilities are excellent. If the Tennessee Valley authority should be successful in diverting much of the tonnage from the rails to the Tennessee River, the only possible result will be an enormous loss to the railroads now serving that section. The authority would simply push the railroads over the brink of bankruptcy and complete the deflation of rail bonds and stocks. What sort of transportation service could the communities of the whole region expect if we should remove the principal mainstay for their railroads? Even at best, the tonnage using the Tennessee River would be comparatively light, as the only city of any size situated so as to profitably use the river for transportation purposes is the city of Chattanooga, already adequately served by railroads which are fighting for their very existence.

It is ridiculous for us to attach importance to the Tennessee River for the purpose of transportation. It is enlightening to know that hardly any of the commodities produced in the region, other than for construction projects along the river, are moved on the river at all. In 1931 the total tonnage on the river from Knoxville to Paducah, the entire distance, was only 2,244,665 tons, and this included even the shortest hauls between locks. The principal commodity transported was sand and gravel in the amount of 1,112,520 tons, largely hauls of only a few miles. The second largest tonnage was railroad ties, 43,214 tons, and coal, 8,177 tons. Much of the actual tonnage on the river was used by the Federal Government. These figures included even rafting of logs and ties. It occurs to me that the bare interest on the money which the proposed navigation improvements would cost would more than pay the cost of transporting the tonnage now using the river, let alone the cost of maintenance and operation of dams and locks.

There were no time clocks or limits of working hours for the sturdy pioneers who plunged into the forests of this country to create the United States. Determined and idealistic men, side by side with strong and loyal women, braved the wilderness of these shores to establish economic as well as religious freedom. Year after year they labored from dawn to dark, and the wilderness gave way to broad, smooth highways, and now are we to embark upon a new road, using the power which these people and these States have lent to the Federal Government, to destroy the spirit of the pioneer and to kill the urge for new development? Do we intend now to establish a policy in distinct contradiction to the very spirit which created this country? What of the future—what of this generation, and the next? Are we to go on as a nation and continue our improvements over the natural endowments of nature, or are we to set at rest forever the instincts of men to improve upon nature and to compete with one another for the rewards of individual enterprise?

I realize there are men who believe that when corporations become arrogant and abusive the only means of correction is for the Government to enter into competition with them. They propose as a corrective and a punitive measure the setting up of a bureaucracy to operate business as a penalty for private industrial abuse. I do not defend the abuses of corporations. There is little doubt but some are arrogant and unfair. But to my mind even an arrogant corporation is better than an arrogant and top-heavy bureaucracy, for we can correct abuses of a public corporation, but none save the sovereign power may limit or guide a bureaucracy.

There is no need to send our Government in a new direction in this hour of crisis. As legislators we should deliberately attempt to avoid a confession of failure of our democracy by adhering strictly to the basic fundamentals which have carried us safely over 160 years.

Muscle Shoals will become the turning point of this Government. It is unquestionably an opening wedge for socialism, and it should, for the very safety of the Government itself, be defeated.

The following lists the 15 States leading in the production of commercial fertilizer, together with the value of the fertilizer produced in 1931, and the number of wage earners directly employed in fertilizer factories in those States. Fertilizer is today produced in 36 States of the Union.

State	Value	Wage earners
1. Georgia.....	$29,252,000	2,809
2. Maryland.....	25,500,000	2,855
3. North Carolina.....	22,900,000	2,140
4. Virginia.....	20,661,000	2,047
5. Florida.....	15,700,000	1,084
6. South Carolina.....	14,000,000	1,606
7. Ohio.....	14,000,000	969
8. Alabama.....	13,000,000	1,403
9. Louisiana.....	8,300,000	858
10. Illinois.....	8,100,000	454
11. New Jersey.....	7,000,000	612
12. Tennessee.....	7,000,000	638
13. California.....	5,000,000	302
14. Indiana.....	5,000,000	259
15. Massachusetts.....	3,800,000	387

Mr. President, this table shows that a total of $199,273,000 worth of fertilizer is produced in those States alone, and that in the production of that fertilizer some 18,423 people find employment. I submit that in view of these facts Senators should be careful how they vote on the pending bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there are two or three questions in my mind which I should like to present to the Senator from Nebraska in order that he may wipe away any fears I have regarding the pending bill.

The Hill bill in the House provides for the mass production of fertilizer, as I understand it, which provision is not included in the pending bill.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. I have been impressed, not alone this year but in previous years, by what the Senator from Nebraska has said in opposition to the expenditure of money for that particular enterprise, because of the fact that fertilizer could not be economically produced at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption there?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is to offer an amendment to the bill which will be practically a complete copy of the House bill. I wonder whether the Senator would not let us vote on the pending amendment, and take up the question to which he is about to address himself when the Senator from Alabama offers his amendment and after he speaks on his amendment. Would that be agreeable?

Mr. COPELAND. I think so. I will turn aside from that for the moment to ask the Senator 2 or 3 other questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question then is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has the floor, and I do not want to interrupt him; but before we take a vote on the amendment I wish to have just a few minutes to state the other side of the case. It has not yet been stated.

Mr. COPELAND. Since I have the floor I will go on and get into the RECORD the thoughts I had in mind, and I shall be very brief.

The sections of the pending bill which have disturbed me are sections 10, 11, 12, and 13, which are pending, and section 18. Am I right in differentiating between the two bills as regards these sections, that the Senator from Nebraska is largely disregarding the transmission lines which are in existence?

Mr. NORRIS. No; the Senator is not correct in that assumption, at least, not as I see it. On page 12, section 12, the pending bill provides:

Sec. 12. In order to place the board upon a fair basis for making such contracts and for receiving bids for the sale of such power it is hereby expressly authorized, either from appropriations made by Congress or from funds secured from the sale of such power or from funds secured by the sale of bonds hereafter provided for, to construct, lease, or authorize the construction of transmission lines within transmission distance from the place where generated.

After we shall have disposed of this amendment I propose to offer an amendment to include in the language the word "purchase", so that the board will be authorized to construct, to lease, to purchase, or to authorize the construction of transmission lines; and an amendment has already been agreed to which provides that when the Government owns the transmission lines constructed by the board it shall likewise have authority to lease such lines to private parties so as to put them absolutely on the same basis.

The objection to the House bill, as I see it, on that point is that before the board can build a foot of transmission line they must open negotiations with private parties; they must make a finding that it is economically feasible; they must secure the consent of the President of the United States. One of the first things, if this bill shall become a law, that they will be called upon to do, I think, will be to build a transmission line from Muscle Shoals to Cove Creek Dam to include the two governmental generating plants, and in order to use the power which is now going to waste and from which nobody is getting anything, in connection with the construction of Cove Creek Dam. If they have first to negotiate and take up with the various corporations that own different transmission lines—and there would probably be a dozen of them with which they would have to deal before they could do a thing; they would have to negotiate with all of them—Senators know what would happen. Every one of them would delay the negotiations; they would offer all kinds of technical objections, knowing that the board had its hands tied and could not do a thing. Then, when the board went ahead, I anticipate there would immediately follow an injunction issued by a Federal judge restricting them from building a transmission line, on the ground that there had not been sufficient negotiations, or that, as a matter of fact, the line they proposed to construct was not economically feasible; and, whether the private companies believed it or not, they could make a case on paper, and the board would probably not be able to build any transmission line until a case, and probably a dozen cases, after 2 or 3 years had been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. In the meantime a transmission line to distribute power that had cost nothing would not be available, and they would have to buy power from somebody else. That is the difference. The board is placed upon the same footing as a private party. That section of the bill in the beginning provides:

In order to place the board upon a fair basis for making such contracts—

They could never be put on a fair, equal basis with the private corporation until they had been given the same power that a private corporation has.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska has made his position very clear, and yet, as I read section 16 of the House bill I find this proviso:

Provided, That such transmission line may be constructed only if the board is unable to make contracts satisfactory to the authority with owners of privately owned lines for the transmission of power, or for the use or the purchase of transmission lines, and if, after investigation, the authority shall find that such transmission line is economically justifiable and necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

It seems to me that the whole question of procedure and the decision will be left to the board, to the authority, under the House bill.

Mr. NORRIS. But suppose the board did not do that and that would be the claim in the lawsuit? Suppose they went part way and made some negotiation, and the private corporation said, "You did not negotiate enough"; it could allege that proper negotiations had not been made; make a showing on paper and secure an injunction. I want to say to the Senator, if he wants to do the fair thing by this corporation, why are we going to tie its hands and let those they have to deal with have their hands untied? I do not understand why anybody can object to putting this corporation upon an equal basis with every other corporation.

Nobody wants to construct a transmission line if there is one already there and arrangements can be made for procuring it. The board to be created is not going to be made up of insane men; they are going to try to make a good showing; they are going to try to save money. If, on the other hand, the board has a transmission line and a private party wants to lease it, the board will be anxious to lease it to them, because it will bring some income. If we do not tie the hands of the board, there will probably be no difficulty in making a contract with private individuals, because they will get some income from the transaction themselves, and they would rather have it than not have the Government pay a part of the cost of their transmission line. If we should tie the hands of the board, we would give the people they have to deal with an advantage that would be detrimental, in my judgment, and would mean no transmission lines for the next 10 years.

Mr. COPELAND. It would seem to me that that is wholly in the hands of the board.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. If they desire to build transmission lines, to provide new facilities for carrying electricity, they have ample power under either bill to do that very thing; but, as a matter of fairness to investors, I think there should be some safeguard. I am surprised to find how many investors in these particular properties live in my State, and they are much concerned over the language used. I do not see how they could be concerned if the language in the House bill were adopted, but the Senator from Nebraska says that the power authority then would not have a sufficient club to use over the privately owned lines if the language of the House bill should be written into the law.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that he, of course, like all other Senators, has no doubt received many communications showing the stock owned in these private corporations by widows and orphans, colleges and schools. The power trust is thinking now of the widows and orphans, but I have the evidence here in my desk—and if the debate proceeds that far, I will produce it—to show that the same men who are behind this propaganda have themselves robbed the same widows and orphans of millions, yes, billions of dollars by the way they have juggled the stocks and bonds of their corporations. Insull as an illustration. I have the records here of these particular corporations down in Alabama, Tennessee, and Georgia showing how they have poured water, to the amount of millions of dollars, into their capitalization. They were not thinking of the widows and orphans when they were destroying the very foundation of the corporations owned by these widows and orphans and which had been intrusted to their care and keeping.

Mr. COPELAND. I hold no brief, certainly, for the men in high places who have robbed the widows and orphans, but I know that every time a bank fails and every time its deposits are tied up the persons who suffer most are the widows and orphans and others who have money on deposit. I assume, too, that—

While the lamp holds out to burn,
The vilest sinner may return.

Just now it is to the interest of those who in the past have been exploiters of the public to show to their stockholders what is going to happen to them, and I am not so sure that evils will not come to innocent stockholders.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. COPELAND. Of course.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize that "the vilest sinner may return," but the sinner who steals a horse when he does return will have to restore the stolen horse; and until these fellows do return their stolen horses I have some doubt about the sincerity of the new religion which they have embraced.

Mr. COPELAND. That may be true; but if the transmission lines are wiped out and their business entirely destroyed, they will not have the wherewithal to make their return; the horse will be dead by that time.

Mr. NORRIS. It may be that it will be so; it may be that they have poured so much water into corporations owning the transmission lines that they never can supply the people with electricity at a reasonable rate; but the Senator's theory would mean that the widows and orphans in their homes and other people who have to buy electricity or otherwise do their work by candlelight, the washerwoman who uses the electric washing machine, from now on must pay exorbitant prices for electricity because in the past these fellows have poured water into their capitalization. If now we are going to let conditions remain just as they are, we rob all the consuming public in order to save others and permit them to operate on a fraudulent capitalization of water and wind which they have poured into their institutions.

Mr. COPELAND. If the House bill were to pass, the calamity suggested by the Senator could not occur, because provision is made in the House bill for the transmission of electricity, and provision is also made for the building of transmission lines; but that bill provides that before the Government shall build competing lines it shall first attempt to buy or control those lines which are already in existence.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care to go over it again, but there is not any doubt but that this board will lease, or buy transmission lines if they can. If they are sane men—and I take it they will be—they will do that; but if we are going to tie their hands and ask them to do that, then we might just as well make it compulsory and say, "You can generate electricity, but you must not carry it across the road to a consumer's house or across the Tennessee River to Florence, a city within sight of the dam, unless the Alabama Power Co. or the Tennessee Power Co. get in as middlemen and convey that electricity."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it is very apparent from the wording of the Senate bill that the thought is that the Government will build the transmission lines and distribute the electricity. I call attention to section 11 of the pending bill, which reads in part:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government so far as practicable to distribute the surplus power.

Exactly the same language is used in the House bill except the words in that bill are "distribute or sell." I ask the Senator from Nebraska if he is not going to permit the power authority to sell power if it shall be deemed wise to do so?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; there is a provision in the bill that they can sell it to the Power Trust itself, but they must first give an opportunity to States, counties, municipalities, and farm organizations to buy it. They have the preference right.

Mr. COPELAND. Once more I refer to the provision on page 14, section 13. Once more I want to enter my protest against 5 percent of the gross proceeds being given to the States of Alabama and Tennessee. I would be perfectly willing to have 5 percent of the net proceeds go to those States; but to give them 5 percent of the gross proceeds brings to my mind, every time I think about it, the expenditure of $90,000,000 by my own State which was demanded in order that we may have the right to distribute the electricity from the power developed on the St. Lawrence.

Frankly, as I compare the bills, it seems to me that, so far as the items are concerned which relate to the transmission of electricity, the provisions of the House bill are preferable. I am in full harmony with the Senator from Nebraska so far as making fertilizer is concerned. I think he is 100 percent right in that matter. But a careful reading of the whole bill indicates that the construction of transmission lines within transmission distance shall be restricted, and they had even specified not to exceed 400 miles—

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no, Mr. President! The Senator is probably reading from the text of the House bill. There is no such language in the Senate bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad the Senator corrects me, because the Senator would permit it to be transmitted any distance, I believe.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. If there should be a new invention by means of which electricity could be transmitted a thousand miles, I see no objection to transmitting it that far. I see no objection to taking it to the Senator's home so he could get the benefit of it himself.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Nebraska proposes to do that regardless of the institutions which are already in existence. There is one in my county which is owned by the people of the county. It is almost a mutual company in that it is owned by the people there. They have invested their savings in the concern. Each family has tried to invest enough in it so that the income from the investment may compensate for the cost of the electricity used in the home. But here, without any limitation whatever, without any consideration for the local concerns, the transmission lines are to be extended for miles and hundreds of miles. We do not know what is to be the limit.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator like to have a provision in the bill that transmission lines could not be built anywhere unless the company owning the transmission line in existence was agreeable and consented to it?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I would not, but I would have in the Senate bill exactly what is in the House bill, a provision that before the power authority could build a transmission line it should negotiate with the local concern to see if its lines could be had at a reasonable price.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; of course. As I look at it, that would mean that the power authority would not be able to build any transmission lines until they took every case on every point to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. Cannot language be found specific enough to prevent that?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not know of any way to so word the bill as to prevent a man from going into court. If that were done, that in itself would be held by the court to be unconstitutional.

If the Senator will permit me further, the Senate bill anticipates and is written on the theory that the board will do just what the Senator and I would do if we were operating the board. I am assuming, and others, I believe, must assume, that the board will be composed of honest men, of competent men. If we wanted to take electricity from Washington to Baltimore and there was a transmission line already in existence that would carry it, we would lease it if we could. Perhaps we would buy it if we could. But if our corporation said to us, "We tie your hands, and before you can do anything when you meet in conference with these other people who own transmission lines, you must go through this formula and that formula", we never would get through them, never in the world, without somewhere along the line meeting the claim that we had not properly negotiated, and the next thing we would meet would be an injunction from the Federal court.

Would it be fair to do that if we are going to organize this corporation at all? I can understand how a man might believe that we ought not to do anything, that we ought to let the Power Trust own the country—and men may honestly believe it; they may be right in their belief—but if we are going into this fight and are going to set up a corporation such as is proposed here, we would be idiotic, it seems to me, if we tied the hands of our corporation and sent it out to deal with another corporation that does not have its hands tied.

Mr. COPELAND. I think that is true if that were actually going to be the case, but I do not admit that for a moment.

Mr. NORRIS. No, of course not. The Senator evidently goes on the same theory as the representatives of the Power Trust and the various corporations about which we have heard so much for the last 4 years, that have tried to get into our schools, that have gone secretly into our churches and our lodge rooms, that have contaminated our children in the public schools, that have employed lecturers under the guise of professors from colleges to talk to women's organizations when they were in the pay of the Power Trust. The Senator evidently goes on the theory that such a corporation could not do any wrong, that it would be fair to us and would not take any advantage of us, and hence our negotiators could confront them with their hands tied behind their backs and get justice because of the virtuous nature of those people who are so kind and who want to take care of the public so well.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I resent the imputation that that has been my course. I have not made as many speeches as the Senator from Nebraska, and certainly could not make such eloquent speeches as he does, but I have everywhere and always contended, as I do now, that the natural resources of our country should be utilized for the benefit of the people. I am willing to have the Government go to any length to harness streams, to build dams, to erect power plants for the generation of electricity. I have not been willing that all the private concerns should be absolutely wiped out. I have thought always, and I think now, that with the hand of the Government on the switchboard there might be such control of the prices charged, when that power is sold to private parties, that the people would be preserved and protected. If the Government is going into business, if it is seeking to drive out of business entirely those private concerns, that is all right. It is the privilege of those who take that view to hold such a view if they desire.

I resent the suggestion that I am interested in propaganda which has gone on in this country where college professors have been hired and textbooks written for the protection of these great utilities. That has not been my position and is not now. But we could write a bill here, as I think the House has done, which would give ample authority to the power board to negotiate first for the transmission lines and then, if the power authority feels that the price asked is too great or the conditions imposed are improper, it is right of course that the authority should have the power and the funds to go ahead with the construction of transmission lines. But here, as I read it, the whole purpose of the bill is to serve as a club over the heads of these private institutions and to drive them, whether they will or not, into terms which will permit the Government to carry on its operations.

Mr. President, I shall take no further time. I merely wanted to have the RECORD show how I feel about the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] to strike out section 15, as amended.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Kendrick	Reed
Austin	Couzens	Keyes	Reynolds
Bachman	Cutting	King	Robinson, Ark.
Bankhead	Dale	La Follette	Robinson, Ind.
Barbour	Dickinson	Logan	Russell
Barkley	Dill	Loung	Sheppard
Black	Duffy	Long	Shipstead
Bone	Erickson	McAdoo	Smith
Borah	Fess	McCarran	Stelwer
Bratton	Fletcher	McGill	Stephens
Brown	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkeley	Glass	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Goldsbrough	Metcalf	Townsend
Byrd	Gore	Murphy	Trammell
Byrnes	Hale	Neely	Tydings
Capper	Harrison	Norbeck	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hastings	Norris	Van Nuys
Carey	Hatfield	Nye	Wagner
Clark	Hayden	Overton	Walcott
Connally	Hebert	Patterson	Walsh
Coolidge	Johnson	Pittman	Wheeler
Copeland	Kean	Pope	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the pending question is the motion to strike out section 13. This section has not yet been defended. It has been assailed by several Senators; and before we vote on it I feel that something ought to be said as to the reasons why it is here.

I take upon myself the full responsibility for the section. It was in the last two bills, I think, that passed the Senate. I concede very frankly that it is a question with two sides to it. As I look at it, the question seems to me to be very plain. It seems to me to be only fair to have this section in the bill. Before we vote on it, however, I want to take the time to give the Senate the reasons that actuated those who put it in the bill. Then, as far as I am concerned, I am ready to vote and accept the result.

Section 13 does not pertain to a fundamental principle involved in the bill; but it does pertain, as I look at it, to a fundamental principle of common justice. That is the only reason why I ever put it in the bill, and the only excuse that I know of for its being here.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] this morning made a very powerful and eloquent argument in favor of his motion to strike out the section. Perhaps I can illustrate the matter best by taking the actual facts.

Cove Creek Dam, located in Tennessee, is proposed to be constructed by the Government principally, almost entirely as a measure of navigation and flood control. I think it would be justified in constructing it for those reasons if there were no others. It is to be a high dam, that will generate a great deal of electricity. Some of it will be primary electricity. I cannot tell, nor have I a fair estimate in my own mind, as to how much of it will be secondary power; but a large percentage of it will be secondary power, because the Government will take the water out of it when the river is low for two purposes: One, to raise the water in the stream in order to make it navigable; the other, to make a place for the next flood to be stored behind that dam in this great reservoir.

If that dam were built by a private party—and it is an inviting proposition for power alone—it would be taxable in the State of Tennessee. The State of Tennessee would get considerable revenue out of it as a matter of taxation. If the Government constructs it and owns it, the State of Tennessee gets no revenue.

I concede to begin with that there ought to be no revenue paid in lieu of taxation if the dam were used entirely and exclusively for a governmental purpose. Bear that in mind all the way through what I shall say. In carrying out the governmental purpose, however, incidentally power is produced that is sold, upon which the Government probably will make a profit. The Government ordinarily pays no taxes. It seems to me that in this case it is only fair to the State of Tennessee that the Government should pay something in lieu of taxes from the revenue-producing part of the dam.

This section does not apply to any electricity sold to the Government or sold to anybody in the operation of the fertilizer provisions of the bill. It does not apply to any power used in the operation of the locks.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. May I point out that the Detroit Street Railway pays the city $1,200,000 a year, $100,000 a month, in taxes, so as to put it on a comparable basis with private industry.

Mr. NORRIS. Absolutely. That is what I want to do here. So that on the power that is used for governmental purposes, now, the Government pays no tax. It pays nothing of the revenue. This section applies only to the power sold for consumption in the ordinary course of business.

It seems to me that is fair. Perhaps it is not. I look upon it as fair. I think that is a justification for it.

Let us see, now, what has happened in this particular debate today.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], in a very plausible argument—I think as good an argument as can be made for that side of the question—pointed out what he thought was wrong about this section. He contended that the Government ought not to pay any taxes; that it ought not to pay anything instead of taxes. Before the day passed, however, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] delivered an address in which one of the leading arguments he made against this very bill was that when the Government constructs these plants it pays no taxes. That is the first argument made against municipal ownership everywhere by every trust magnate who ever tried to defeat municipal ownership: "You pay no taxes"; and that is true. We do not pay taxes. So that many people who believe in municipal ownership concede that there ought to be something paid in lieu of taxes.

The State of Washington—and if I am wrong about it I want my friend the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] to interrupt me and say so—has some of the finest municipal power-plant activities in the world. The city of Tacoma, one of the beautiful cities of America, owns and has a monopoly of the generation and distribution of electricity in that city. It sells electricity at a fabulously low price to farmer organizations all through that vicinity. The plant is owned by the city, but it pays to the city in lieu of taxes  $7\frac{1}{2}$  percent of its gross revenues, an amount  $2\frac{1}{2}$  percent greater than is put in this bill.

The Senator from Michigan says, and he says truly—perhaps it may occur—that there may be a loss. When a private party builds a generating plant if he loses money he has to pay taxes just the same. The farmer out in Michigan may lose money on his farm operations, but he pays taxes on his farm just the same. That tax may not be just. Perhaps we can devise a better scheme of taxation. It seems to me we could; but it is sufficient answer, it seems to me, to say that that is our plan; and it is in order to compensate the State of Tennessee, and in the other case the State of Alabama, for what they would otherwise lose in taxes that this section is put into the bill.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. NORRIS. Just a moment further, and I will yield to the Senator. I have this idea, and for fear I will forget it I want to finish it. I think I have forgotten it. [Laughter.] I yield to the Senator. Perhaps the thought will return to me by the time he gets through.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I have listened with more than ordinary interest to the Senator's argument that these States ought to get some taxes from this land which they are to cede to the Government; but I have in mind now the very valuable parcels of land which the Government owns in some of the large cities in the country that are used for governmental purposes, that yield very large revenues to the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know of that.

Mr. HEBERT. Take the city of New York, for instance: The post office in New York is a very profitable enterprise so far as New York proper is concerned, and yet New York City gets no revenue from the ownership of that property; and that is true over all this country. I should be glad if the Senator would differentiate, if there is any differentiation.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; I think I can. The Senator's question is a perfectly proper one. Taking Cove Creek Dam again as an illustration, his question is comparable with that part of the dam that is used for governmental purposes, where no tax is paid. We speak of it as a tax; of course, that is not strictly correct; but nothing is paid on anything that is used for governmental purposes—not a penny. That is carefully provided in this section. The Government pays no percentage of income for any electric power used for governmental purposes, no matter what kind it may be. So it seems to me that the illustration of a post-office building or a courthouse building does not apply. If, however, in the case of a post-office building the Government leased it to someone engaged in private business—that might happen incidentally, and nobody would care about it—if it leased it to a man who ran a department store in it, if the Government was leasing property to people who transacted that kind of business, then it ought to pay something in lieu of taxes, I think.

Now, here is an incident. First, the dam is built for a strictly governmental purpose. No one will dispute that it is a proper expenditure of money to make our streams navigable. We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars for that purpose. No one will dispute that we have a perfectly legitimate right to spend public money for flood control. For 100 years we have been drawing on the Treasury of the United States to do that. Incidentally, however, in connection with the scheme involved in this bill for flood control and for the improvement of navigation there comes a revenue from the sale of power. On that part of the business it seems to me the Government ought to pay something in lieu of taxation.

We have provided for similar payments in other laws. We paid to States containing forest reserves which take large areas of land out from under taxation. When we sell timber, I have forgotten the exact figures, but I think we have paid them 30 percent, based entirely on the principle underlying this measure, as I understand it.

Mr. President, that is all there is in this provision. If Senators think it is wrong to do what is proposed, of course they will vote to strike the provision out. To my mind, it is just common justice.

I do not want anyone ever to quote me as saying that I thought the Government ought to pay any taxes, or anything in lieu of taxes, for any property used exclusively for governmental purposes. But the property in this case we cannot divide. We can only estimate, in the case of the Cove Creek Dam, how much of the cost is properly chargeable to power, how much is properly chargeable to navigation, how much is properly chargeable to flood control. If it were over in my section of the country, there would be another estimate, as to how much was properly chargeable to irrigation. The only way we can reach those items is by an estimate honestly and carefully made. We will never reach absolute accuracy.

Mr. President, in this case the Government is to pay 5 percent. It is conceded that the completing of the Cove Creek Dam will increase the revenue of the Government at Dam No. 2 down in Alabama. It will increase it at any other intervening dam that is built. That comes entirely from the construction of the Cove Creek Dam up in Tennessee, and it is provided that  $2\frac{1}{2}$  percent shall be paid to the State of Tennessee for the increased power which is actually sold, not to the Government, not to any governmental department, or for any governmental function.

Mr. President, I concede the right of any man to take the other side, and to contend that we should deprive the States of the collection of those taxes. It is argued by the Senator from Michigan that while there is going to be a great improvement there, navigation is going to be increased, transportation is going to increase, cities will be built up there, manufacturing establishments will grow up all along through the Tennessee Valley, and farms will improve, the same things would happen if the Cove Creek Dam were operated in the same way by a private corporation. But we would not realize the money from taxation on that account, and it does not seem to me that that is a sound argument.

Every time we have ever proposed to do anything in the way of generating electricity by any governmental instrumentality—the Federal Government, State government, county government, municipality—we have had hurled in our teeth, to begin with, "That is not fair. You do not pay taxes." That has been the argument against a bill similar to this for 12 years. "It is the Government going into business. You do not pay taxes. It is not right to come in competition with private parties", who have robbed their stockholders as well as the consumers. "You must not interfere with these men because you do not pay taxes."

When we say, "We will pay what is equivalent to taxes", then the same kind of people come back, as they have today, and take just the other side, and kick because we are going to pay taxes. So it is a case of being damned if we do and damned if we don't.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is talking about precedents for contributions by the Federal Government. In respect to power, is not the outstanding precedent at Boulder Dam, and is it not a fact that payments to the States of Arizona and Nevada are not to start in the Boulder Dam case until the Government shall be reimbursed for its entire investment?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is the only contention I am making.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is right about it, but I think the principle is present just the same. Eventually we are to pay the States. In the case of the forestry reserves we pay them now. Whenever timber is sold out of forestry reserves, as I understand it, we pay them 30 percent—perhaps 35. I never objected to that. I always favored it. I think it is right, because if the Government had not taken those lands they would have produced some taxes.

Now I want to speak on just one other thing and then I will be through, and I want to leave the matter to the Senate. I am willing to accept the verdict of Senators on this amendment as that of fair, honest-minded men.

Mr. President, I have offered an amendment, which is now in the bill and which will be stricken out if the pending motion prevails. The amendment provides that the rates fixed in the bill will be subject to change by the board and that when they are changed, and the change is approved by the President, the rates which are established shall then remain in force for 5 years before they can be changed again, and that when it is proposed that a change be made the States of Alabama and Tennessee shall have a right to be heard.

It seems to me that is fair. I can see how, in the years to come, conditions may change very greatly, may change so that the present rates would not be enough, or changed so that the rates would be too high. The matter will be in the hands of the board to be set up. Every 5 years, if it wants to, the board can change the rate, and, I take it, it will be fair about it, if it is not right. I am sure I could not say accurately, if I were asked, whether the rate is right or not. I fixed the percentages myself. I did the best I could, and I want to tell the Senate what I did. Long before it was necessary to prepare the first bill in which this provision occurred I started an investigation in order to find what percentage of the gross revenue of the power companies was paid in the way of taxes. That was an exceedingly interesting study. Some of the companies paid, as I remember it—and I am speaking only from memory—less than 1 percent of their gross revenue. Some paid as high as 10, 11, and 12 percent of their gross revenue. I struck what I thought was a sort of mean. There was no definite, well-established rule about it. They paid just as little in the way of taxes always as they could, and it depended upon the kind of board they had to deal with how much the tax would be.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. In the Senator's investigation did he find any precedent for this form of taxation? As I understand it, private power concerns have to pay some sort of taxes on their receipts, gross or net, or whatever the basis may be; but, in addition to that, they have local taxation, at the prevailing rate, in the locality where the plant is located.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the tax we are trying to recompense them for. It is the property tax.

Mr. HEBERT. I refer to the property tax. Of course, no property tax is based upon any such formula as is contained in this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. No; that is true.

Mr. HEBERT. In the case of all private power concerns, if they have a tax to pay upon the production of power, that ordinarily is payable to the States, and, in addition to that, there is a tax payable to the municipality where the plant is located.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HEBERT. But in this case it is to be payable to the State, as I understand it.

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct.

Mr. HEBERT. And the municipality in which the plant is located will derive no benefit.

Mr. NORRIS. That does not follow, by any means.

Mr. HEBERT. I would assume that to be so, from the wording of the bill. At any rate, the bill makes no provision for compensating the municipality.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. HEBERT. So we have a right to assume that there will be no State tax as such and no municipal tax as such.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not agree with the Senator in that assumption. Perhaps other people could, but I confess I would feel it a very difficult task if I were called upon to draw a statute like this, and divide up the percentages as to the different particular parts of the State which should receive the tax, like the State, and the county, and the municipality, and the school district, and so forth. I did not try to do that. I think there is no doubt that it is perfectly legal, that the State of Tennessee can do what they please with the tax which is paid to the State of Tennessee, if one is paid. They can carry it on down, as they do other taxes, and let it all go to the municipality, if they desire, or to the school district, the road district, or to the county. In other words, we are not undertaking to say to the State how they shall divide it up. I think that is up to the State.

Mr. HEBERT. My thought in asking the Senator the question, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, was to ascertain whether or not in his investigation the Senator had found any precedent for the imposition of a tax of this nature.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think I have called attention to that. There are a great many municipalities which own their electric-light establishments which pay taxes. There are some of them which pay all the taxes of the municipality. I called attention to the city of Tacoma, in the State so ably represented in part by the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], who sits here at my left. They pay 7½ percent of their gross receipts, and still make millions.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to say at the outset that the question I am about to propound to the Senator will be based in part on my knowledge of Boulder Dam and in part on my lack of knowledge of the pending proposal. Referring to the Senator's last remark, is it not true that the electric-light establishment in Tacoma, to which he refers, is a private corporation which pays its taxes to the community in which the Senator from Washington is a resident?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not understand it that way. It is the municipality itself.

Mr. McCARRAN. I know; but is it a Federal corporation?

Mr. NORRIS. No; it is organized under the laws of the State of Washington.

Mr. McCARRAN. Following that up, comparing these two great plants—the Boulder Dam, in which I am interested, and the one in Alabama—before any benefits would be derived by either the State of Arizona or the State of Nevada it is necessary, under the law, that $140,000,000 shall be repaid to the Government, and after that the States divide—18⅓ percent to Nevada and 18⅓ percent to Arizona. I should like to get an explanation as to why the initial cost of the plant in this case should not be paid back to the Government, as in the case of the Boulder Dam, before either Tennessee or Alabama shall have anything.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has asked a perfectly proper question, and I am going to be just as frank as I can be in answering it. If it were possible to carry out in this case what the Senator suggests, I would be very glad to do it. We are confronted here, however, with the Government undertaking in the Tennessee Valley a great project, what we might call "a reclamation project." We are going to try to control the flow of the streams, particularly of the Tennessee River. We are going to try to control the floods. We are going to try to make that great stream navigable. We are going to reforest some of the land. We are going to put to better use some of the so-called "marginal lands." We are going to develop power. The development of power is only one of a large list of things we are going to try to do. They are all interlocked. In many of these improvements every one of these things will enter as a component part.

As to Dam No. 2, which we own down there now, nobody that I know of has ever said how much of that dam should be allocated to navigation and how much to power. Most people think of it as a power dam only. They do not realize that if that dam had not been built some similar improvement would have had to be constructed in order to make the Tennessee River navigable. A great lake has been constructed there over a portion of the river which at times in the year is just a rippling stream running over the rocks. Canals could have been built around there. Other dams—smaller dams, without any power—could have been built. Dam No. 3, some 12 or 14 miles above, a well-known dam provided for in the original plan, was never constructed. It strikes me, from my investigation and from the testimony before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for the last 12 years, that no business man would construct Dam No. 3 as a power proposition. It would not pay; it would not be a good investment; but as a navigation proposition it is absolutely essential that we shall make the river navigable during portions of the year at least. It could be done in a different way; canals could be built around; little dams could be constructed here and there; but no power would be obtained. Instead, however, of all those little dams, there is just one lock, if it shall be constructed according to the original plans, and it will make the river navigable for between 65 and 75 miles.

Some of that can be allocated to navigation—I think most of it; some of it can probably be allocated to power; but no business man would build it. I would not have advised the Government to build it as a power proposition alone, but I can see that that dam, or its equivalent, must be built. We cannot avoid it if we are going to make the Tennessee River navigable. It is of practically no value as a flood-control proposition; neither is Dam No. 2. I do not think there ought to be anything in the way of flood control allocated to either one of those dams, because they will always be kept full.

The difficulty arises because all this business is so interlocked and so interwoven that it is difficult to tell where one begins and the other ends, but when we put them together as a whole we know what we are going to get. We are going to get a navigable stream; we are going to get flood control; we are going to get power as an incident; but while the object of this bill is to get the maximum amount of flood control, it does not say the maximum amount of power, as will be noted by anyone who will read the bill. It provides for securing the maximum amount of flood control, the maximum amount of navigation—flood control and navigation—and the maximum amount of power "not inconsistent with navigation and flood control." That, I think, is the language of the bill. The power is really a secondary proposition. It comes about because it would be sinful to build all these dams and not develop some power. When it shall be developed, what is going to be done with it? The Government has it on its hands, and why should not the people of that great basin have the benefit of it?

That may not be a complete answer to the Senator's question, but it is the best answer I can give.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WALCOTT. I should like to know if there are any estimates as to the depth of channel that will be available when Dam No. 3 shall be built or as to what tonnage of boats or barges the river will carry?

Mr. NORRIS. Dam No. 3 will make a lake that will be deep enough for an ocean-going vessel, but, of course, there will be no such vessel, because near the head of the lake the depth decreases. And to make the river navigable to Chattanooga there will have to be another dam built known as "Guntersville Dam." With Dam No. 2, Dam No. 3, and a dam at Guntersville, as I understand, the river would be made navigable all the way from Muscle Shoals clear to Chattanooga.

Mr. WALCOTT. Does the Senator know what height those dams will be, approximately?

Mr. NORRIS. I know about Dam No. 3; there has never been an estimate made, so far as I know, as to the others.

Mr. WALCOTT. About how high will Dam No. 3 be?

Mr. NORRIS. About 40 feet.

Mr. WALCOTT. That will be a lock dam?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WALCOTT. Then how would you get around the Moccasin Bend?

Mr. NORRIS. Where is that?

Mr. WALCOTT. That is some miles below Chattanooga.

Mr. NORRIS. The Guntersville Dam, as I understand, takes care of that. I do not mean to say that Dam No. 3 would make the river navigable to Chattanooga; it would make it navigable for about 65 or 70 miles, as I remember.

Mr. WALCOTT. So there would be three dams equipped with locks?

Mr. NORRIS. There would be three dams between Chattanooga and Muscle Shoals, and every one of them would generate power and every one of them would be a necessity as a matter of navigation; but none of them would have any perceptible influence on flood control.

Mr. WALCOTT. Is the Senator convinced that the navigable portion of the river, as the result of these developments, would be valuable and would be available for considerable tonnage?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. One of the difficulties, I understand, in the Tennessee River is that it has only been navigable in spots. Of course, the Senator knows that that means very little navigation. The idea of the Government has been—and that is a part of its plan, laid out without reference to this bill at all—to make the Tennessee River navigable from its mouth to Knoxville. That would mean that a boat could start at Knoxville and go down to New Orleans and come back or go out on the ocean if it was such a boat as could navigate on the ocean.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yesterday, in explaining the difference between the House and the Senate bills, the Senator from Nebraska pointed out that it would be necessary to build transmission lines from the Cove Creek Dam to the Muscle Shoals Dam proper. With that observation I find myself in accord, but I was wondering whether or not the Senator would be inclined to limit the building of transmission lines between the two dams by the Government?

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President; I would not favor putting any limitation in the bill. It provides in another place—and the particular provision I am referring to now went in at the request of President Roosevelt—that the board shall have authority to build from its main lines transmission lines into localities of farmers and small villages where the people do not have electricity at reasonable rates, as a kind of experiment to some extent, to sell it even at retail. There is a provision in the bill for doing that very thing. It is to that extent an experiment, as it is in the case of fertilizer, and in other respects.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I appreciate the Senator's position; he has reiterated it many times, and I concede that there are very good arguments to support the stand he takes; but speaking for myself, I am reluctant to have the Government build transmission lines which would duplicate those already built by private concerns.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not going to be necessary if this bill shall pass, unless the power companies shall be stubborn about it. This bill—when an amendment shall be agreed to, and to which I think the Senate will readily agree, inserting the word "purchase"; an amendment which I am going to offer as soon as the pending amendment shall have been disposed of—will then provide that the board or the Government corporation may lease, construct, purchase, or authorize the construction of transmission lines; and it states, in so many words, that that authority is given to the board for the purpose of putting them on the same business basis as are private corporations which compete with them.

Mr. TYDINGS. With that explanation, I believe I would be inclined to support the Senator's bill in preference to the one which came over from the House, because I think as between the two bills the bill he has prepared is more comprehensive and, in my judgment, is a sounder bill. My chief reluctance to it at this time is that, as for myself, I do not believe it is fair for the Government to coerce, so to speak, private transmission lines or private lighting or power companies into a situation which might not leave them any alternative, so that they would either have to take what the Government offered or go out of business.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; I do not think that, although, of course, that may be the Senator's idea and he may be correct. I do not want to put anybody out of business who conducts his business properly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand it is the Senator's interpretation of the power feature that the Government will not parallel any existing transmission lines except where the existing company refuses to abide by what we will call the equities of the situation.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. That is my understanding. I want to give the board the power without tying their hands in any way. I assume the members of the board are going to be men of national reputations, high-class men, well informed on this particular business, and that they are not going out with the idea of slaying people or injuring business. For their own advantage, they will want to make as good a showing as possible; they will want to lease a transmission line rather than to build it. It will be to their own interest to do it; it will be to the interest of the private company that the same thing shall be done. One of the amendments I offered yesterday gives to the board the power to enter into contracts in cases of breakdown or accident. In such instances contracts can be entered into such as all corporations generally interested in electricity ought to enter into in order to help each other out. The Government board will help the independents out, and, to the same extent, the independents ought to be willing to help out the Government corporation.

Now, Mr. President, I should like to have a vote, if we may. I only took the floor to speak on the amendment briefly.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to ask one or two questions of the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. McCARRAN. The questions, in all propriety, should be preceded by the statement that they are asked by reason of my lack of knowledge of the immediate problem presented, and by reason of my knowledge of another problem which I consider to be somewhat analogous, which is the Boulder Dam project. I should like to ask the Senator if he were the attorney for a private concern would be advise the private concern to construct this plant from the standpoint of profit?

Mr. NORRIS. Which plant?

Mr. McCARRAN. The plant we are talking about now—Muscle Shoals.

Mr. NORRIS. The Cove Creek Dam?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I said that I thought it was an inviting proposition, but I do not want the Senator to be misled. I have said a great many times on the floor of the Senate it would be a sin—that it would be a terrible thing—if we permitted any private company to build Cove Creek Dam, because, naturally, they would use it for all the money they could get out of it, and that would mean the sale of power.

The Government is building it as a flood-control proposition and a navigation proposition. It will be letting a good share of this water out every year so as to improve navigation and holding it back in flood times in order to prevent flood damage. That means that it will interfere very seriously with the project as a power, or income, producing proposition. So this dam, located at the head of one of the largest natural reservoirs east of the Mississippi River, will hold back 3,500,000 acre-feet of water, and the Government will utilize it by letting out a good share of it every year when the water is low, and thus increase the flow and improve navigation, and to that extent improve the power possibilities of all dams, whether private or public, below it, but that will seriously affect the power produced at Cove Creek Dam proper. I want the Senator to get clearly in his mind that Cove Creek Dam ought to be constructed by the Government, no matter what we do about anything else, because only the Government can afford to construct that great dam and use it as a flood-control work.

Mr. McCARRAN. Following that inquiry, with the Senator's permission—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. My next question may be preceded by the statement that when the Congress was considering legislation to construct the Boulder Dam, on which the Government is to expend some $160,000,000, it was required that $140,000,000 should be returned before any benefits could go to the States; and, as will be recalled, the same arguments were presented as the Senator from Nebraska is now presenting.

In other words, it was a flood-control project to preserve the Imperial Valley; it was a flood-control project for other reasons; it would also furnish irrigation, which is something that is not necessary in the Tennessee Valley; and it would produce power. Various other reasons were given why the development should be undertaken; for instance, that it would make navigable a certain part of an unnavigable stream. In other words, we are going to produce a lake above Boulder Dam with a contour line of a thousand miles, approximately. The whole proposition was that we would produce taxable property.

Is it not true that the construction of this project will produce in the area affected taxable property that is now perhaps not in existence and will not reflect itself to the benefit of the community affected?

Mr. NORRIS. I think it will. I say that frankly to the Senator. But if the same improvement were made by a private corporation, the same thing would happen and the corporation would have to pay taxes.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is true. The Senator will pardon me if I continue with my idea. I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska that I have followed this question with some degree of interest and I am very partial to the whole project proposed by the Senator. But there is an element that arises by reason of the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan that does affect me very much, and that is, why should this project pay to the States that are affected a bonus, so to speak, for developing something that apparently no private concern would develop at all?

Mr. NORRIS. I could not follow the Senator in that idea. Sooner or later every one of these projects will be built, unless it will be a dam like Dam No. 3, which the Government itself is going to build anyway, if it ever makes the Tennessee River navigable. Cove Creek Dam, I have no doubt, would be utilized by private people, and it would be an evil day for the Tennessee Valley and for the Mississippi River if that ever should occur, because flood control would be at an end so far as that greatest of all reservoirs east of the Mississippi River is concerned. They would keep that great reservoir filled all the time. I would not blame them for doing it. That is what I would do. It would be perfectly proper and perfectly legal to do it. That is the reason why the Government ought to do it. The greatest thing connected with it is the question of flood control. It would not make the Tennessee River of the same depth all the year round. It will hold back 3,500,000 acre-feet of water.

There are other reservoirs, none of them nearly as large as this, but 10 or 12 pretty well surveyed, which combined could hold back more flood water than Cove Creek Dam. I am about to speak from memory now and I may be wrong about it, but I have seen a statement that in the entire Tennessee River Basin there are flood-control propositions which combined would hold back 15,000,000 acre-feet of water. I want to say that that would have a lot to do with destructive floods on the Mississippi River. It would make the Tennessee River navigable the year around. Cove Creek Dam will raise the water at Chattanooga in low seasons about 1 foot. That represents the difference between non-navigability and navigability. But that is not the end. That is only the biggest one.

Mr. President, the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] was very eloquently and forcefully presented by him, advocating the striking out of the section on the ground that we will be paying taxes or something in lieu of taxes and have no right to do it. He was followed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], who condemned the bill in severest terms on the grounds that we will not pay taxes. I ask Senators to remember those statements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to strike out section 15, as amended.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have a pair with that Senator, and in his absence withdraw my vote.

Mr. HEBERT (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair on this vote with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BORAH. On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], who, if present, would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. LOGAN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is absent on official business.

Mr. HEBERT. I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH]; and

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] with the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO].

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to announce that on this question the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has a special pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY]. If present, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] would vote "yea", and the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] would vote "nay."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—31

Barbour	Fess	Keyes	Townsend
Barkley	Goldsborough	Logan	Tydings
Brown	Gore	Loneragan	Vandenberg
Carey	Hale	Metcalf	Van Nuys
Coolidge	Hatfield	Patterson	Wagner
Copeland	Hebert	Reed	Walcott
Dickinson	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.	White
Duffy	Kean	Stelwer

NAYS—43

Adams	Clark	McCarran	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Connally	McGill	Russell
Bachman	Costigan	McKellar	Sheppard
Bankhead	Couzens	Murphy	Shipstead
Black	Cutting	Neely	Smith
Bone	Dill	Norbeck	Stephens
Bratton	Erickson	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkeley	Fletcher	Nye	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Kendrick	Overton	Trammell
Byrnes	King	Pope	Wheeler
Capper	La Follette	Reynolds

NOT VOTING—21

Austin	Davis	Hastings	Pittman
Bailey	Dieterich	Hayden	Schall
Borah	Frazier	Lewis	Walsh
Byrd	George	Long
Caraway	Glass	McAdoo
Dale	Harrison	McNary

So Mr. VANDENBERG's amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment which I referred to in the argument. In fact, I have two or three amendments which I wish to offer.

On page 12, line 25, after the comma following the word "lease", I move to insert "purchase", so that it will read:

In order to place the board upon a fair basis for making such contracts and for receiving bids for the sale of such power it is hereby expressly authorized, either from appropriations made by Congress or from funds secured from the sale of such power or from funds secured by the sale of bonds hereafter provided for, to construct, lease, purchase, or authorize the construction of transmission lines within transmission distance from the place where generated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, line 25, after the comma following the word "lease", it is proposed to insert the word "purchase", so that it will read:

by the sale of bonds hereafter provided for, to construct, lease, purchase, or—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I have another amendment, on page 10, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out lines 21 to 25, inclusive, on page 10, and on page 11 to strike out all down to and including line 13, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(b) The Comptroller General of the United States shall audit the transactions of the corporation at such times as he shall determine, but not less frequently than once each fiscal year, with personnel of his selection. In such connection he and his representatives shall have free and open access to all papers, books, records, files, accounts, plants, warehouses, offices, and all other things, property, and places belonging to or under the control of or used or employed by the corporation, and shall be afforded full facilities for counting all cash and verifying transactions with and balances in depositaries. He shall make report of each such audit in quadruplicate, one copy for the President, one for the chief officer of the corporation, one for public inspection, and the other to be retained by him for the uses of the Congress. The expenses of each such audit may be paid from moneys advanced therefor by the corporation, or from any appropriation or appropriations for the General Accounting Office, and appropriations so used shall be reimbursed promptly by the corporation as billed by the Comptroller General. All such audit expenses shall be charged to operating expenses of the corporation. The Comptroller General shall make special report to the Congress of any transaction or condition found by him to be in conflict with the authority or duties entrusted to the corporation by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word in explanation of the amendment.

Some criticism has been made of the language of subsection (b), commencing on line 21, page 10. It seemed to me that the criticism was justified, at least to some extent, and I think the language that I have offered as an amendment is a great improvement over it.

One of the difficulties that it overcomes, that I think existed under the original text of the bill, was that if we had an unfriendly board, and they wanted to cover up what they had done, they would be able to succeed to some extent in doing it because two of them would not make a request of the President for an independent audit.

I had a conference on the subject with the Comptroller General, and this amendment is the result of that conference. I think it provides for a very complete audit, and it is under the control of the General Accounting Office. It is made compulsory under the amendment for the Comptroller General to make the audit at least once a year. The board has nothing to do with it. The amendment requires him also to report to Congress whether he finds anything wrong anywhere, in their system of bookkeeping or anything else. He also makes a report to the President of the United States. I think the amendment provides a very complete method of auditing the operations of this corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have another amendment which I desire to explain to the Senate. I desire to tell the Senate the reasons for it, and let them use their judgment on it. I have made up my mind on it, but, at the same time, I realize that I may be wrong.

The Senate bill provides on page 4, referring to the members of the board of directors of this governmental corporation, among other things, that each member of the board—shall give his entire time to the business of said corporation.

The bill provides also that he shall not be engaged in any other business, and so forth.

Dr. Morgan, the head of Antioch College in Ohio, to whom was given a copy of this bill to make comments and recommendations on it, made a recommendation there. I did not think so much of it when I first read it, but the more I thought about it the more I have reached the conclusion that probably he is right. He thinks it is a mistake to require specifically that the members of the board shall give their entire time to their duties as such. He says that means that if anyone wanted to be technical, wanted to make trouble for them, he could even complain if they took a vacation in the summertime. He believes that we ought to require the members of the board not to engage in any other business, but he suggests striking out the word "entire", and inserting the word "substantial" so that it will read:

Shall give his substantial time to the business of said corporation.

He gives as a reason, and it made an impression on me—I do not know how it will affect other Senators—that men who are competent to hold these places, who are big enough and broad enough and able enough to fill these positions, will hesitate to accept them if they know that they are going to be criticized or fault is going to be found with them if they are not engaged every single day in the business of the corporation; and he says such a thing is not necessary. He thinks that the word "substantial" would carry out the idea much better than to require them to give their entire time, and that it might be embarrassing for anybody to accept one of the positions with that kind of a limitation on his time.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. When I read this bill rather carefully I thought the salary provided was so inadequate that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to get men to carry out this enterprise for the salary mentioned in the bill. I desire to ask the Senator if he believes it will be possible to secure the services of men of sufficient caliber to build this great "industrial empire", as it has been designated, for the sum of $10,000 a year, which I believe is the salary provided in the bill.

Mr. KENDRICK. Only for the chairman.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; the salary of the chairman only is fixed at $10,000. The other members are to serve for less than that. A man who can do the things that are required to be done by the provisions of this bill is capable of making more than $10,000 a year in almost any line of activity or any kind of business; and I was wondering if the Senator did not think there ought to be some more latitude about the payment of salaries. The amendment he has suggested will help to some extent, and yet it keeps the members of the Board from engaging in any other kind of business. It says that a man must give up all other positions, surrender all other business of every kind, and undertake this great work for the sum of $10,000 a year for the chairman, and $9,000 for the other members.

I should like to have the Senator's view as to the ability of the President to secure men who can do this job for that inadequate salary.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I realize that there is very much disagreement as to whether we could get a man for $9,000 or $10,000 who could fill this place. I am of the opinion that we could. I do not believe there would be any difficulty. If the member of the board desires to live at Muscle Shoals—and I think it is a beautiful place to live—he would have his house rent free, in addition to his salary.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I can understand that, but will not private business take away from this corporation the talent which the corporation requires? We read about salaries of $25,000 and $50,000 and $100,000, and even more, paid by certain institutions, which appear to be too much, but, at the same time, if they are paying such salaries, then will not the Government be forced to take men of lesser ability, unless we can find someone who is sufficiently devoted to the interests of the Government, like the Senator from Nebraska, to be willing to give his time and his talent to work for the public good?

Mr. NORRIS. I think we could find a great many very high-class men to take the position. The truth is that I happen to personally know and have come in contact with some men in the Government service working for salaries of less than $10,000 who are greater in ability than many of these fellows who are getting $100,000 and $150,000 a year.

The case of Dr. Cottrell, whom I mentioned the other day, is an instance. He invented a process for which he got nothing, and which he probably could have sold for millions. He is still working for the Government at a very much smaller salary than $10,000 a year.

I will say, in reply to the Senator, that we are never going to be able to compete with big corporations in the payment of salaries. I do not think that is possible. Instances have been cited here of railway presidents drawing $150,000 a year, most of whose duties are performed, many times, by clerks getting less than $2,000 a year. We cannot compete with a corporation which is paying $150,000, or $50,000, or even $25,000.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator imagine that that may be one of the troubles with the Government, that we cannot or do not employ the caliber of talent which private business employs?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not think that is the trouble with the Government. I do not believe that because we might pay salaries of $100,000 in the Government service, if we could, we would necessarily get men who would do any more faithful service than those who get nominal salaries only.

Mr. LOGAN. I suggest to the Senator that I have a very good friend, a retired Army officer, who has given much valuable service to the public, and my State attempted to secure his services as chairman of the State highway commission. The State could offer him a salary of only $5,000 a year. He said he could not accept that salary, but that he would do the work for nothing if they would pay his expenses. He said he felt it would be out of place for him to accept an insignificant salary like that; that he would rather do the work for nothing than to take such a salary. It seems to me that if we could get someone for $9,000, we could probably get him for the glory of the service if we paid his expenses.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield the floor, unless the Senator wants to ask me a question.

Mr. FESS. I want to ask the Senator a question regarding the matter the Senator has been discussing.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. FESS. The Senator will recall that at the head of the Bureau of Standards we had a man for about 20 years at a very nominal salary, I think $6,000.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is a fact.

Mr. FESS. Finally, after years of sacrifice, he accepted a position at $25,000, but during many years he had remained here, and was satisfied to go on with the work because he thought he was doing a great work for the Government. We have a man over in the Library who has been there for 30 years, at a very nominal salary, who remains there because he likes the work. I think the Senator is correct when he says that the Government cannot go out into the field and compete with private industries in the matter of salaries.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it cannot compete with them.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I desire to speak for just a few moments on the bill, and then to submit an amendment.

There have been endless arguments over the Muscle Shoals project, which has been before the Congress for at least a dozen years. The beginning of the project was something like this. I am informed that the Alabama Power Co. owned substantially all of the flowage rights in the Tennessee River as they are now owned and used by the Government, for which they paid approximately $500,000, acquiring them over a period of several years, being all the rights pertaining to the development of this project, and when "the defense-of-the-realm act" was passed in 1916 that company turned over to the Government for $1 all of its rights in that territory along the Tennessee River.

The development was made as a war emergency project, primarily for the production of nitrates. The erection of the dam brought about the development originally of approximately 20,000 primary horsepower, and that was doubled, as machinery was installed therefor.

In addition to that, nitrate plants were built—well built and intelligently built—and built according to the most modern methods of fixing nitrogen from the air for the purpose at that time of producing explosives. The same plant would have served for the production of fertilizers as well. But an extraordinary invention of the Germans during the war made these processes obsolete. The discovery was known as "the development of Haber ammonia by a platinum catalyzer", which takes very much less power and cuts the cost of the old process by more than half. In the course of time—a matter of only a few years—the nitrogen plant which was developed there became obsolete, so that nothing is available today that is worth saving except the buildings.

I shall not get into any controversial subject; it is not worth while. The whole point of the project, to my mind, is this: First, shall this Government project enter into the retail business or shall it sell its products at the busbar? That has been discussed backward and forward. While I favor the sale of the power at the busbar, instead of going into the private business of distributing electricity, I am going to pass over that point, as it has been discussed for many years.

Secondly, is there a market for this power? That, of course, is vital. Let us approach it in this way. The original plans which were furnished President Wilson covered a survey of this entire southeastern part of the United States. Some of the plants were then examined which have since gone into the Du Pont properties, this Muscle Shoals project among them, and these were classified as A, B, C, and D projects. As I recall, this project many years ago was called a C project; that is, a third-class project. By that was meant that if it was going to be developed at all the first development would be very expensive because it had to take the entire flow of the river.

The river was not steep enough, did not drop suddenly enough, to allow a diversion dam, and consequently a sudden drop in a short distance for a flume power. Therefore damming the entire river requires a long dam and a high dam. The Tennessee River has seasonal periods of very low water and at times very high water, which is just as serious as the low water. The cost of development is high, the primary or continuous power is low, consequently the cost per horsepower is well-nigh prohibitive for private capital. It is probable that private capital would not have developed this project up to this time. The Government, as I have just said, went into this business because of the necessity of producing nitrates as a war emergency.

Having gone into it, the Government was saddled with this plant, which, from the point of view of the private investor, was an uneconomic plant for the development of electric energy. Furthermore, the market was pretty well occupied, even at that time. Private industry had covered with its transmission lines and generating plants all the available market at that time.

Subsequent to that time, however—and this is most important—the cheap development of steam power went on apace, the cost of steam horsepower was so rapidly reduced by various improvements in steam engines as to virtually scrap a great many water powers. Then came the development of the Diesel engine, and that scrapped other water powers. So that today water powers are not nearly as valuable as they were 20 years ago or even 10 years ago.

I dare make this assertion, and I think it cannot be refuted, that the Government or private capital could set up a steam plant of the equivalent output of Muscle Shoals, on the banks of the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, with its coal only a short haul away, and develop electrical energy a great deal cheaper than the cost of horsepower developed at Muscle Shoals today by the water-power plant. I will not say how much cheaper, although I am told by engineers that it would be not more than half. In addition to a water-power plant, one must always have a steam stand-by in order to insure continuous service of primary power.

With these facts in mind, I want to insert 2 or 3 other facts in the RECORD. The average rate per kilowatt-hour today in the State of Alabama total sales is 1.35 cents. The average rate per kilowatt-hour for the entire United States is 2.87 cents. That is power rates.

The average domestic rate per kilowatt-hour in the State of Alabama is 4.79 cents, and the average national domestic rate per kilowatt-hour is 5.58 cents.

This means that the State of Alabama is benefiting today from the development of electricity for light and for power by having to pay considerably below the average price paid throughout the country.

As to the output, the Muscle Shoals hydroelectric plant as installed develops approximately 180,000 kilowatts maximum. The Sheffield steam station, which is intended as a stand-by station to insure continuance of service and primary power, has installed machinery capable of generating approximately 60,000 kilowatts, making a total of 240,000 kilowatts.

This does not mean that this total installed capacity can be availed of all the time. As a matter of fact, it can be availed of approximately 50 to 60 percent of the time. It means, further, that, figuring high water and low water, the two Muscle Shoals plants combined can produce, year in and year out, approximately 1,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours per annum.

The private companies, however, in the Muscle Shoals area have a capacity of upwards of 4,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours per annum. The 1932 demand absorbed only 3,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours, and this included current purchased from Muscle Shoals—that is, purchased from the Federal Government at Muscle Shoals. Therefore, with 4,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours capacity in private plants and 1,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours capacity at Muscle Shoals—a total of 5,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours—and with a send-out, or demand, in 1932 of 3,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours, there is now a surplus of 2,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours per annum for which a market must be found or developed.

Army engineers have estimated that if five major navigation and power dams were built on the Tennessee River above Muscle Shoals, including Muscle Shoals Dam No. 3 and Cove Creek Dam—and these are the dams of which the Senator from Nebraska has been speaking—at a cost, not including transmission lines which would cost many millions more, of approximately $125,000,000, they would produce for marketing approximately 4,000,000,000 additional kilowatt-hours.

The Army engineers have also said that if all the possible hydro developments were made in the so-called "Tennessee Valley section" they would produce approximately 20,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours more. How is this power to be absorbed?

If possible—and I shall leave the question here—I should like to see some plan evolved and become operative along the line suggested by the New York Power Authority, which, by the way, was inaugurated and instituted by the present President of the United States, whereby the power companies would purchase the power at the Muscle Shoals switchboard and pass on to the ultimate consumer such benefits as might result from governmental ownership and operation of the generating facilities; but, inasmuch as this bill does not contain such a provision and perhaps will not be amended to that effect, I am going to offer an amendment to the bill which, in my opinion, will insure standardized accounting and statistics—standardized methods of accounting. That feature of the bill has been immensely helped by the amendment just offered by the Senator from Nebraska. I send the amendment to the desk and hope that it may be adopted. I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 17, after the word "shall", it is proposed to insert the following:

be made in accordance with the uniform system of accounts for electric corporations prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the District of Columbia, and, in addition to the data so provided, the report shall.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I should like to add just a word and then I will be ready for a vote.

The amendment provides the recognized system of standardized accounting for electric utility companies. It is a Government standard, recognized by the Federal Government and by the District of Columbia. It perhaps includes the best-known methods of accounting for public utilities.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WALCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I think there is an amendment pending. My recollection is that the amendment I offered, to come in on page 4, has not as yet been acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment has not as yet been acted on.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, I trust the Senator from Connecticut will withdraw his amendment until the one presented by me may be disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 2, after the word "give", it is proposed to insert the word "substantially", so as to read:

Shall give substantially his entire time.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the amendment is to strike out the word "entire" and insert the word "substantial", so that it will read:

Shall give his substantial time.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the word "entire", after the word "his", and insert the word "substantial", so as to read:

Shall give his substantial time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that sounds like a very awkward expression.

Mr. NORRIS. It does sound that way to me, but I do not know how to better it, and as it is claimed the language comes from the president of a college, I thought I ought to suppress my feeling that it was a little awkward and accept it 100 percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator feels that, in spite of its awkwardness, he ought to accept it?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that, while I am not as familiar with the construction of language as is a college professor, it seems to me that if we say "substantial time" a person might give an average of 2 or 3 hours a day to a given employment. Would not that be substantial time? Has a person not given substantial time to a particular employment when he spends 4 hours a day at it? I do not think the language of the bill in its original form is subject to the criticism of the college professor. The clause now reads "he shall give his entire time." If we would construe that language in its ordinary acceptation it would not mean that a person would not be allowed to have a vacation. If we say that one shall give his entire time to a certain employment or undertaking, we would not consider that a day or two off now and then would interfere with that requirement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It implies that he would not engage in other business.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is what I think.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what the bill now means, that he shall not engage in any other business.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Personally I should prefer to have the clause read as it is now in the bill instead of accepting the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, if my amendment shall be agreed to the accounting for this new project will be so thoroughly standardized as to synchronize completely with the accounting insisted upon by most of the public-utility commissions throughout the various States of the country; we shall have eventually a Government record which can be compared with the records of private corporations; and we should get some facts as to relative unit costs. I should like to have the following items go in the RECORD as essential to tell the complete story of operations:

Plant output in kilowatt-hours by months.

Sales in kilowatt-hours by months.

The maximum demand in each month.

The plant output in kilowatt-hours on the days of maximum and of minimum output and the maximum demand in the year.

The maximum or peak load during the year.

The amount sold to, and the price received from, each customer by name, taking more than 5 percent of the total annual output of the plant.

The amount of reserves set up for depreciation or retirement.

The amount of power purchased, if any, and from whom purchased, to enable the corporation to fulfill its contracts, and the price paid therefor.

In this connection I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if the bill provides for give-and-take contracts for the exchange of electricity with existing companies in the Muscle Shoals region? I think it does.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know to what section of the bill the Senator has referred, but I offered such an amendment yesterday. For instance, the board may enter into contracts with other generating and transmitting companies in the event of break-downs, and such instances as that. They are called ordinarily, I think, "give-and-take contracts", and the board is authorized to make such contracts.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, with this standardized accounting all the essential items will be taken care of; information as to the exact costs may be obtained, and we should be able to know exactly what we are doing, whether this project is a success as an economic enterprise or whether we must regard it as an experimental enterprise, perhaps for laboratory experiments on a large scale for nitrates, perhaps for the wholesaling of power, or what not. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. I did not get the title or the name of the type or classification of accounting the Senator suggests.

Mr. WALCOTT. I will read the whole amendment with the context. These two words are in the present bill—

This report—

And then follows the amendment—shall be made in accordance with the uniform system of accounts for electric corporations prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the District of Columbia, and, in addition to the date so provided, the report shall—

Then the language of the bill goes on—include the total number of employees—

And so forth.

The amendment simply ties the words proposed to be inserted with the rest of the language, including reports of the total number of employees, and so forth.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, before the amendment is voted on, I think it might be well to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that under the system of accounting set up by private power companies there is an element of depreciation which does not tie in with public developments. I think those who are familiar with the building of publicly owned power systems are quite aware of the fact that, as a substitute for the elements of depreciation and obsolescence, which are carried in private power company accounting, a public power system retires its capital structure by retiring its bonded debt. In lieu of the creation of an obsolescence and depreciation fund, which is inherently a part of the financial set-up of the private power company, the public system retires its capital structure. To impose on a public plant the burden which is imposed on a private plant in that particular is merely to saddle it with another obligation which it cannot possibly meet. If the public plant be compelled to carry this double burden of depreciation and obsolescence on top of the burden of retiring its capital debt, with which every lawyer who has ever had anything to do with such plants knows is the outstanding factor of their financial set-up, there is imposed on the public plant an unbearable burden.

I think the Senate should understand that before it votes in the affirmative on this amendment. I myself have no doubt in my own mind that some of the things the Senator has mentioned with respect to tabulating the reports, showing the output in kilowatt-hours and other items, are certainly highly desirable; but to say that a public plant which amortizes and writes out its capital structure should be compelled to operate under the same system of accounting that is imposed on a private corporation, which never retires its capital structure, is to attempt the impossible. It may not be an impossibility as a bookkeeping matter, but certainly legally and from a financial standpoint it is impossible.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I should like to answer the Senator's suggestion. His contention is, I think, an academic one, because while these items may be required by a system of standardized accounting, they may not be insisted upon in this case because it is the Government itself. The amendment simply provides that reports shall be made as to these various items for the sake of comparison. If the plant is to be maintained as a going concern, naturally obsolescence, repairs, and depreciation must be taken care of; I think the Senator must agree with me as to that. There can be no further handicap or charge placed on the plant than what the Government itself is willing to place on it, but the items will all appear in the accounting in such a way that we can make comparisons. To deny standardized accounting indicates a fear that a Government-operated plant cannot compete successfully with a privately owned plant.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, under ordinary conditions I would have no objection to the amendment although I see no necessity for it in this particular case. We are going to have a board, I take it, that will be as much interested in doing the right thing as is the Senate of the United States. I do not believe that we ought to try by law to provide the details of how the board shall keep its books.

In the first place the amendment, as I heard it read, would have but little application to the work of the Board. The Board is not developing and selling electricity alone; that will not be its principal business. It is one of the incidents to its general work. It seems to me that we ought to have faith enough in the board which will be selected by the President not to undertake to arrange the details of its system of bookkeeping. Its accounts are going to be audited by the General Accounting Office. The General Accounting Office, in my opinion, is one of the most nearly perfect services in our Government. Senators will remember that when that office has been called upon to make an analysis, the report has always been full and complete. I recall not a single report that has ever been questioned as to its correctness. Under the amendment already agreed to, it is the General Accounting Office that will have charge of and in reality control the bookkeeping methods of the board.

Evidently, from the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, the Interstate Commerce Commission has laid down and established a method of bookkeeping for the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, probably a very fine thing for that commission; but that will not apply, as I see it, to the bookkeeping of the corporation set up under the provisions of the bill now before us. I have no objection whatever to the particular things that are called for in the amendment. I have no doubt on earth that every one of them will be fully reported on by the board. We provide that the board must make report. We provide that their books and business and everything else under their control shall be subject to the inspection of the General Accounting Office. That office can call upon the board without any notice, like a bank examiner appears to examine the bank.

I do not question the motive of the Senator from Connecticut in offering the amendment, but it seems to me we are going too far in trying to make applicable to this board a set of books provided for the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia. It may be all right, but I should dislike very much to see the board bound down by statutory provisions in that way and that system made applicable to this board. It seems to me we should have more faith in the board than to surround it with detailed requirements of that kind.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I should like to take just a moment to answer the Senator from Nebraska. I know that the Senator means absolutely what he says, that he wants this to be a fair and square trial of public ownership, but he is not going to be here forever, and none of us will be here very long. I want to make sure that there is a record that will prevent any haggling. In the last 20 years there has been much haggling over municipally owned plants in the country because they did not keep the same kind of accounts that the public-service commissions in the various States were insisting on being kept by privately owned plants. The system to which the amendment refers is the last word of the Government in the standardization of accounts. If they improve it, we accept the improvements, of course; but let us start right.

The Senator from Nebraska feels that the plant will be a great success and a legitimate competitor of private business and will meet private business. I do not believe that. I believe the plant will show a very high cost per kilowatt-hour as compared with private enterprise. The accounts are all available and all practically on the same basis, and this basis applies only to such portion of the new plant as will be devoted to the development of hydroelectric energy for the market. The board can take the rest of it, 10 percent or 80 percent, if it pleases, or any proportion of the output for experimental purposes. That is an entirely different matter. I am only talking about the public-utility portion of the plant or such part as is used for public-utility purposes. I feel very strongly that the board should employ the system of accounting that has been devised and is known as the Interstate Commerce Commission system.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. [Putting the question.] The yeas seem to have it. The yeas have it, and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. WALCOTT. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COUZENS. Has not the decision been announced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been announced. The call for the yeas and nays came too late.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Florida proposes, on page 7, line 22, after the word "successfully", to insert "and as far as practicable shall utilize the services of such officers, agents, and employees", so as to read:

(h) The board shall have power to request the assistance and advice of any officer, agent, or employee of any executive department or of any independent office of the United States, to enable the Corporation the better to carry out its powers successfully, and as far as practicable shall utilize the services of such officers, agents, and employees—

And so forth.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, under the provisions of paragraph 8 on page 7 the board is authorized to utilize the services of officers and agents of governmental departments and independent offices of the Government. The President is authorized to designate that they may be used in this connection. It is purely a matter of authorization as to the utilization of the services of the agencies of other departments and offices. It seems to me that it is advisable for them to use those agencies as far as practicable. I have merely offered an amendment to that effect.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

NOTICE TO SUSPEND RULE XL

Mr. BLACK submitted the following notice:

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to House bill 4589, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, the following amendment, viz: At the proper place in the bill to insert the following:

"No article or commodity shall be purchased by the United States, or any Department or organization thereof, which article or commodity was produced or manufactured in any mine, factory, workshop, mill, quarry, or manufactory establishment, situated in the United States, in which any operator or worker was employed after the enactment of this law more than 5 days in any week or more than 6 hours in any day."

"Each contract made with a contractor for any public works shall contain a provision that the contractor will buy no article or commodity to use on or in any public work which was produced in any mine, factory, workshop, mill, quarry, or manufactory establishment in which any operator or worker was employed more than 5 days in any week or more than 6 hours in any day."

FUNCTIONS OF THE STATE DEPARTMENT (S.DOC. NO. 52)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

There are transmitted herewith, in accordance with Senate Resolution 351, statements showing the functions of the Department of State and all of its related activities, the statutory authority for the performance of each function, and the annual cost thereof insofar as it is practicable to determine the cost on that basis. There is also enclosed a list of employees receiving compensation at the rate of $5,000 or more per annum.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 1, 1933.

(Enclosure: Report as indicated.)

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. MCCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of James Crawford Biggs, of North Carolina, to be Solicitor General, to succeed Thomas D. Thacher.

COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY

Mr. HARRISON. From the Committee on Finance I report favorably the nomination of J. F. T. O'Connor, of Los Angeles, Calif., to be Comptroller of the Currency, to fill an existing vacancy.

Mr. President, I desire to say that the nomination was erroneously referred to the Committee on Finance. It is my understanding that it should have gone to the Committee on Banking and Currency. However, it was referred to our committee, which took action this morning and unanimously recommended confirmation of the nomination. I say that in order that the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. FLETCHER] will not think we are trying to usurp any authority.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I say that I think the nomination was inadvertently referred to the Finance Committee. It undoubtedly should have been referred to the Banking and Currency Committee. I do not want this to be taken as a precedent. There is only one other nomination of the kind that was ever referred to the Finance Committee. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] then had it rereferred, and it was sent to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I merely mention that in passing. I am not opposing the action of the Committee on Finance, but I think it ought to be a matter of record that hereafter such nominations should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the reason why I made the statement, so that it will not be taken as a precedent. In view of the fact that the nomination was unanimously reported, I ask unanimous consent that it be confirmed.

Mr. FESS. I hope the Senator will not ask for that.

Mr. HARRISON. I withdraw the request.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will go to the calendar.

If there are no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

TREATIES

The Legislative Clerk proceeded to read Executive C (72d Cong., 2d sess.), a treaty between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, for the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway, signed on July 18, 1932.

Mr. PATTERSON and Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaty will be passed over.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Raymond S. Patton, of Ohio, to be Director of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles Wyanski, Jr., of Massachusetts, to be Solicitor of Labor, vice Theodore G. Risley.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask that that nomination go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over. That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the pending bill may be finished tomorrow, it is expected that the Senate will then be ready to proceed with the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill. If that bill is disposed of on Thursday, I hope to be in a position to ask the Senate to take a recess over the week-end, so as to afford Senators the opportunity of giving attention to matters in their offices which they have been compelled to defer because of pressure of business in the Senate.

I now move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 3, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 2 (legislative day of May 1), 1933

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

Oscar L. Chapman, of Colorado, to be Assistant Secretary of the Interior, vice John H. Edwards.

MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF TAX APPEALS

Jed C. Adams, of Texas, to be a member of the Board of Tax Appeals for the unexpired portion of a term of 12 years from June 2, 1932.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Henry H. McPike, of California, to be United States attorney, northern district of California, to succeed I. M. Peckham, appointed by the court.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO ADJUTANT GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT

Capt. John Alexander Klein, Infantry (detailed in Adjutant General's Department), with rank from July 1, 1920.

TO FIELD ARTILLERY

Second Lt. Daniel Fulbright Walker, Infantry, with rank from June 13, 1929, effective May 28, 1933.

PROMOTION IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO BE COLONEL

Lt. Col. William Arden Alfonte, Infantry, from April 26, 1933.

TO BE LIEUTENANT COLONEL

Maj. John Mather, Ordnance Department, from April 26, 1933.

TO BE MAJOR

Capt. Gerald Howe Totten, Quartermaster Corps, from April 26, 1933.

VETERINARY CORPS

TO BE FIRST LIEUTENANT

Second Lt. Ralph William Mohri, Veterinary Corps, from April 23, 1933.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate May 2 (legislative day of May 1), 1933

DIRECTOR OF THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

Raymond S. Patton, to be Director Coast and Geodetic Survey.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, grant unto us the fruit of the Spirit. Whatever is just, whatever is honorable, whatever is courageous, whatever is clad in self-forgetfulness, whatever is full of peace and cheer, whatever makes character radiant and resplendent—this is the fruit of the Spirit. Do Thou enable us, our Father, to come to this attainment. In the performance of duty, help us to act in the spirit, temper, and mind of the adorable Teacher of Galilee and our Elder Brother. In His holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 66

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. CLAY STONE BRIGGS, late a Representative from the State of Texas.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative the Senate do now take a recess until 12 o'clock meridian tomorrow.

The message also announced that in compliance with the foregoing resolution the Vice President had appointed Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. CONNALLY a committee on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral of the deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 4606. An act to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 7. An act providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska;

S. 157. An act to amend an act approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1548), entitled "An act to supplement the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1161), as amended by the act of March 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 458)";

S. 166. An act for the relief of Robert J. Foster;

S. 248. An act for the relief of Rolando B. Moffett;

S. 313. An act to amend section 5 of the act approved July 10, 1890 (28 Stat. 664), relating to the admission into the Union of the State of Wyoming;

S. 381. An act for the relief of Samson Davis;

S. 422. An act for the relief of Albert A. Marquardt;

S. 423. An act for the relief of Michael J. Moran;

S. 531. An act for the relief of Dan Davis;

S. 558. An act for the relief of Beryl M. McHam;

S. 593. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to give war-time rank to retired officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and/or Coast Guard of the United States", approved June 21, 1930, so as to give class B officers of the Army benefits of such act;

S. 604. An act amending section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes", approved December 29, 1916 (ch. 9, par. 1, 39 Stat. 862), and as amended February 28, 1931 (ch. 328, 46 Stat. 1454);

S. 707. An act for the relief of James J. Jordan;

S. 743. An act to amend the act approved June 30, 1932, entitled "An act providing for the transfer of the duties authorized and authority conferred by law upon the Board of Road Commissioners in the Territory of Alaska to the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes";

S. 772. An act for the relief of Robert J. Smith;

S. 792. An act for the relief of Curtis Jett;

S. 804. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a right of way to The Dalles Bridge Co.;

S. 1131. An act to amend the probation law;

S. 1204. An act for the relief of William Burke;

S. 1278. An act to amend an act (Public, No. 431, 72d Cong.) to identify The Dalles Bridge Co.;

S. 1287. An act for the relief of Leonard Theodore Boice; and

S. 1288. An act for the relief of Otto Christian.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

MAY 2, 1933.

HON. HENRY T. RAINEY,

*Speaker of the House of Representatives,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.*

DEAR SIR: From the secretary of state of the State of Texas there has been received the certificate of election of Hon. MILTON H. WEST as a Representative-elect to the Seventy-third Congress to fill the vacancy in the Fifteenth Congressional District of that State.

Yours very truly,

*SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.*

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and pleasure this morning to introduce my good friend, MILTON H.

WEST, Representative of the Fifteenth Congressional District of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I present Mr. WEST, who now desires to take the oath of office.

Mr. MILTON H. WEST, of the Fifteenth Congressional District of the State of Texas, appeared in the well of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

GEORGE CARTER LAFFERTY

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, this morning there were held funeral services for George Carter Lafferty, who had been long in the service of this House as one of its Official Reporters.

Mr. Lafferty was appointed to the committee staff by Speaker Carlisle. He had served on the floor of the House itself for 30 years. It is fitting that when one passes after serving us so faithfully and intelligently there should be spoken at least a word for record of appreciation of the help he has given to the House and therefore to the country.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I have a unanimous-consent request to submit.

I ask unanimous consent that in the consideration of House Resolution 124 there shall be 6 hours of debate, one half to be controlled by myself and one half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY], and at the conclusion of said time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I very much dislike to object to any unanimous-consent request from my friend from North Carolina, but there is one provision in House Resolution 124 that we on this side of the aisle are very much opposed to. This is the provision that Senate amendment no. 85 "be and the same is hereby concurred in."

We feel that this amendment is such an important proposition that it ought to be considered by itself under the general rules of the House. As I look at it, this is probably the most important piece of legislation that will come to this House at this session or at any other session during the term of our services, and I honestly feel that it is of such importance that it should be taken up in the normal way, and I could not give unanimous consent to proceed as the gentleman from North Carolina requests.

I may say that when it comes to the adoption of this resolution I intend to ask for a division of the question. As far as the resolution down to line 6, with respect to Senate amendments 1 to 84, inclusive, is concerned, we are perfectly willing to send the Senate amendments to conference in the usual way, because that is the normal and natural procedure; but the other part of the proposition we could not agree to, and I would have to object to the request.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 125.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 125

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of House Resolution 124, and all points of order against said resolution shall be waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the resolution and shall continue not to exceed 5 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Rules, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution to its adoption or rejection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] one half of the hour to be in turn yielded by him as he sees fit.

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution now being considered by the House provides for the consideration of House Resolution 124. If the ordinary procedure had been followed the Senate amendments would have been disagreed to and the measure would have been sent to conference after not longer than 1 hour of debate. Resolution 125 provides for 5 hours of debate upon Resolution 124.

I mention this as an answer in advance to those gentlemen who probably will charge that this is another gag rule, that there is no opportunity for debate, that there will be no opportunity for an expression of opinion.

Mr. Speaker, the most important of the Senate amendments, it is agreed by common consent, is Senate amendment 85, the so-called "inflation amendment."

If the ordinary procedure had been followed Senate amendment 85 would have gone to conference with very little debate. As it is, the Committee on Rules has provided 5 hours' debate.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POU. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Would the gentleman also explain in his remarks that it would have gone to conference under the rules of the House and that it would come back to the House and we could have full and free discussion of it and a separate vote on that particular amendment. This is the fact, is it not?

Mr. POU. That might or might not be the case.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any other procedure except cutting us off entirely?

Mr. POU. I would not undertake to accept 100 percent the gentleman's formula as it has been laid down.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will explain any other way it can be done, I will accept it.

Mr. POU. The procedure that the Rules Committee has provided allows the most ample time for discussion of a Senate amendment I have ever seen permitted during 32 years' service in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman in the 32 years' experience ever known of any political party taking such drastic action as you are now taking to put over this rule?

Mr. POU. I have known it many times while the Republican Party was in power. I prefer, however, not to inject political considerations into this debate.

Mr. SNELL. I also prefer not to, but I challenge the statement of the gentleman. Can the gentleman mention a case where there was such drastic action ever being taken during the 14 years that he has been on the Rules Committee?

Mr. POU. I have seen time and time again while the Republican Party was in power the will of the House thwarted by the action of one man, the Speaker of the House, when we had only three members of the Rules Committee.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; and the gentleman said it never was going to happen again.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Has the gentleman ever seen such a condition as confronts the country today?

Mr. POU. Never; and I pray Almighty God that we may never see such conditions again. As I read history, no nation was ever confronted with such conditions.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from North Carolina remembers very distinctly in 1922 the Republican Chairman of the Rules Committee stuck a rule in his pocket and never did let the House consider it. [Laughter.]

Mr. POU. Sure.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I do not mean to stir up any political questions, but I do wish to say this: There are some things about this amendment that some of us feel should be altered. We do not feel that it is perfect. Does not the gentleman think it would be fair to give us an opportunity to express our opinion and make some amendment to it?

Mr. POU. I do not; I think it is a matter that should be voted up or voted down as a whole. We stand on that platform. [Applause.] I do believe, in a measure as difficult as this and as far-reaching as this, that amendments would complicate rather than help. I am profoundly convinced that the so-called "inflation amendment" should be voted up or down as a whole.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Nation is in the condition of a patient sadly requiring the operation of blood transfusion. This Nation, for almost 3 years, has been in the condition of a patient who is almost dead from the loss of blood. I say if this amendment of the Senate is agreed to, we have put in the hands of a great surgeon, the President of the United States, control of the blood-transfusion operation. In a blood transfusion there may be danger that there may be too little, and there is danger that there may be too much new blood injected in the veins of the patient; but, putting the operation in the hands of the President of the United States, surrounded as he is by the very best advisers, I believe he can be trusted with perfect safety to stop the transfusion at exactly the right point.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the position we have taken with respect to Senate amendment 85.

In the past history of the world great crises have developed great leaders. The War of the Revolution developed the immortal George Washington. The War between the States developed that immortal martyr, Abraham Lincoln. This crisis will develop a leader who will pilot this Nation safely out of the slough of despondency into which we have been foundering for the last 3 years. Conditions, I firmly believe, have developed that leader. [Applause.] I believe he is now in the White House, and that he has consecrated every faculty of heart, mind, and soul to the great task of leading this Nation into the light of prosperity, and for one I think the safest thing we can do in such an hour is to trust and follow the President. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I realize full well the futility of entering a protest against the method to be used in considering this legislation today. Yet I feel I would be recreant in my duty if I failed to do so. I want this House to pause for a moment and examine the two rules reported, which involves the consideration of the most important legislation which will ever come before an American Congress. This legislation, coming to the House for the first time, should be more carefully considered than we are being permitted. As Members of the House we have the right to express our opinion and to make a decision. Every one realizes the necessity for a rise in commodity prices; nearly everybody desires some form of inflation, but I say to the membership of this House we should be allowed to express our opinion as to what shall be that inflation.

When the Democratic leadership brings in these gag rules, I know it is their custom to rise and say they learned the lesson from past Republican administrators. "This is what you did to us", you say, but I say this is not a real excuse for functioning in this arbitrary way. This is your responsibility now. You are in control here, and you gentlemen must go back to the country next year and explain your method of procedure here. If I am any judge of the American electorate, when you do go back and say you sat here supinely and abdicated constitutional power that belonged to Congress, that you did it without permitting any single Member of the House to offer an amendment, you will find it no easy task to explain.

This is momentous legislation we are considering. The destinies of 120,000,000 people are at stake through the passage of this bill. Their happiness, their prosperity, their well-being are all dependent on what the American Congress does here today. I ask you gentlemen, as thinking Members of Congress, to seriously consider whether you should not vote down the rule and leave the question open to the House for amendment, because all of the brains, all of the knowledge of the Nation is not confined to those few men who are popularly termed the "brain trust." We here in the House should know what the American people want, and we ought to have the right to express their wishes. Permit this procedure and the minority will be glad, if their wisdom does not prevail, to submit to the majority with the fullest hope the country goes on to the prosperity we all want.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Has not the gentleman's party had since 1929 to consider legislation of this kind?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman knows well that we have been thinking of it; and he knows that in the last 2 years, when the Democratic Party was in control of the House, he was not able to get this legislation before Congress.

Mr. RANKIN. If I had had the support of the gentleman's party for the last 3 years, we would have had an expanded currency years ago.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why did not the gentleman get the support of his own party?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The gentleman says that he has been thinking of it. The Republican Party has been fiddling while Rome has been burning.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Oh, it is easy to get up and make statements like that, but any drastic change in legislation should come only after careful thought. While the American people want to go forward, naturally, to better days, I do not believe that they are willing to go into an experiment blindly, without careful thought. And I do not believe the Democratic Party wants to be placed in a position where they will admit they are going to do all of these things contemplated without serious deliberation.

My appeal to you gentlemen is to exercise your privileges, to exercise the duties you owe to your constituency, and vote down this rule and give us a liberal, orderly method of transacting business. It is said this gag rule is necessary because you cannot trust the American Congress. I said the other day, and I repeat, I know of nothing Congress has done in this session which would give the people the idea they should not be trusted. You gentlemen who sit on the Democratic side of the aisle know you could not get a comma or a semicolon inserted into any bill here if somebody whispered that the gentleman at the other end of the Avenue did not agree to the semicolon or the comma. When that is the situation, I say there need be no real fear of Congress running away. We can be trusted to take up all this important legislation and proceed in an orderly way to its consideration. We can be depended upon, if given a chance, to give the American people the relief they demand.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] that Congress can be trusted, and that Congress will do its duty and stand by the President in whom the Nation has the utmost confidence. I know that ever since his election he has been giving all of his time to studying this problem. I recognize there are a great many gentlemen in the House who have given special study to this question. They are sincere; they mean well; and they are honest. But it is absolutely impossible to include in this far-reaching legislation the views of every man. I am of the opinion that amendment 85, which the President has been considering for many weeks and which has been debated for days and days in the other Chamber, is an amendment in the right direction. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] stated a short while ago, if we, who realized the seriousness of conditions in 1929 and 1930, had had our way at that time, and had passed similar legislation then, the country would not be in so critical and serious a condition as it is in today. The only fault I can find is that we have delayed too long; that for 3 years we, who have had the interest of the people at heart, realized the situation, but, unfortunately, due to the powers that be in the White House and to the leadership then on the other side, it was impossible for us to legislate in the interest of the country and in the interest of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. The big financiers had the ear and confidence of President Hoover, and we realized then that it was useless, that it was a waste of time trying to force any such legislation, because we had been informed, we had been warned, that no legislation that would even be thought to be inflation would receive any consideration from President Hoover, who was then in control.

I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman explain why that releases him of all responsibility for bringing it up in the Democratic-controlled House? Why did the gentleman not do it? Why did he not set an example?

Mr. SABATH. Because the gentleman realizes that passing such a bill in the House would not mean it would be passed by the Senate and be signed if the Senate had passed it. We knew that it would be vetoed, as other measures in the interest of the people were vetoed by President Hoover.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield further.

I say to the gentlemen who are interested in securing relief for the country that this bill will provide relief. It does provide for inflation, if you choose to call it that. It takes care of the silver proposition, and you gentlemen who come from the western section of the country should, I feel, recognize that this is a start in the right direction; that there is a provision here for issuing at least $200,000,000 in silver certificates. This will not be fiat money. The currency provided for in this bill will be valid currency.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman also admit that this bill is for relief to the foreign debtors of the United States?

Mr. SABATH. No; I do not, because as far as the gentleman knows this administration will not do anything that will deprive the United States of its rights. Up to this time we have not been able to collect anything, and I would rather collect as much as we can than nothing at all, as was proposed by the Republican administration?

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. If this currency expansion and the raising of price levels throughout the world is accomplished, it will aid the suffering debtors in every land.

Mr. SABATH. No doubt it will, and that is the underlying reason for this legislation.

Now, there are some people who are under the impression, and it has been heralded by the big-moneyed interests and their publicists, that we have $6,000,000,000 in currency in circulation. That is not correct. Up to a short time ago we did have $6,000,000,000 of currency outstanding, but not in circulation. We have today not even half that amount in circulation, for, if you deduct the $700,000,000 of our currency that is held in foreign countries, the $600,000,000 that has been lost, destroyed, or unredeemed, the amount that is in safety deposit boxes, the balance, as you can readily see, that should be in circulation, but is not, because it is held by the bankers who refuse to provide credit for legitimate business of the country, is not even $3,000,000,000. This bill will provide credit for legitimate business and not for the gambling and speculating fraternity which group our great financial manipulators always aimed to aid. [Applause.]

This rule makes in order resolution 124 that concurs with Senate amendment 85, which provides for additional power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, and should be, the same as the amendment itself, adopted, as it gives power to the President to provide for a three-billion-dollar currency expansion, which currency will be used to pay our obligations and to purchase, as far as possible, outstanding bonds.

I am satisfied that it will be of aid and benefit not only to our domestic trade, but to our foreign trade and commerce as well. No doubt it will increase the prices of commodities, create employment, ease credit, and, above all, put needed currency into circulation.

Every Member, whether he is a Democrat or a Republican, who has the interest of the country at heart, should demonstrate his loyalty by casting his vote for this resolution so that we can proceed to enact this needed and beneficial bill as speedily as possible.

I wish to impress upon you gentlemen on the other side that not only we but people throughout the country at large have confidence in President Roosevelt, for he has clearly demonstrated his great statesmanship and desire to relieve the country from the unprecedented crisis. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, my Democratic opponent in the last election criticized what he was pleased to call my belief in legislation by committees. I wonder what he would think and do if he had been elected and were a Member of the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives at the present time, and had to act upon this rule which proposes to do away with the consideration by committees even of such important legislation as is contained in these Senate amendments. We do not have the benefit of the recommendation of any committee of the House in the consideration of this legislation. It comes to us fully prepared from sources, the Members know not where, without any consideration by a standing committee of the House, without any consideration by a conference or any other committee. We are obliged to vote it either up or down without any chance to read it under the 5-minute rule or to offer amendments to or to debate the different sections. I wonder what he would think of this procedure in view of his criticism of the consideration of bills by committees, because such consideration was not enough in the open. It is, of course, a waste of energy for anyone to get unduly excited over things he cannot prevent, and there are not enough Republican Members of the House to prevent the passage of gag rules in this Congress, no matter how much they cut off debate or consideration of important legislation. But it is well to keep the record straight, so that no one can charge us in the future with having consented to such procedure. We can at least protest against it.

What is proposed here today? By the procedure outlined today it is proposed, among other things, to pass a piece of legislation which the father of it declared in the Senate was the most important piece of legislation ever introduced in any parliamentary body within the last 6,000 years without its ever having been considered by any committee of the House, or without being sent to conference, and, as a matter of fact, without any real consideration by the House itself. The House has had no part in drafting it. It must vote it up or down without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i." The rule provides that the bill shall be taken from the Speaker's table, amendments 1 to 84, inclusive, shall be disagreed to and amendment no. 85 shall be concurred in. All three propositions are incorporated in the resolution and must be voted upon together. Senate amendment no. 85, or this most important piece of legislation to come before any parliamentary body in 6,000 years, is to be voted upon without even being read in the House. It is taken from the Speaker's table and passed at the same time or in the same motion that sends the rest of the bill to conference. Let no one underestimate the importance of the action we are about to take. The author of this Senate amendment no. 85, in addition to saying that it was the most important legislative proposal to come before any parliamentary body in 6,000 years, declared in substance that one of its purposes was to transfer $200,000,000,000 from those who now have them to the debtor class, to transfer $200,000,000,000 from the creditor to the debtor class.

Does the Membership of this House want to pass such important legislation without reading it even? Does it want to abdicate its functions as a legislative body to any such extent as this? We have gone a long way in this direction during this session of Congress, but I submit we have never before gone quite as far as it is proposed to go here this afternoon. This important legislation is to be voted upon and passed; we are to rubber stamp it, rather, without giving it any real consideration at all.

The unfairness of the situation is apparent. The bill contains several distinct and far-reaching legislative proposals, only one of which was in the bill as it originally passed the House of Representatives. The original bill, as it went to the Senate, only contained the allotment plan for farm relief. The Senate added to that, by way of amendment, the important cost-of-production feature, and the bill, which was passed separately in the House of Representatives, providing for the refinancing of farm mortgages. These amendments were added to the bill in the Senate, in addition to the so-called "inflation amendment", which, in itself, contains four distinct proposals, namely, first, the provision relating to the acceptance by our Government from foreign governments of silver to apply on their indebtedness to us; second, the provision relating to the issuance of paper money; third, the provision relating to open-market operations by the Federal Reserve banks; and fourth, the provision relating to the revaluation of the gold dollar.

Members may be in favor of one or more of these provisions and opposed to others. Under this rule they will have no opportunity to express themselves by their vote for or against any one of them separately. They must vote for or against all of them together. It is unfair to put Members in that position. Such procedure is not the way to legislate. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a fair rule for the consideration of this legislation under the circumstances and the emergency that exists today.

My good friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] rather took the attitude that the rule was unfair, that we were taking this legislation from the committees of the House. So far as the agricultural features of this bill are concerned, they have been adequately considered by the House committee and we are, by our decision, if we vote this resolution through, giving the conferees from this House the right to stand upon the integrity of the House bill, confer with the Senate upon the amendments with reference to the agricultural features of the bill.

So far as amendment no. 85 is concerned covering the expansion of the currency, I think this question has been considered by every Congress, has been debated for the last 50 years. From the days of 1873 when silver was demonetized down through the campaigns of Mr. Bryan and down through the last campaign we have discussed this very question of the quantitative theory of money, or that commodity prices can be raised by increasing the quantities of the circulating medium.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Since the gentleman has been in Congress has there ever been before the House of Representatives in concrete form a provision to revalue the gold dollar such as is embraced in Senate amendment no. 85?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think the gentleman is right; there never has been; but there never has been an emergency created through the manipulation of the banking laws of the country and the draining of the money from the small country banks to the big city banks for gambling purposes, a manipulation that drains the money from the people, from business, and hoards it in the financial institutions of the country. Never has such an emergency existed. We propose to confer upon the President half a dozen formulas, any one of which he may use with all the force, power, and understanding he has to meet this emergency; and I for one am ready to vote on the proposition as it stands.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. This question has been before the committees of the House, and one of the leading Members on the other side of the aisle, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGugin] has spoken in favor of it time and time again.

Mr. GREENWOOD. This is a fair rule, because it allows 6 hours of debate; and the rule is well adjusted to the proposal before the House, because the debate is confined to the Senate amendment expanding the currency.

After we have had 6 hours of debate, which will be practically all consumed on this very proposition, then we have the right to vote the proposition up or down.

If this House is not in favor of this amendment, which has been attached to this bill by the Senate, it can vote down this resolution and then go ahead and formulate any measure it wants to; but if the majority of the Members of the House are for this legislation in this day of emergency, they ought to have the right to say so, and under this rule they have it. I think a majority of the House, almost a three-quarters majority, will be in favor of this measure as it now stands.

The expansion of the currency is the best method to raise commodity and land prices, and if there is one thing that is more menacing to our civilization and to the future perpetuity of our country it is falling prices of commodities and farm lands.

We believe this is a short cut to bring up these commodity prices so these men upon the farms, wage earners, and the business men of America may pay back the debts of America with the same kind of a dollar they borrowed. [Applause.]

Talk about a sound dollar! There never was a time in the history of America when the dollar of the United States was as unsound as it is today when it is measured in commodity prices.

A cheap dollar is not necessarily an unsound dollar. If there is anything America needs now, it is a cheaper dollar with which to buy commodities. We are bearing down upon farmers with foreclosures and bankruptcies; and even the failures of our banks are caused by the value of the dollar being out of all proportion to the value of commodities.

The Democratic Party is pledged to a sound currency. There is nothing in this measure that will destroy the soundness of our currency. The Federal Reserve banks now have the authority to obtain currency from the Treasury upon certain kinds of commercial paper, but they are not seizing this opportunity. The banks of America are not putting out the moneys and the credits available under this system. So we are conferring upon the President of the United States in this emergency several different methods or formulas for him to use to produce a situation where commodity prices will be better and where the debtor class in America can take advantage of it to help pay their debts.

As I said, the banks are not using all the powers they have to put out this money. We propose under this measure to allow the United States Treasury to purchase Government bonds on the market, thus exchanging currency for a frozen credit of the Government.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL—FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. WOODRUM, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H.R. 5389) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 61), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. TABER reserved all points of order on the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present minority views on this bill, H.R. 5389, signed by 14 members of the committee, which I ask to have printed along with the majority report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the minority views will be printed with the majority report.

There was no objection.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, ceaseless agitation in Congress for inflation of the currency as a cure for our economic ills has won many adherents. Carefully prepared and subtle propaganda has intensified public interest in the subject. Unemployment, bank failures, low prices, foreclosures, and general distress create an attitude of mind which is ready to accept any suggestion that promises relief, even though the plan proposed whenever and wherever it has been previously tried has ultimately aggravated the suffering, disaster, and distress it sought to relieve.

The preliminary steps for inflation have been taken. Thus far the procedure as a condition precedent to uncontrolled inflation is not unlike that pursued in Germany in 1914. At that time the estimated gold in Germany amounted to about $1,000,000,000, of which $687,000,000 was coined and in circulation and about $313,000,000 was in the form of bars held in the Reichsbank and the four small note-issuing banks to buttress the notes which they issued.

On the outbreak of the war the Reichsbank's gold reserve amounted to $344,000,000, equal to 66 percent of all her note issues. There was in circulation $550,000,000 in gold coins and $150,000,000 in silver to cover bank notes amounting to $500,000,000 and Treasury notes amounting to $48,000,000.

The German Government made patriotic appeals to the men and women to take their gold coins to the bank and receive marks for them. As a result the gold stock in the Reichsbank doubled. The export of gold was prohibited to the citizen but the Government was not prohibited from doing so. It is needless to say that the Government did export gold. Now let us take our present situation in the United States.

The bill (H.R. 1491), prepared by President Roosevelt, presented to Congress on March 9, 1933, and passed the same day, clothes the Secretary of the Treasury with dictatorial power over the gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates owned by individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations. The President may require every person in the United States to turn his money, viz, gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates, into the Treasury and compel him to receive therefor "an equivalent amount of any other form of coin or currency coined or issued under the laws of the United States." Failure on the part of a citizen to surrender his gold coin, gold bullion, or gold certificates subjects the citizen to a penalty twice the value of the gold or gold certificates.

Since the enactment of this legislation on March 9, 1933, the people in possession of gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates have surrendered them in large volume to the banks and to the Treasury of the United States. Many persons have surrendered them as an act of patriotism and a few have done so from fear of the strong arm of the Government.

The Government has given in exchange for the gold coin and gold certificates so surrendered a new currency, redeemable neither in gold nor in silver.

Each new generation of inflationists pride themselves that they have discovered something new about the operation of paper money. There is no new invention for making it "as good as gold, no difficulty connected with it which has not been experienced, no phenomenon of its development for which we have not abundant analogies."

It may be profitable to turn back the pages of history—our own history first—and review the mischief and ruin inflation has brought to our own people. The American Colonies prior to the Revolution had each tried inflation from time to time with disastrous results. The bitter lesson of the depreciation of the colonial paper currency and the suffering it caused the people had not been well learned even at the outbreak of the War for Independence. A week after the Battle of Bunker Hill the issue of $2,000,000 worth of bills of credit was authorized by Congress. Between 1775 and 1779 Congress issued $240,000,000 in bills of credit.

As the demand for more money increased, the printing press was worked overtime and dozens of men had to be hired to sign all the bills issued. Every device then known was invoked to make the currency pass at par. Appeals to patriotism and threats of punishment failed to stop depreciation of this ever-increasing volume of printing-press money.

In January 1776 Congress passed the following resolution:

Resolved, therefore, That any person who shall hereafter be so lost to all virtue and regard for his country as to refuse to receive said bills in payment, or obstruct or discourage the currency or circulation thereof . . . shall be deemed, published, and treated as an enemy in this country and precluded from all trade or intercourse with the inhabitants of these Colonies.

Did this have any effect in stabilizing the purchasing power of a worthless paper dollar?

By 1779 one paper dollar was worth only 2 or 3 cents apiece. Six months later Congress provided for redemption at the rate of 40 paper dollars to 1 "hard" or silver dollar—a repudiation of 97 percent. The currency issued by local institutions depreciated even more. In Virginia notes finally passed at the rate of 1,000 to 1. A pair of shoes could be purchased at that time for $5,000. After 1780 the depreciation of the currency was out of all control, and in 1781 it ceased to act as currency at all.

Pelotiah Webster, reviewing the conditions that existed under this period of inflation, wrote in 1791:

The fatal error, that the credit and currency of the Continental money could be kept up and supported by acts of compulsion, entered so deep into the minds of Congress and all departments of administration through the States that no consideration of justice, religion, or policy, or even experience of its utter inefficacy, could eradicate it. It seemed to be a kind of obstinate delirium, totally deaf to every argument drawn from justice and right, from its natural tendency and mischief, from common sense, and even common safety. This ruinous principle was continued in practice for 5 successive years and appeared in all shapes and forms, i. e., in legal tender acts, in limitations of prices, in lawful and threatening declarations, in penal laws with dreadful and ruinous punishments, and in every other way that could be devised, and all executed with a relentless severity, by the highest authorities then in being, viz, by Congress, by assemblies and conventions of the States, by committees of inspection (whose powers in those days were nearly sovereign), and even by military force; and, though men of all descriptions stood trembling before this monster of force, without daring to lift a hand against it, during all this period, yet its unrestrained energy proved ever effectual to its purposes, but in every instance increased the evils it was designed to remedy, and destroyed the benefits it was intended to promote. At best its utmost effect was like water sprinkled on a blacksmith's forge, which indeed deadens the flame for a moment but never fails to increase the heat and force of the internal fire. Many thousands of families of full and easy fortune were ruined by these fatal measures and lie in ruins to this day, without the least benefit to the country or to the great and noble cause in which we were then engaged.

Continuing, Mr. Webster said:

I do not mention these things from any pleasure I have in opening the wounds of my country, or exposing its errors, but with a hope that our fatal mistakes may be a caution and a warning to future financiers who may live and act in any country which may happen to be in circumstances similar to ours at that time.

A strong appeal has been made by the inflationists to the labor organizations of the country. Again let us examine the record and see what uncontrolled inflation will mean to labor. We find an illustration in the case of the "greenbacks."

The Government, greatly in need of funds, began in 1862 to issue bills unsupported by specie, but legal tender for all debts, except the payment of custom duties and interest on the public debt. Notes to the value of $150,000,000 were issued in 1862. Congress issued more and more "greenbacks." By June 1864 there was outstanding $431,000,000 of this printing-press money.

No one at this day and age is likely to dispute the accepted economic law that changes in wages tend to lag behind changes in prices. This was well illustrated during the "greenback" inflation. Official reports show that prices rose from a base of 100 in 1860 to 217 in 1865, while wages rose from 100 to only 143 during the same period. The real wages of labor dropped from 100 to 66 between 1860 and 1865.

I find that the record discloses that when some of the public men of that day had the courage to oppose inflation and pointed out that irredeemable paper had always wrought ruin, the inflationists replied that our resources were unlimited and that these precedents did not apply to us. When it was prophesied that the paper would depreciate and that we should not be able to retrace our steps, the prophets of evil indignantly pointed to the "pledged faith of the United States" and asked if they thought that would be violated. No warning was heeded; the experience of the past carried no weight with the advocates of inflation. Even the indictment of paper money by Daniel Webster as late as 1836 was disregarded. When it was sought to renew the charter of the United States Bank, which was soon to expire, he said:

A disordered currency is one of the greatest practical evils. It undermines the virtues necessary for the support of the social system, and encourages propensities destructive to its happiness. It wars against industry, frugality, and economy, and it fosters the evil spirits of extravagance and speculation. Of all the contrivances for cheating the laboring classes of mankind, none has been more effectual than that which deludes them with paper money. This is the most effectual of inventions to fertilize the rich man's field by the sweat of the poor man's brow.

Ordinary tyranny, oppression, excessive taxation, these bear lightly on the happiness of the mass of the community, compared with fraudulent currencies and the robberies committed by depreciated paper. Our own history has recorded for our instruction enough and more than enough, of the demoralizing tendency, the injustice, and the intolerable oppression on the virtuous and well disposed of a degraded paper currency authorized by law, or in any way countenanced by government.

These admonitions fell on deaf ears in 1862 and 1865. Inflation was launched and all the evils of prior inflationary periods followed.

From early Colonial times to the present moment, whenever there has been a depression, whether caused by speculation or by war, and the day of payment arrives, the advocates of inflation have proposed this method as the best solution of the problem of unemployment, low commodity prices, and the payment of debts. It is in the dark hour of depression and gloom, and only at such times, that currency inflation is urged as a cure for our national ills.

Nations like Austria and Russia tried inflation for generations, sinking deeper and deeper, crippled in their military and industrial strength, not knowing how to endure it or how to get rid of it.

A brief review of conditions in Germany after she was fully embarked upon the turbulent sea of inflation may give cause for some reflection. As I pointed out, she called in her gold and gave in return irredeemable paper money, the mark.

A few excerpts from the correspondents of the leading papers will suffice to show what followed.

The Times correspondent on July 5, 1923, reports:

Feeling among the working classes is extraordinarily bitter. Bricklayers are striking for wages of 12,000 marks (8 cents) an hour. Metal workers were offered 9,000 marks (3 cents) an hour and refused. The lowest omnibus fare in Berlin is now 1,500 marks; a little piece of veal, enough to make a stew for two people, costs 60,000 marks.

On July 22, 1923, the Times' correspondent reported:

I was amazed when I found today that one had to pay 24,000 marks for a ham sandwich, whereas yesterday in the same cafe a ham sandwich cost only 14,000 marks.

On July 25 the correspondent reported:

The shortage of money has been followed by a shortage of food. Very little meat is obtainable, still less butter and vegetables. There are practically no potatoes.

The Daily Mail correspondent reported July 26:

The printing presses are working day and night to supply the Reichsbank with 2,000,000,000 mark notes daily, but there are still not enough to go around. . . . The cashier of my bank handed me 4,000,000 marks in 1,000-mark notes, each worth less than half a farthing (one fourth of a cent).

The Daily Mail correspondent on August 6 telegraphed his paper:

Villagers who used to send butter to Berlin are no longer troubling to do so. They already have crates in their cottages packed with worthless paper money. "Why get more?"

On July 27 the big Berlin newspaper Germania became hysterical and cried out through its columns:

It is a situation for a dictator. The conditions call for a Mussolini in a bullet-proof armor with a revolver in each hand.

On August 14 the newspaper correspondence made note of an outbreak of disorder all over the country. Let me quote from one of them:

Near Leipzig a so-called "Communist control committee" marched out of town and forced the farmers and large landowners to give up their cattle, which they slaughtered on the spot and the meat sold cheaply. In other places crowds swarmed out into the fields and dug up potatoes. At Hanover men seized the food warehouses; the police fired upon them, killing 12 and wounding about 50.

The illustrations I have given do not even touch the appalling human misery caused by the inflation of German currency.

This is the program of hope; this is the new deal which the inflationists now present to their troubled, bewildered, and baffled countrymen. [Applause.]

THIRD DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. BUCHANAN, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H.R. 5390) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, Report No. 62, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. TABER reserved all points of order.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, before yielding time to the last speaker on the rule on this side I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on the rule be given the right to revise their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, the proposition before us is that we take the most important bill that has come before this body in a score of years, dealing with the currency of the country, and after debate of 5 hours, vote upon its passage, with its numerous provisions, without the opportunity of discussing and considering the various subjects it contains and without an opportunity of offering a single amendment. In the 18 years I have been here I never heard such a preposterous proposition advocated by any party or by any leadership.

What is the purpose of this unseemly haste, this gagging, and handcuffing of the Membership of this House? Admittedly, the leadership is not afraid of the small Republican minority on my left. What are they afraid of? Why do they not dare legislate as this House of Representatives was intended to legislate? They are afraid of you, the rank and file of the Members of the Democratic Party here on this floor. You are the ones they are afraid of.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I will tell the gentleman what they are afraid of. They are afraid of a continuance of this disastrous delay that is wrecking the country.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Was not the gentleman who just asked the question one of the Democratic Members who would not go along with President Roosevelt on his economy program?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Certainly; he was.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from New Jersey wanted to hasten that measure through and did hasten it through under what he now calls a "gag rule."

Mr. CLARKE of New York. And the gentleman did not support that measure.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I did not support any gag rule and have not supported any such rule at this session of Congress.

As a matter of fact, this proposition contains four distinct provisions. It contains a provision to have controlled expansion of the currency through the functioning of the reserve banks, and there is not a handful of Republicans in this House who would not heartily support that in this emergency. It contains a proposition that the printing presses be started and that $3,000,000,000 of paper money, without anything back of it at all, be issued to the people of this country. What relation is there between these two propositions? Why can we not vote yes on one and no on the other, if that is the way we feel about it?

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield again to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. As a matter of fact, does not the gentleman know that every dollar of this money will be interchangeable with every other dollar of our money under the Gold Standard Act of 1900, and have all the gold and silver and wealth of this country behind every dollar of it?

Mr. LEHLBACH. And the cheap money will drag down your good money. Yes; it will be interchangeable, but it will be interchangeable at the price of the cheapest money in circulation.

Mr. RANKIN. We are going to drag it down to some extent, it is true, but the dollar is now too high. That is the trouble in this country.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Did I understand the gentleman to say that $3,000,000,000 of this currency did not have anything back of it?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; under the second provision with respect to the act of 1862—the greenbacks that do not have any backing.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Is it not the purpose to have $3,000,000,000 of bonds in support of the $3,000,000,000 of currency?

Mr. LEHLBACH. If your money is no good, you will undermine your credit and the bonds will not be any more good than the money.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit a further question, in the last session of Congress, during the past administration, when the Glass-Borah amendment was tacked on to the home-loan bank bill as a rider, which permitted the issuance of $984,000,000 of currency against $984,000,000 of 3½-percent bonds, I should like for the gentleman to tell the House wherein there is the slightest difference in soundness or in strength between the money that will be issued under this bill, amounting to $3,000,000,000 backed by $3,000,000,000 of bonds, and the money that was issued under the Glass-Borah amendment to the bill that your President, Mr. Hoover, signed. [Applause.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. They were existing bonds on the market at the time.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And these bonds are existing bonds on the market and they will be taken off the market. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the rest of the time to myself.

Mr. Speaker, the Republicans are trying to ensnare some of the Members on this side of the House. They take the floor and ask that this Senate amendment 85 be read for amendment, that it be divided so they may vote on the different features of it. As a matter of fact, the Republican money brains as compared to our so-called "brain trust" has issued a statement that they are against each and every feature of amendment 85.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know to whom the gentleman refers in the statement that he has made, but if I am one of them, the gentleman is entirely in error.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman state what feature he is not opposed to?

Mr. SNELL. I said that we were willing to take the first, but we were absolutely opposed to the deflation of the gold dollar by the President. If the gentleman had read my statement with understanding he would not have made the statement he did.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I read the statement, whether I could understand it or not. I also read a statement issued by Mr. Mills. I read that, too, in anticipation of what might be said here.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman is quoting people who are not here.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will include also the statement of Mr. Mellon.

Mr. SNELL. Nor is he here.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Would the gentleman include the keynoter of the Republican convention who voted for the bill, as well as the minority leader of the Senate?

Mr. SNELL. Here is one gentleman at the convention who did not vote for it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, I am glad we have the idea of the brain trust. I lived through those days, which you might call "the special interest days", when legislation was not drawn by any brain trust, and it was not drawn even in Washington. We may have some professors writing legislation, but it is not being done in Pittsburgh or Wall Street, as was done for 12 years. [Applause.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Who wrote the money plank in the Democratic platform of 1932?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know, except that a Member in another body stated that he did.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman explain to the House the money plank in the platform of 1932?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, I think all of them have read it and most of them understand it, outside of myself. [Laughter.]

Now, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] said that the Republicans did not propose to get excited about this at all—they were not going to get excited. It occurred to me that for 3 years this country was in this condition, and the Republicans, from their President down, never took enough interest in it to get excited about it at all. So they left us holding the bag when we came in on the 4th of March.

Now, they say we are building up a dictatorship. We are not doing any such thing. Get that right. A dictator can only succeed by force. What we are building up and what this country has not had since 1919 is a leader; we are building up a leadership and not a dictatorship. [Applause.]

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. HOEPEL. Is it not true that Hitler took the leadership in Germany because the Reichstag turned over its authority to him?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, if the gentleman starts talking about Hitler he will get me off on another subject. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, if we only take the time from the day they wrote that plank in the Democratic platform, there has ever been such a crystallization of sentiment in the country for any one thing as there has been for the inflation of the dollar, not only in this House but through the rank and file of the people of the country. It is almost unanimous. The attacks upon it from the other side are purely political. Mr. Mills and other people attack it. They are talking about sound money, the money that the creditor holds now, and which the same creditors are not lending out to help the country in this emergency.

The business of the country, the money interests of the country, are leaving everything to Government and are asking the Government to do everything, and business is doing nothing in my estimation to help the people out of this situation. Surely the banks which control the money are doing nothing. If any one thing was ever needed in the opinion of the American people, it is the inflation of currency to meet the increased purchasing value of the dollar. In all of those speeches, even in the statement by the distinguished minority leader or the speech by Mr. Mills, or the speeches on the other side of the Capitol, there never was one word said about the increased purchasing value of the dollar. They never dared touch on that point, because that would have defeated their argument.

Mr. HOEPEL and Mr. ELTSE of California rose.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, I would rather yield over here on the Republican side.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will the gentleman explain how this inflation is going to increase the purchasing power of the unemployed army in the United States?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the intent of it, and I believe the people who are thoroughly behind it have the utmost faith that this is the most important piece of legislation before the Congress by which to meet that very thing.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. O'CONNOR. On this first resolution? That merely fixes the time for debate.

Mr. SNELL. I know that, but we want a record vote on this resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 261, nays 113, not voting 57, as follows:

[Roll No. 27]

YEAS—261

Abernethy	Corning	Hancock, N.C.	Major
Adair	Cravens	Harlan	Maloney, Conn.
Adams	Crosby	Harter	Maloney, La.
Allgood	Cross	Hastings	Mansfield
Almon	Crosser	Healey	Marland
Arnold	Crowe	Henney	Martin, Colo.
Auf der Heide	Crump	Hildebrandt	May
Ayers, Mont.	Cullen	Hill, Ala.	Mead
Ayres, Kans.	Cummings	Hill, Knute	Meeks
Beam	Darden	Hill, Sam B.	Miller
Biermann	Dear	Hoidale	Milligan
Bland	Deen	Hornor	Mitchell
Bloom	Delaney	Hughes	Monaghan
Boehne	DeRoven	Imhoff	Montet
Boland	Dickinson	Jacobsen	Moran
Boylan	Dies	Jeffers	Morehead
Brennan	Dingell	Jenckes	Murdock
Brooks	Disney	Johnson, Okla.	Nesbit
Brown, Ky.	Dobbins	Johnson, Tex.	Norton
Brunner	Dockweller	Johnson, W.Va.	O'Connell
Buchanan	Doughton	Jones	O'Connor
Buck	Douglass	Keller	O'Malley
Bulwinkle	Doxey	Kelly, Ill.	Oliver, Ala.
Burch	Drewry	Kemp	Oliver, N.Y.
Burke, Calif.	Driver	Kennedy, Md.	Owen
Burke, Nebr.	Duffey	Kennedy	Palmsano
Busby	Duncan, Mo.	Kleberg	Parker, Ga.
Byrns	Eagle	Kloeb	Parks
Cady	Elcher	Kniffin	Parsons
Caldwell	Ellzey, Miss.	Kocalkowski	Patman
Cannon, Mo.	Faddis	Kopplemann	Peavey
Cannon, Wis.	Farley	Kramer	Peterson
Carden	Fitzgibbons	Lamneck	Pettengill
Carpenter, Kans.	Fitzpatrick	Lanzetta	Peyser
Carpenter, Nebr.	Fletcher	Larrabee	Polk
Cartwright	Ford	Lee, Mo.	Pou
Cary	Foulkes	Lehr	Prall
Castellow	Gasque	Lewis, Colo.	Ragon
Celler	Gavagan	Lindsay	Ramsay
Chapman	Gillespie	Lloyd	Ramspeck
Christianson	Gillette	Lozier	Randolph
Church	Glover	Ludlow	Rankin
Clark, N.C.	Goldsborough	McCarthy	Rayburn
Cochran, Mo.	Granfield	McClintic	Reilly
Coffin	Gray	McCormack	Richardson
Colden	Green	McDuffie	Robertson
Cole	Greenwood	McFarlane	Robinson
Collins, Miss.	Gregory	McGrath	Rogers, N.H.
Colmer	Griffin	McKeown	Rogers, Okla.
Condon	Griswold	McReynolds	Romjue
Cooper, Tenn.	Haines	McSwain	Rudd

Ruffin	Smith, Wash.	Thomason, Tex.	West, Tex.
Sabath	Spence	Thompson, Ill.	White
Sadowski	Steagall	Truax	Whittington
Sanders	Strong, Tex.	Turner	Wilcox
Sandlin	Stubbs	Umstead	Willford
Schaefer	Studley	Utterback	Williams
Schuetz	Sullivan	Vinson, Ga.	Wilson
Schulte	Summers, Tex.	Vinson, Ky.	Wolverton
Scrugham	Sutphin	Wallgren	Wood, Ga.
Sears	Swank	Walter	Wood, Mo.
Secrest	Sweeney	Warren	Woodrum
Shallenberger	Tarver	Wearin	Young
Sirovich	Taylor, Colo.	Weaver
Sisson	Terrell	Weideman
Smith, Va.	Thom	West, Ohio

NAYS—113

Allen	Dowell	Johnson, Minn.	Seger
Andrew, Mass.	Dunn	Kahn	Shoemaker
Arens	Eaton	Kelly, Pa.	Simpson
Bacharach	Edmonds	Kinzer	Sinclair
Bacon	Eltse, Calif.	Knutson	Snell
Bakewell	Englebright	Kurtz	Somers, N.Y.
Beck	Evans	Lambertson	Stalker
Beedy	Fish	Lambeth	Stokes
Black	Focht	Lehlbach	Strong, Pa.
Blanchard	Foss	Lemke	Swick
Bolleau	Frear	Luce	Taber
Bolton	Gibson	Lundeen	Taylor, Tenn.
Britten	Gilchrist	McFadden	Thurston
Brumm	Goodwin	McGugin	Tinkham
Burnham	Goss	McLean	Tobey
Carter, Calif.	Guyer	Mapes	Traeger
Carter, Wyo.	Hancock, N.Y.	Marshall	Treadway
Chase	Hartley	Martin, Mass.	Turpin
Claborn	Hess	Merritt	Wadsworth
Clarke, N.Y.	Higgins	Millard	Watson
Cochran, Pa.	Hoeppel	Mott	Welch
Collins, Calif.	Hollister	Moynihan	Whitley
Connolly	Holmes	Parker, N.Y.	Wigglesworth
Cooper, Ohio	Hooper	Powers	Withrow
Crowther	Hope	Ransley	Wolcott
De Priest	Howard	Reece	Woodruff
Dirksen	Huddleston	Reid, Ill.
Ditter	James	Rich
Dondero	Jenkins	Rogers, Mass.

NOT VOTING—57

Andrews, N.Y.	Culkin	Kennedy, N.Y.	Pierce
Bailey	Darrow	Kerr	Reed, N.Y.
Bankhead	Dickstein	Kvale	Richards
Belter	Doutrich	Lanham	Shannon
Berlin	Durgan, Ind.	Lea, Calif.	Smith, W.Va.
Blanton	Fernandez	Lesinski	Snyder
Brand	Flesinger	Lewis, Md.	Taylor, S.C.
Brown, Mich.	Flannagan	McLeod	Underwood
Browning	Fuller	McMillan	Waldron
Buckbee	Fulmer	Martin, Oreg.	Werner
Carley	Gambrell	Montague	Wolfenden
Cavichia	Gifford	Muldowney	Zioncheck
Chavez	Hamilton	Musselwhite
Connery	Hart	O'Brien
Cox	Kee	Perkins

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Richards (for) with Mr. Reed of New York (against).
 Mr. Bankhead (for) with Mr. Darrow (against).
 Mr. Underwood (for) with Mr. Cavichia (against).
 Mr. Kennedy of New York (for) with Mr. McLeod (against).
 Mr. O'Brien (for) with Mr. Doutrich (against).
 Mr. Flannagan (for) with Mr. Muldowney (against).
 Mr. Musselwhite (for) with Mr. Perkins (against).
 Mr. Brown of Michigan (for) with Mr. Wolfenden (against).
 Mr. Werner (for) with Mr. Culkin (against).
 Mr. Fernandez (for) with Mr. Waldron (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Blanton with Mr. Gifford.
 Mr. Bailey with Mr. Buckbee.
 Mr. Lanham with Mr. Andrews of New York.
 Mr. Gambrell with Mr. Kvale.
 Mr. Carley with Mr. Pierce.
 Mr. Dickstein with Mr. Belter.
 Mr. Hart with Mr. Lesinski.
 Mr. Kerr with Mr. Durgan.
 Mr. Martin of Oregon with Mr. Berlin.
 Mr. Lewis of Maryland with Mr. Zioncheck.
 Mr. Montague with Mr. Taylor of South Carolina.
 Mr. Connery with Mr. Kee.
 Mr. Brand with Mr. Hamilton.
 Mr. Browning with Mr. Smith of West Virginia.
 Mr. Fuller with Mr. Chavez.
 Mr. Fulmer with Mr. Shannon.
 Mr. McMillan with Mr. Flesinger.
 Mr. Lea of California with Mr. Cox.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I arrived too late to vote. If permitted to vote, I would have voted "aye."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I have a telegram from the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. UNDERWOOD, who states he is unavoidably absent, and that if present he would vote

"aye" upon this rule, and also upon the rule which will be voted upon later on. The same is true of the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. FLANNAGAN, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. BROWNING.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of constitutional privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago I introduced in the House a resolution which was duly referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and which has not as yet been reported upon.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

Mr. TREADWAY. I understand the matter has been duly considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, but as yet no report has been submitted to the House.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman, but I do not wish to be taken off the floor.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] has no right to raise a question of the privilege of the House without introducing a resolution at the time. The gentleman is entirely out of order.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will abide in patience for a moment or two, I will introduce the resolution.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman should do it before he makes any remarks. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TREADWAY. The Speaker recognized me to make a statement in relation to the question of personal privilege, as I understood it. The gentleman cannot take me off my feet.

Mr. RANKIN. He arose to a question of the privilege of the House, and I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to state the question of constitutional privilege.

Mr. TREADWAY. My question of constitutional privilege is that, in bringing before the House the bill H.R. 3335, certain amendments that were adopted by the Senate violate article—

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that the gentleman should introduce the resolution first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that the gentleman should first introduce the resolution. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House bill (H.R. 3335) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, with the Senate amendments thereto, be returned to the Senate, as a part of said amendments are in the nature of and constitute a revenue bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I make the point of order that the resolution is not in order. It does not constitute a question of the privilege of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, it is extremely important that we finish this debate today. I do not know what the purpose is in undertaking to delay consideration of this bill. I move to lay that resolution on the table.

Mr. RANKIN. Then I withdraw the point of order for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Those favoring taking this vote by the yeas and nays will stand and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] Forty-seven Members have arisen; not a sufficient number.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TREADWAY) there were yeas 170 and noes 51.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote, and I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman has already asked for the yeas and nays, and they were refused.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, may I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TREADWAY. More than one fifth of the Members responding asked for the roll call. The vote was 170 for and 51 against, as declared by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. On the roll call just completed there were 374 Members who answered to their names. One fifth of 374 is 75; therefore, the 47 Members who arose to demand the yeas and nays did not meet the constitutional requirement, and the demand for the yeas and nays was refused.

Mr. SNELL. But, Mr. Speaker, according to the count just made by the Speaker, there were only 221 Members present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot assume that all the Members present stood and voted on the division demanded by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The vote as recorded a moment ago on a roll call showed 374 Members present.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, the total number, according to the Speaker's announcement, was 170 yeas and 51 noes, making a total of 221 Members. Forty-seven would be more than one fifth of that number.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this question has been disposed of. I demand the regular order.

Mr. TREADWAY. And I demand the regular order on the request for a yeas-and-nays vote. Forty-seven Members stood in response to the request for a yeas-and-nays vote, which is a sufficient number for a roll call on the question of laying the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. That was on a division vote. On the demand for the yeas and nays just a moment ago there were 374 Members present, and only 47 seconded the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SNELL. But on the Speaker's announcement there were only 221 present. I should claim that 47 would be sufficient to demand a roll call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair simply announced the vote on that particular division. The Chair does not think that all the Members present voted on the division, particularly when the roll call just completed disclosed 374 Members present.

The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is agreed to.

The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 124

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the bill H.R. 3835 with Senate amendments thereto be, and the same is hereby, taken from the Speaker's table; that all points of order against said bill or Senate amendments thereto shall be considered as waived; that Senate amendments nos. 1 to 84, inclusive, be, and the same are hereby, disagreed to; that Senate amendment no. 85 be, and the same is hereby, concurred in; that the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses be, and the same is hereby, agreed to.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SWANK. Before this bill is sent to conference would it be in order for me to offer a motion to instruct the conferees to substitute H.R. 2855, the Frazier bill, introduced in the House by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE], in lieu of the mortgage provision of title II, page 35, of the bill H.R. 3835?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order to instruct the conferees after the passage of the resolution and before appointment of the conferees.

The Chair would then determine whether the motion is germane or not.

Mr. RANKIN. But, Mr. Speaker, it will not be in order to instruct conferees to put anything in the bill which was not put in the bill by the House or the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri). The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the suffering masses of mankind in the United States are not concerned seriously with the technical rules of procedure or the parliamentary methods employed by their Representatives in Congress in passing legislation to afford relief from the distress in which the Nation finds itself at this hour. The people who sent us here are relying upon us as their Representatives for necessary action to restore normal business activities. They are interested in results. That is the standard by which we are going to be judged. They are going to hold us responsible for results.

It is not unusual for the House to accept important amendments put on as riders to House bills.

This measure is emergency legislation dealing with conditions growing out of an unprecedented emergency. Unusual conditions call for unusual methods. The income of the people of the United States has shrunk from $90,000,000,000 in 1929 to less than half that amount in 1932. Our exports have dwindled from $5,000,000,000 plus to $1,000,000,000 plus since 1929. Our imports have fallen from $4,000,000,000 plus to $1,000,000,000 during the same period. Thousands of bank failures have occurred, tying up $6,000,000,000 or $7,000,000,000. Bank deposits have declined more than $25,000,000,000. Bank credit has declined in like proportion.

More than a million farmers have lost their homes. Urban home owners still in possession of their homes are knocking at the door of Congress for assistance from the Federal Government to enable them to obtain necessary credit to prevent turning their families out of their home. In many instances State, county, and municipal treasuries are empty and without the power of replenishment by taxation. Something like 15,000,000 people out of employment lift their hands, pleading for leadership that will revive business activity and give an opportunity to citizens who want to work to labor and support their families.

The financial structure of the United States is prostrate and in ruins. We face a desperate situation, the like of which no man within the sound of my voice has ever seen.

The debts of our people exceed $200,000,000,000. The price of the commodities with which these debts must be discharged under the existing order, has shrunk 50 percent. It takes 4 bushels of wheat to pay a debt that could have been discharged for 1 bushel when the obligation was incurred. It takes 2 bales of cotton to pay a debt that could have been paid with 1 bale when the debt was contracted. The dollar has enhanced in value until it has lowered the price level, bankrupting farmers, merchants, and all classes of citizens and causing unemployment, destitution, and want. This, too, in the midst of abundant production on our farms and in our factories. Such a dollar is dishonest and unfair. These conditions are intolerable.

I said on this floor in the last session of Congress that in this situation no patriotic American has a moral right to ask for elevation to a position of power and public office who accepts these conditions as final or who is willing to see them continued as the permanent lot of the people of the United States. [Applause.] It was in this spirit, it was the love of country and family, the love of home pulsating in the breasts of the sovereign voters of the United States that made them last year declare for a change in the control of government at Washington.

The legislation now under consideration is, perhaps, the culminating point in the program of the administration pledged to a new deal, to new methods, and to a new order in the financial affairs of the United States.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. HOEPEL. Does the gentleman consider it is a new deal to expand the currency to raise commodity prices, and at the same time take from disabled veterans 30 or 40 percent of their compensation and pensions?

Mr. STEAGALL. Well, maybe we made a mistake in cutting the pay of the veterans. Let us grant that we did. Should we stop there if that was a destructive act? Is not the gentleman willing, and is it not wise, that we go forward and make amends for any error we may have made in one instance, if it was an error? [Applause.]

I will say to the gentleman that it was my privilege to be invited to a conference held at the Treasury of the United States on the 5th day of March, when the new administration was entering upon the tasks confronting it in that trying hour. Every bank in the Nation was closed. The Treasury had confronting it a financing program of nearly $1,000,000,000 that had to be met on the 15th day of March. No citizen of the United States could go to his bank and draw out a dollar of the hard earnings of a lifetime.

Even citizens who had deposited their hard earnings in the Postal Savings banks of the land were just as helpless in the effort to get their money back as were the depositors in the failed commercial banks of the Nation.

These were the conditions that confronted the new administration when it took office on the 4th day of March. These were the tasks that confronted us, and in the effort to preserve the credit of the Government it was thought wise and prudent by our leaders to inaugurate a program of rigid economy in Government expenditures. As a patriotic citizen, as a Member of this House loyal to the leadership chosen by the American people, I cast my vote in that instance, as I have in every instance since then, to uphold and support the chosen leadership of the people into whose hands they have entrusted the task of restoration and recovery. [Applause.]

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. I am asking for information. It is my understanding that Postal Savings deposits increased more than $100,000,000 during the month of March; that they increased from $1,005,600,000 at the end of February 1933 to $1,111,600,000 at the end of March 1933.

Mr. STEAGALL. Oh, yes.

Mr. PATMAN. I cannot understand why people would be so anxious to get their money out of the Postal Savings when they increased more than 10 percent. In July 1930 the Postal Savings deposits amounted to $180,700,000, the largest amount since the institution of the System. In July 1931 the amount was $372,500,000; July 1932 it was $828,500,000; and on March 30, 1933, $1,111,600,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. They were not anxious to get their money because, fortunately, they did not know they could not get it; but, as a matter of fact, as the gentleman knows, the deposits of the savings banks were linked, the same as the Government financing program, with the commercial banks of the country, and if depositors had demanded their deposits, they could not have obtained them out of the Postal Savings System any more easily than they could out of the commercial banks of the country.

These are the conditions that faced the Congress and the administration. When the loyal citizens find out all the problems that had to be met they will continue their confidence in the leadership that now blesses this country with the prospect of happier and brighter days.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. While the gentleman is on the point of bank deposits, the gentleman from Alabama has led the fight in this House for some kind of system of guaranty of bank deposits to save the banks of this country from being destroyed by excited depositors. I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama, if he does not mind being diverted at this point, what the prospects are along this line today?

Mr. STEAGALL. I shall answer my friend before I am through, and I must hasten along because my time is limited.

Mr. McLEAN. May I urge the gentleman not to yield further? I have enjoyed the gentleman's remarks and I hope he will not yield further to anyone.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, what is the trouble? We are told that we have more than $5,000,000,000 of money in circulation in the United States. This is erroneous. It is in existence, but it is not in circulation. According to last reports, the banks themselves have little more than one half billion dollars in actual money in their vaults. A large portion of the cash is held abroad; much of it is in hoarding by private citizens and in the safes and vaults of corporations and large financial institutions not engaged in banking. So that we are suffering from a lack of circulating medium, which is the lifeblood of commerce, agriculture, and industry.

That is what this bill is intended to cure. We want to enlarge the supply of money in order that business may be afforded an ample medium of exchange. It is a stigma upon the financial and political leadership of the United States that our people, in the midst of plenty and abundant production of the necessities of life, have not a system of exchange that will enable them to enjoy the products of their toil and the fruits of their labors. I venture to say that if we had no banks and no circulating media under Government control that cotton farmers of the South and wheat growers of the West have enough common sense and initiative to formulate plans to enable cotton farmers in need of food to exchange cotton for wheat and wheat farmers in need of clothing to exchange wheat for cotton. This depression is not caused by overproduction. Our surpluses are the result of the depression, not its cause. It is little less than blasphemous to attempt to ascribe to Almighty God responsibility for the indefensible mismanagement of the people of this country have had in recent years. It is not true. Such a contention is an insult to intelligent people. A fruitful soil, a bountiful harvest, happy seasons, and a contented, industrious labor are not curses to mankind. An uncontrolled wave of speculation and inflation, followed by destructive contraction of credit and of the circulating medium of the United States, have thrown our economic machinery out of order.

We propose, at least in part, to repair the damage. This measure is not just as I would have it or as some of you would have it, but I am glad to support it. It represents the inauguration of the new deal promised the people of the United States. [Applause.] It is a step in the right direction, and one too long delayed. If I have any fear about this legislation, that fear is that we will not expand the currency to the extent that is necessary to meet the breaking down of the credit structure of this country. [Applause.]

Let me say that our business is not done with currency. People who limit their interest in this problem to the mere matter of currency printed, or to the amount of metallic money in circulation, have only touched a part of the great problem that confronts the people of the Nation. There is another kind of circulating medium, different from silver or gold or printed currency, that is of transcendent importance. It is bank credit, deposit credit, bank checks. Over 90 percent of the business of this country is carried on by the use of bank checks; and we will never solve this problem satisfactorily until we recognize this fact. We must pay due regard to the use of bank checks and the resumption of bank credit in the United States.

The figures show that there was a turn-over of something like $1,200,000,000,000 of bank credit in the United States in 1929. It had shrunk to something like $600,000,000,000, or one half that amount, last year. Six billion dollars will go only a part of the way toward restoring the loss in the circulating medium represented in the breaking down of bank credit and the use of bank checks; certainly it will not reach beyond the requirements of the situation. There is no basis for alarm in the contention that we are entering upon a period of wild and reckless inflation of the currency of the United States.

Someone said we are conferring unusual powers upon the President of the United States. Yes; but when in all history did any President face so many unusual problems as now confront our President? Never in all the years of our past have the people of the Nation imposed such tasks upon a President.

We have given the Federal Reserve Board far more power than that conferred upon the President in this bill. We have intrusted the power to expand and control the currency to the Federal banking system of the country. They have failed to preserve and stabilize proper standards of value in the United States and to maintain a credit system suited to the great commercial, industrial, and agricultural needs of the American people.

The President represents the sovereign people of the Nation, chosen by them for a definite term, for definite tasks, and we are undertaking by this measure to clothe him with the necessary machinery to meet the responsibilities imposed upon him by the people of the United States.

I made reference to the importance of bank credit in response to an inquiry by my friend the able and distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. I will say to him that for 15 years I have sponsored legislation to establish plans for the guaranteeing of deposits in the banks of the United States in order that depositors may trust their banks and leave their cash available for the trade requirements of the country; and above and beyond that, to make it possible for bankers to devote their deposits to the support of trade and commerce instead of living in constant fear of a mob at their doors demanding their deposits.

I am happy to say that we have reasonable hope that we shall be able before the adjournment of this session to follow this bill with its great promise of relief with a measure providing for the insurance of deposits in the banks of the United States. [Applause.]

Now, let me say in conclusion that this bill is not new to many of us. Similar legislation has been considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency. Extensive hearings were held on currency expansion and stabilization by our committee in 1926, again in 1927, again in 1928, and finally in 1932. During the last session of Congress the House of Representatives, under the leadership of the Banking and Currency Committee, passed two measures which, had they been finally enacted, would have averted the serious difficulties that now confront us. I refer to the Goldsborough bill to expand and stabilize the currency, and the bank-deposit guaranty bill, which I had the honor to introduce. In my humble judgment, those two measures, if enacted and properly administered, would have averted the distressing conditions which we are now attempting to relieve. The Goldsborough bill passed the House by a vote of 269 to 60. The other measure passed overwhelmingly without a roll call. When the shouting and the tumult have passed away, the American people will remember that the leadership in this House during the last Congress blazed the path in which we are marching today toward the cherished goal of recovery. [Applause.]

We have chosen a leader who is responsive to the will and wishes and who embodies the hopes and aspirations of the people of the United States. In his hands he holds aloft the colors of civilization. He will bear them to heights to which they have not before been lifted. Throughout the world the people have their eyes fixed on his leadership. They will follow him to new victories for peace and happiness. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly the basic reasons for the amendment which has come over to us from the Senate, which embodies the demands of the so-called "inflationists", it is that there is not enough currency in circulation to accommodate commerce, industry, and agriculture, and to maintain the price level at normal.

I submit to the consideration of this committee the cold facts which to my mind are an absolute denial of the underlying reasons for this inflation legislation. In 1929, when prices were at the peak, there were $4,372,000,000 of monetary gold in this country. On March 31 last we had $4,279,000,000 worth of monetary gold. You will perceive that there is a very slight shrinkage in volume of our yellow-metal holdings. The total amount of money of all kinds in circulation in 1929 was $4,819,000,000. On April 24, 1933, we had $6,038,000,000 and on April 26 we had $5,994,000,000. It will be perceived that there was $1,175,000,000 more of money in circulation on April 26, 1933, than at the peak of 1929.

In the fall of 1929 there were $1,839,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes in circulation and on April 24, 1933, there were $3,454,000,000 of those notes in circulation. Mark you, I am not talking about Federal Reserve bank notes. We will come to that later. These are Federal Reserve notes that I speak of. On April 26, 1933, the last figures available, there were $3,424,000,000 of these Federal Reserve notes in circulation, or an excess of $1,585,000,000 over the volume in circulation in 1929. All of these figures that I have given you apply to currency, both monetary gold and currency in all forms. In the discussion of this problem we must dissociate our ideas of currency from those of bank money, so called. It will be perceived that we have a much larger volume of currency in circulation today with low prices than we had in 1929 with high prices. Nobody can gainsay that.

What is the next step as a matter of logical thought? What are we prepared to do in the way of issuing additional currency without any emergency legislation and despite all the drains upon our reserves? The Federal Reserve banks of the System today have \$1,230,000,000 of excess reserve gold, which, on the basis of a 40-percent reserve requirement, may be multiplied by  $2\frac{1}{2}$  to determine the amount of Federal Reserve notes possible of issue. So that the excess gold in the Reserve banks would enable them tomorrow morning, in theory, if there was a demand for money, for actual currency, to issue \$3,075,000,000 in sound money. The member banks have excess reserves of \$250,000,000, and, on the basis of experience, which has shown that only an average reserve of 7 percent is necessary to maintain the 13, 10, 7, and 3 percent member bank reserves, these member banks, if there were any demand for it, are in a position, without additional legislation, to lend \$3,250,000,000 of money. All this without any emergency legislation! In view of these facts, how can any thoughtful person stand here or in any other forum and declare that our trouble today is lack of currency?

When we come to the question of credit, that is another matter. What is it that makes credit easy? There must, at bottom, be business activity, and from that business activity, which requires the employment of labor, consuming power of the masses results. Both combined bring a demand for credit and a turnover in money payments, which increases velocity of dollars. Attendant upon such a situation is an expansion of credit to meet all the needs of business. There is latent in the existing system, if we do not wreck it, if we do not meddle with it unwisely, full capacity to meet every need of the moment. Let us prove it.

On July 22, 1932, if my memory serves me correctly, we passed the Glass-Borah amendment to the so-called "relief act", authorizing the issuance of $1,000,000,000 of national-bank notes. What was the reason for the passage of that act? It was said that there was not enough currency in circulation, that if we would but approve the Borah amendment banks would immediately rush in and avail themselves of the privilege extended and swell the volume of currency issues. What has happened? In almost a year, of that billion dollars authorized there has been an increase in the volume of national-bank notes of only $200,000,000.

If there was any real demand for currency, the banks would call for more of it. They could get it on short notice. They have not demanded it in any volume. Presently I shall try to tell you why. At the beginning of this session we passed the March 9 act, which authorized the so-called "emergency issuance" of $3,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve bank notes. It was said that we must have it in order to accommodate business. How much of that $3,000,000,000 has been issued? According to the latest figures, the increase in the Federal Reserve bank notes since March 9 is only $29,000,000. Of this $4,000,000,000 of National and Federal Reserve bank notes, whose issuance we have authorized upon the theory that we must come to the relief of the country with more currency, you will see to what a small extent the banks themselves—which are naturally anxious to use as much money as possible, for they must lend money to live—have taken advantage of the increased circulation privilege. What does that mean to anybody who stops to think? Are you inflationists not wrong in your fundamental proposition, namely, that what we need is more currency? I think you are. If you want higher prices, if we are to experience a business revival, there must be something deep down in the business structure that will germinate new business. You cannot by the mere passage of laws make business.

When once business is stimulated by returning confidence—and confidence will never thrive on depreciated money, fear is its inevitable concomitant—but I repeat that when confidence returns and business improves employment will be given the masses, now unfortunately unemployed. Then demand for credits will come. Then the banks already liquid with money can lend. Banks can lend to a man who has a contract to build something. Banks can lend to a man who has an order to manufacture a hundred thousand pairs of shoes, and who will give a mortgage upon the finished product. But when there are no values to loan on, when, because of business stagnation, no values are being created, then banks cannot safely make loans. The banks themselves are suffering on account of this very situation today.

Now, what has happened to this money we have issued at the behest of this administration and under the emergency plea? What has happened to the Federal Reserve notes that were in circulation? All you have to do is to follow the weekly statements of the Federal Reserve banks to answer this question.

I read a speech the other day by a noted inflationist in which he undertook to convince the country that the Federal Reserve System was attempting to thwart the inflationist's policy by selling its bonds. And he quoted figures which any man who has studied these reports knows do not apply to bonds at all. For instance, he cited, week by week, the shrinkage in volume of money outstanding in the nature of loans on bills discounted by the Federal Reserve System. He flatly stated that those figures reflected sales of Government securities by the reserve banks. If you happen to have at hand and will turn to the statement of the Federal Reserve System for the week beginning April 19 and ending April 26, you will see that whereas on the 19th of April there were $385,000,000 worth of loans outstanding on bills, nevertheless those loans on April 26 had shrunk by $29,000,000. If you will next turn to the item nominated "bills bought"—bills bought are bankers' acceptances, or, in other words, bills which have been accepted by certain banks—you will see that the volume of this class of loans on April 26 was $31,000,000 less than on April 19. What do these facts mean? They mean that there is already so much currency in circulation that when we have tried to increase it with emergency currency the banks which availed themselves of the emergency-currency privileges have found themselves too liquid. Consequently they have insisted on paying back their debts. These figures in no way reflect sales of Government securities. They go to disprove the inflationist's argument. They prove conclusively that once emergency money is issued to banks they can find no other use for it but to pay off their debts at the Reserve banks. And thus they diminish the volume of outstanding credit.

What banks called for the additional $27,000,000 of Federal Reserve bank notes and the $200,000,000 additional issue of emergency national-bank notes? The banks which feared further demands for currency, further runs. Their fears proved to be groundless. Subsequent to March 9 there were many evidences of returning confidence. As soon as the national bank holiday was declared, people felt that the bottom had been reached and that the banks which reopened were safe. Money, therefore, began to find its way out of hoarding and was returned to the banks.

These banks, I repeat, found themselves with an excess amount of idle funds. There was no way of getting these funds into the hands of needy but potential consumers. There was only one thing the banks could do with this excess supply of currency. The member banks of the Federal Reserve System could use it to reduce their indebtedness to the Reserve banks. The reduction of indebtedness to the Reserve banks in no way reflects the policy of the Federal Reserve Board. It did not take the initiative.

The debtor banks of the system took the initiative. They said to the reserve banks, "We want back the $29,000,000 of our bills which we discounted with you. We can pay for them. We are not going to pay you interest on money that we cannot use." So they reduced the amount of their loans outstanding on their bills. They said, "We want that $31,000,000 of bankers' acceptances on which your reserve banks loaned us money. We can repay those loans." And the Federal Reserve banks surrendered the bills and acceptances and credited the member banks on their loan accounts. Thus you perceive what has happened to this emergency currency that you are printing and urging upon us in further volume as a solution for our problems.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. No; because I know what the gentleman is going to say, and I will surprise him in a minute, if he will excuse me and give me a chance.

This emergency currency goes right back into the Reserve banks. There is no demand for it; there is no call for it. There is nothing on which to borrow. Everybody who has anything on which to borrow, has borrowed to the limit, and we all know that.

When this emergency currency goes back into the Federal Reserve System you understand it is idle and useless money to the System. It may not be used as a reserve for further issues; nor does its possession reduce the liability on outstanding issues of Federal Reserve notes. So the Reserve banks must take the prudent course. The Reserve System, which was set up to accommodate commerce and agriculture and industry, must retire surplus currency which they cannot use for the accommodation of commerce, agriculture, and industry. So they have retired a volume of Federal Reserve notes equal, approximately speaking, to the needless issue of emergency currency which the present administration has caused to be issued.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. BEEDY. No, because I know what the gentleman has in mind and I am going to answer in a minute. What we need is increased velocity of money, and that will never come until business returns, and government cannot make business. Of course I am opposed to giving all this power to the President. I trust him as much as any President. I am enough nonpartisan to believe that any man who is big enough to be elected President of this country will, insofar as within him lies the power, use it to the best interest of the whole people.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. No. Pardon me. We have no more to worry about from intrusting this power to the present President than we might have with any other President; but to vest this power in any President is contrary to our American system. I am opposed to turning over the power of the legislative branch of this Government to the Executive. If greenbacks are to be issued, if silver is to be remonetized, if the gold content of the dollar is to be reduced, the Congress alone is intrusted by the Constitution with the exercise of any or all these powers.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPEL] arose earlier in the course of this debate and embarrassed the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] when he said, "Is it not true that Hitler is wielding arbitrary power in Germany now because the Reichstag surrendered its power to him?" The gentleman from New York did not want to answer that question. Nor did he. But when the gentleman from California arose a second time to ask a question the gentleman from New York said, "I would rather yield to somebody on the Republican side." Nevertheless the fact remains that we are turning over to the President absolute power without precedent in peace times. We are setting the stage for a regime of dictatorship, and possibly it may auger well for us. Certainly no one desires that our difficulties be increased.

But I am opposed to this abject surrender of legislative power by the representative branch of the Government.

Now, those of you who are sound-money men were told you should support this program because the President was not going to use it. If it be true that it is the plan of the President to gather in all the power he can, take all possible power from Congress, and then send Congress home without ever intending to use this delegated power, I repeat, if this be the President's program, the strategy of this unusual inflation amendment, which he has caused to be grafted upon this mortgage-relief legislation, is clear. I am told that men close to the President have encouraged him to get this power to regulate the value of our money but not to use it. I am told that the President has been advised this is the proper way to checkmate the Congress and save himself and the country from the radical proposals of those Members of the Congress in his own party who insist upon fiat money. I am told that these same men have said to the President that when his partisans on the "Hill" get their eyes open and learn that he not only never intended to use this power but has not used it, that he will have, in all human probability, a very satisfactory answer.

I am told that the President has been encouraged by the thought that we are unquestionably passing through the closing hours of this depression; that every day we live we are nearing the hour of permanent recovery; that he will soon be able to say to his inflationist fellow Democrats, "True, I have not exercised the powers you gave me because there has been no need of it. The country is on the way to recovery; business activity is increasing; labor is being employed, and prices are rising." This, if I mistake not, will be the President's defense. This must be the course which the President will pursue inasmuch as he announced in his campaign that he favored a policy of sound money.

I ask you to follow the denouement of this administration program so far as it relates to currency, and see for yourselves if what I predict does not come true. And inasmuch as I have touched upon the question of predictions, it occurs to me that on March 24 last, when you urged upon us the adoption of the so-called "Robinson-Steagall bill", making it possible for nonmember banks to borrow of the reserve banks on paper, whether eligible or not, I ventured the assertion that not even a million dollars would be loaned to State banks as a result of the passage of that particular bill. I believe I was the only Member of the House who voted "no" on a viva voce vote upon that particular proposal. I opposed it as a political gesture. I felt that it would never be useful as a means of extending credit to nonmember State banks.

In opposing my stand, both the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] urged the adoption of the Robinson-Steagall bill on the claim that it would release large volumes of money now frozen in State banks.

Do you know how much has been borrowed up to date under the authority of that act?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I cannot yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The gentleman misquoted me. I never made such a statement.

Mr. BEEDY. If the gentleman says I misquoted him, certainly I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I say the gentleman misquoted me. I never said hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. BEEDY. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I did not say anything like that.

Mr. BEEDY. Did the gentleman believe that act was going to prove of any substantial benefit to the nonmember State banks? Did the gentleman believe that act would in any way alleviate the present situation?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I believed that the State banks ought to be given the same privileges that were given to national banks.

Mr. BEEDY. I did not ask the gentleman that question. I do not yield further.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Maine 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BEEDY. There have not been enough dollars borrowed under the authority of the Robinson Act to make a flyspeck upon the credit situation.

The figures have not been published. I cannot give them to you, but I know that to date far less has been borrowed than the $1,000,000 I predicted might be loaned.

I heard a noted inflationist the other day make a speech in which he said:

Now, I am going along with this legislation. I am doing it in the hope this administration will couple with it some way of making this money available to those who need it.

If you want controlled inflation, there is a way to have it. You do not have to debate about it. If the President meant it when he said he favored controlled inflation, let us look at the top of page 65 of the bill and read what may be done:

Greenbacks may be issued to the extent of $3,000,000,000 if deemed desirable. They may be used for meeting maturing Federal obligations, to repay sums borrowed by the United States, and other interest-bearing obligations of the United States. What are the bonus certificates but interest-bearing obligations of the United States, other than those covering sums borrowed by the United States?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. No; I cannot yield.

I submit that this language clearly authorizes the President to pay the bonus certificates with greenbacks. If you are going to issue greenbacks, I think the President should pay the bonus with them. There is the only effective way I know of to put this money promptly into the hands of people who are outside of banks and who need it. [Applause.]

I was against the payment of the bonus last year. In the midst of a very bitter campaign waged against me in which all the sentiment for the bonus was mustered against me, I left my district to come down here and vote against the payment of the bonus. Why? I would have loved to have voted for it. I was as much in sympathy with those poor boys as any man alive. I knew full well the hardships they had suffered since they came back from the war, but last year we did not have the money with which to pay any bonus. We were losing $5,000,000 every day we ran the Government. Now, if we are going to print money it is only a question of how much it costs to print it; and if we want to get it into the hands of the spending masses who will use it to purchase food, clothing, and stimulate industry, we should pay the bonus with this new money. [Applause.]

I call upon this administration and the President, if he wants controlled inflation, if he is not fooling the so-called "inflationists", but means to use some vestige of this power, I call upon him to print this money and put it into the hands of these poor veterans and let us see what controlled inflation means. [Applause.]

Oh, he will not do it. And now I am going to say one other thing on my own responsibility: It was the money power of this country and banks under the leadership of such men as those who presided over the City National Bank of New York that wrecked the last administration. And unless I am greatly mistaken this same power has already gotten its talons into the leaders of the present administration. [Applause.] If this be true, may God help the country! We need leaders, yes, but we need men of independence who can say to these money barons, "Hands off! You have wrecked the financial institutions of this country. You have brought poverty and suffering upon the masses. You wrecked the Hoover administration. Now, keep your hands off the present administration." Our President should enter into no understanding with Wall Street about the exercise of these powers which many of you men in perfect good faith are demanding that the Congress surrender to our Chief Executive.

I now yield to any Member who desires to ask a question.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman stated that the President had the power to pay the adjusted-service certificates by reason of the language on page 65 of this bill?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. This language reads:

May be issued only for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations.

Mr. BEEDY. Oh, no, no. It goes further. Read the entire sentence.

Mr. PATMAN. If the language stopped there, the gentleman would be entirely correct, but it does not stop there. It continues:

Meeting the maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States.

Therefore it would exclude payment of the adjusted-service certificates.

Mr. BEEDY. No. You have not read the rest of the sentence, which says:

And other interest-bearing obligations of the United States.

Mr. PATMAN. I wish the gentleman were correct in his statement.

Mr. BEEDY. The President could undoubtedly use this money not only "for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States", but "for the purpose of meeting * * * other interest-bearing obligations of the United States." There should not be the slightest confusion in the gentleman's mind on this point.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] to ask a question of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. PATMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine another question. If the language in the bill stopped at "issued only for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations", as the gentleman inferred a few minutes ago, the President would possibly have the power to pay off the adjusted-service certificates, but the language does not stop there. The language is, "issued only for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States." Therefore, it specifically excludes the payment of the adjusted-service certificate.

Mr. BEEDY. I say to the gentleman that when you give a dictator the power to act in any way he wants to act, he can act under this language, and if he does not want to act, he should have got behind the demand for an amendment over in the Senate to make it clear and insure us controlled inflation.

Again the gentleman has failed to heed the language which covers the third purpose for which the President may use the money in question. I repeat: First, he may use it "for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States;" secondly, he may use it "for purchasing United States bonds;" and thirdly, he may use it "for the purpose of meeting" or "for purchasing * * * other interest-bearing obligations of the United States." Clearly, the bonus certificates are interest-bearing obligations of the United States and fall within the language of this section of the bill.

Mr. PATMAN. If you were to put a comma there after the word "obligations" it would possibly permit the President to pay the adjusted-service certificates, although I doubt it.

Mr. BEEDY. Upon further consideration of the language in this section, I feel confident the gentleman will agree that I am correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL—FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 128

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 5389, a bill making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill or any provisions contained therein are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Woodrum, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. TABER, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. No amendments shall be in order to sections 4 to 17, inclusive, except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

REFLATION AND STABILIZATION OF THE CURRENCY

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I will ask not to be interrupted. I will say as much as I can in 20 minutes, and if I get through before the time has expired, I shall be very happy to answer any questions I may be able to answer.

The problem that we are endeavoring to solve at this time, as I understand it, is not a problem of inflation but a problem of endeavoring to effect a proper distribution of the wealth of the country. It has been estimated that if we produce on the basis of 5 hours of labor for every able-bodied man in this country 6 days in the week and distribute our production in the way in which it could be, if scientifically done, every family in the United States would have an income equivalent to around $20,000 a year. Whether this is accurate or not, it is accurate to say that the problem to be solved in this country is the problem of distribution, and this is exactly what we are defending now.

In the last 12 years I have seen attempts to relieve the economic distress of the country by the passage of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill of 1921 and the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill in 1929. I hope I shall never live to see the time, if I am in Congress, for another tariff bill to be passed—with no exhibition of economic justice, no endeavor to adjust the proper relationship between foreign and home production, but simply a question of every selfish interest getting everything possible out of the tariff.

This condition of utterly selfish legislation culminated in the Wall Street panic of 1929, and then in the fall of 1931 the President of the United States began what he conceived to be a proper process of rehabilitation. This was begun, so far as I know, in perfect good faith, but it was based on the conception that, with the terrific debt which confronted the American people, the economic situation could be relieved by a transfer of this debt from private individuals to the United States Treasury or else by an increase in the private debt; so we were offered the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which attempted to absorb the debts of the banks and the railroad companies and the insurance companies, the so-called "Farm Loan Act", which attempted to pump value back into the worthless bonds of the Federal farm-loan system, and the final credit scheme, the home-loan bank bill.

Through all this period, as of necessity, prices continued to go down because this overload of debt could not be met by any process of borrowing or lending. There was no possible way to discharge this debt except by complete bankruptcy of the country, unless through a reflation of the currency.

But the administration thought otherwise. Then came the 4th of March 1933. In less than two months what has been done? First, evidently with the conception that a rise in the price level was necessary in order that producers might pay their debts and resume production, we went off the gold standard and embargoed gold. This reduced the demand for gold and started a rise in commodity prices. The price of wheat has already gone up from 35 cents to 77 cents, the price of cotton has risen, and all commodities are gradually going up.

Now we are here today considering a further step. In 1896 and 1898 gold was discovered in the Klondike and in South Africa in large quantities. From 1873 to 1896 we had a falling price level. When I was a little boy, I drove with my grandfather, a country doctor. I did not understand why it was that farmers who worked from dawn until dark, and whose families worked from dawn to dark, never had anything. We were tied to gold, and gold was scarce.

Gold was discovered, as I just said, and from 1898 to 1914 was the most prosperous period in the history of the country.

The President understands that there is now a tremendous world demand for gold and that the thing to do is to devalue the gold dollar. Devaluation will produce the same result as the discovery of a large new supply of gold.

In this bill also is the further conception of a managed currency. That is found in the notes provisions of the bill.

And so in a period of less than two months there has been a greater social concept in legislation offered and passed by the American Congress than there has been before in its entire history.

It is true, as the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee said, that the Democratic House of Representatives in the last Congress, although there was a Republican President and a Republican Senate, passed two bills, the Steagall deposit guaranty bill and the Goldsborough stabilization bill. These bills were stopped in the Senate through the influence of the President of the United States and, therefore, did not become law.

Now, it seems to me there are two or three things which remain to be done in order that the country may get permanent help from monetary legislation.

First, there should be imbedded in legislation a conception of the stabilization of the price level. That is not involved in this proposed legislation, but is absolutely necessary.

There has never been in the whole world such a superstructure of credit above the metallic base as there is in this country now, and it is absolutely necessary in my judgment for our price level to be stabilized, because under present conditions, no man, no set of men, no partnership or corporation can go into business and know what they can depend upon 5 years from now. It is necessary to complete this program to have some stabilization.

What else? There is the conception in this bill, it seems to me, that the Federal Reserve Board can be depended upon to be socially minded. There appears to be the conception in this legislation that the Federal Reserve Board can be counted upon to act for all the people. Those of us who have been members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House for many years have not that conception. Our conception of the situation is that the Federal Reserve Board has sitting on the arm of its chair constantly the great banking interests of the country, and that however honest and fair-minded they may be individually, that pressure is so great and so constant as to make it impossible for them to represent properly all the people. If you will look on page 64 of the bill, you will find the following language at the top of the page:

The Federal Reserve Board, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require the Federal Reserve banks to take such action as may be necessary, in the judgment of the Board and of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prevent undue expansion.

In other words, by this bill the Federal Reserve Board, a body of men, are given the right to decide arbitrarily for the 120,000,000 people in the United States, and indirectly for the people of the world, when there is or is not undue credit expansion. I have no criticism of the author of this bill. I am following the President of the United States, because, as I said in the beginning of my speech, there are 3 or 4 steps which already have been taken, and I have no doubt that he intends to take the remainder; but any piece of legislation which leaves in the control of any man or group of men the right arbitrarily to contract the currency of the country is too dangerous and is not in accord with our conception of government, which is that this is a government of law and not a government of men. A policy of the Government based on the price level should be written into the law so that the people of the country will know what are the limitations of the power of the Federal Reserve System or any other body of men that may be administering the fiscal affairs of the Government.

I found it necessary to mention that, and I find it necessary to mention something else. On page 69 of the bill, next to the last paragraph, there is the following language:

Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the Federal Reserve Board, upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members and with the approval of the President, may declare that an emergency exists by reason of credit expansion, and may by regulation during such emergency increase or decrease from time to time, in its discretion, the reserve balances required to be maintained against either demand or time deposits.

The same question is involved there. The approval of the President is required, but Presidents change. This is permanent legislation, and it is not a proper power to be given to any body of men. Permanent legislation should be written, expressing the policy of the Government in the act itself, and it should not be left to anybody's discretion, because the power will be abused just as sure as there is a God in heaven. Reason tells us that it cannot be otherwise, and experience tells us that it is not otherwise.

What is the third thing that it seems to me this legislation should contain. The third thing is an amplification of what I have said before, and that is that legislation of this character should not be left in the discretion of anyone. The people by their Members of Congress should determine what the policy of the country is to be, and that should be written into permanent law. I have no reason to suppose that this is not within the mind of the President of the United States. I have no doubt that it is. I have no doubt that these steps I have mentioned will be at his suggestion embodied in other legislation, but as a Member of Congress with the responsibility for legislation, it has appeared to me proper to make the suggestions contained in the latter part of these remarks.

I am supporting and will vote for the bill now before the House. As indicating what I conceive to be proper and necessary permanent monetary legislation, looking to a reflation of the currency and its stabilization, I have introduced H.R. 5073, and H.R. 5160.

H.R. 5073 is, in my judgment, much the stronger of the two bills; and is the one which I am at this time pressing for enactment as permanent legislation.

As a measure combining the principles of H.R. 5073 and H.R. 5160, I am suggesting for study a measure as follows:

A bill to regulate the value of money in accordance with article I, section 8, of the Constitution of the United States, to reestablish the gold standard, to provide for its maintenance and stabilization, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to restore and maintain the normal purchasing power of the dollar, which shall, for the purposes of this act, be the average purchasing power of the dollar over all commodities during the year 1926, to be ascertained as hereinafter provided.

PRICE OF GOLD

SEC. 2. (a) Commencing on the date of approval of this act the standard price for gold shall be $36.17 an ounce of fine gold, such price being equivalent to a reduction of the fine gold in the dollar from 23.22 to approximately 13.27 grains. Such price for gold shall continue in effect until such time as under this section it is adjusted by the monetary board hereinafter established.

(b) Commencing 6 months after the date of approval of this act, or at such time as the dollar is first restored to within 5 percent of its normal purchasing power, whichever is the earlier, the monetary board is authorized to adjust the price for gold from time to time to such extent as it deems necessary to carry out the declared policy; except that whenever for any period of 1 year the purchasing power of the dollar is continuously 5 percent or more above or below its normal purchasing power, the board shall upon the expiration of such period adjust the price for gold to such extent as it finds necessary to carry out the declared policy.

EXCHANGE OF GOLD

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary of the Treasury shall sell gold in bars for use in industry and the arts and for transactions in foreign exchange, but for no other purpose. Such sales shall be made at the current price for gold fixed by or pursuant to section 2. In order to maintain on a parity with gold silver coin and all other forms of lawful money issued under act of Congress the Secretary of the Treasury shall accept in payment for gold pursuant to any such sale coin or currency of the United States or notes of any fiscal agency thereof in such amounts as they are legal tender for public debts of any character.

(b) All forms of money issued under act of Congress shall be redeemable in gold by the United States at the Treasury in Washington, D.C., in gold bars at the current price for gold fixed by or pursuant to section 2, except that such money shall not be redeemed if, in the judgment of the Secretary, the gold is to be hoarded or used for such other purposes as the Secretary determines will prevent or tend to prevent the carrying out at any time of the declared policy. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and charged with the duty of maintaining all forms of money issued by the United States at parity with gold.

(c) For the purposes of this section the Secretary of the Treasury shall maintain a supply of gold in fine bars of such weight as he may determine, not less than 5 ounces. Such bars shall bear the stamp of the United States. All gold coin in the possession of the Government shall be converted into fine bars, and after the date of approval of this act no gold shall be coined.

(d) The provisions of this section shall not be held to limit the authority of the President under section 5 (b) of the act of October 6, 1917, as amended, or the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury under section 11 (n) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended.

THE MONETARY BOARD

SEC. 4. (a) There is hereby established a monetary board which shall consist of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board as members ex officio and of three other members to represent all the public, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No person engaged in the business of banking shall be eligible for appointment to the board.

(b) The terms of office of the appointed members of the board first taking office after the date of approval of this act shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one each at the end of the first, second, and third years after such date. The successor of an appointed member shall have a term of office expiring 3 years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of such term shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. One of the appointed members shall be designated by the President as chairman of the board. The board may function notwithstanding vacancies, and three members thereof shall constitute a quorum. The appointed members of the board shall receive the same compensation as members of the Federal Reserve Board.

(c) The board shall meet at the call of the chairman or a majority of its members. Expenditures by the board shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the chairman or by such member or officer of the board as may be authorized by the board for the purpose. The board may make such statistical and other investigations as may be necessary to execute its functions and may publish the results thereof. The board may appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to execute its functions.

(d) The several departments and other establishments of the Government shall, when directed by the President, furnish the board, upon its request, all records, papers, and information in their possession necessary to aid the board in carrying out its functions under this act, and shall detail from time to time such officers and employees to the board as the President may direct.

CONTRACTS FOR GOLD

SEC. 5. (a) Indebtedness under any contract, public or private, (including obligations of the United States and the several States and Territories and political subdivisions thereof), entered into before the date of approval of this act shall be fully discharged by payment of the face amount thereof in legal tender, irrespective of whether the contract requires the payment of such amount in gold coin of a specified standard of weight or fineness.

(b) Indebtedness under any contract, public or private (including obligations of the United States and the several States and Territories and political subdivisions thereof), entered into on or after such date shall be fully discharged by payment of the face amount thereof in legal tender, and any provision for payment of the face amount thereof in gold or gold coin shall be invalid.

(c) The Revenue Act of 1932 is amended by inserting, after section 105 thereof, a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 106. Profits from transactions in gold: If any person receives payment in gold or gold coin upon the amount of indebtedness under any contract, public or private, whether entered into before or after the date this section takes effect, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid on the net profits derived from such payment a tax equal to the amount thereof. Such tax shall be in addition to any other taxes imposed by this title, and shall be collected and paid in the same manner and subject to the same provisions of law, including penalties, as other taxes under this title. For the purposes of this section the term 'net profits' shall mean the difference between the value of the gold or gold coin at the price current at the time of receipt and its value at the price current at the time the contract was made."

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue licenses to engage in the business of selling gold for future delivery for use in industry or the arts or for transactions in foreign exchange. Such licenses shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury deems necessary to effectuate the declared policy and may be suspended or revoked by the Secretary, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, for violation of the terms or conditions thereof. Any contract for the sale of gold for future delivery made after the date of approval of this act shall be invalid unless the vendor holds in full force and effect a license under this subsection.

ASCERTAINMENT OF PURCHASING POWER OF THE DOLLAR

SEC. 6. For the purposes of this act the average purchasing power of the dollar for any period shall be ascertained from the index known as "The index for the purchasing power of the dollar in the terms of wholesale prices for all commodities" for such period, as compiled and published from time to time by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, such index being the reciprocal of the index known as "The index of wholesale prices for all commodities" for such period as compiled and published from time to time by such Bureau.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

SEC. 7. (a) The Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Reserve banks, and all member banks of the Federal Reserve System, shall exercise their powers in such manner as to assist in carrying out the policy declared in section 1 of this act. To this end the monetary board is authorized from time to time to make recommendations to the Federal Reserve Board. Irrespective of the provisions of section 4 (c), the Federal Reserve Board shall promptly make available to the monetary board such information, with reference to the operations of the Federal Reserve System, as the monetary board may from time to time request.

(b) All profits upon gold or gold coin held by Federal Reserve banks, derived by reason of the revaluation of gold by or pursuant to section 2 of this act, shall be paid by such banks to the Secretary of the Treasury in any form of legal tender and covered into the Treasury of the United States. The amount of such profits shall be levied, assessed, and collected, by the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe; shall be due and payable on the 30th day after the revaluation; and if not paid within 10 days after the due date, shall bear interest at the rate of 1 percent a month.

SEC. 8. (a) The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue circulating notes, in the form of United States promises to pay on demand to the bearer, to be known as "United States notes of 1933." Said notes shall be legal tender at face value for all debts, public and private. They shall be issued in the same size as the Federal Reserve notes heretofore issued, and shall be in denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, $5,000, and $10,000.

(b) With such notes the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to buy, or to pay when due, United States bonds and other interest-bearing obligations of the United States at the rate of $300,000,000 per week, until the said index number of the purchasing power of the dollar shall reach par. If such index number falls below 97, the Secretary of the Treasury shall sell for currency the bonds or other United States obligations theretofore bought, or other bonds, as may be found necessary to restore the dollar to par. He shall place the currency received from such sales in a fund to be called the "emergency currency fund." If at any time the dollar index rises above 103, he shall, in that event, expand the currency by paying out currency from the emergency currency fund until such index is restored to 100; or he may, if necessary, purchase additional Government obligations for currency, as a means of restoring the index to par.

(c) In order that the Government of the United States may acquire the full title to the gold now available in the United States (and receive the benefit of any rise in value thereof, due to this act or for other reasons), the Secretary of the Treasury is further directed to issue a sufficient volume of the notes authorized by this section and with such notes to acquire all outstanding gold, gold certificates, and/or all present outstanding Federal Reserve notes, by exchanging the notes aforesaid for such gold, gold certificates, or Federal Reserve notes. When and as such gold, gold certificates, and Federal Reserve notes may be acquired by the Secretary of the Treasury, such gold certificates and Federal Reserve notes shall be paid for in gold and canceled, and all gold acquired under the provisions of this section shall be added to the reserve fund established for redemption by the Gold Standard Act of March 14, 1900, and held for the purpose therein set forth.

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall hereafter furnish to the several Federal Reserve banks through the Federal Reserve agents notes authorized by this section, upon their demand and upon the deposit with the Federal Reserve agents of United States bonds to the extent now authorized by law, as security for Federal Reserve notes and/or eligible bills now authorized as security for Federal Reserve notes and to the same extent, to wit, to the face value of such bonds and eligible bills.

SEC. 9. There is hereby appropriated, out of the funds of the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $100,000 for the purposes of this act.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPEL].

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill because, as I view it, it is a repudiation of the Declaration of Independence as well as the Constitution. It is making a scrap of paper of these documents.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPEL. Not now. I judge from the correspondence that has reached me that the bankers of America are not opposed to this bill. I am inclined to believe that this bill is deceptive from every angle. Those who are in favor of real expansion and free silver will find that when this bill is finally administered it will be merely a deceptive measure. It is merely a subterfuge presented to those of us here in the House who are liberal-minded along the lines of currency expansion.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. HOEPEL. I decline to yield. My time is too short.

This bill repudiates the Democratic platform with reference to the war debts, because we are accepting payment of the European war debt in depreciated currency.

Since I have been a Member of this House all I have heard on this floor is "bonds", "bankers' exchanges", "tax-exempt bonds", and words of like description. I came here from the great West, interested in the people of my district and the people of the United States, and I would like to hear someone on this floor fight for the common man.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Put me down for that. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOEPEL. The forgotten man appears to be entirely forgotten. Out in my country the Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds are not permitted to be spent in the county of Los Angeles unless the honest American workingman will sign a declaration that he is a pauper. I protest restrictions of this sort. When Mr. Dawes borrowed $90,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation he was not compelled to certify that he was a pauper. We are not giving the American people a square deal in the "new deal." We are repudiating the "new deal." The forgotten man has been entirely forgotten in favor of the international banker. The only thing we have accomplished in this House since I have been a Member is to enact into law a slave bill forcing our American sons to go out and work for $1 per day. We have declined to permit the American veteran who has suffered disabilities in war to go into these camps and earn that $1 a day for his family. I say we are entitled to a new deal and a just deal, which we have thus far been unable to achieve.

This bill, as I view it, is born in the chancelleries of Europe. It is international in its aspect. It is giving the President power to deal with the repudiators in Europe. That is all this bill does. It is a deception to us. The nations of Europe are famous for repudiation. A scrap of paper brought us into the World War at a cost of 149,000 American lives, and up to this date $35,000,000,000. Another scrap of paper in 1922 took from the American taxpayer $6,200,000,000 in the foreign-debt settlement, and those gentry are again visiting us with a card up their sleeve. Through the manipulations of this bill they are hoping to take from us again eleven or twelve billion dollars of debts which are justly due. I am opposed to repudiation in favor of our European debtors, and I am further opposed to any legislation which will take from Congress its constitutional rights. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPEL. No; I do not have time.

Those people have constantly repudiated their obligations, and yet we are on the verge of receiving a document from the White House in which we are supposed to delegate our authority, to grant to the President the power to negotiate for debt revision, tariffs, and economic problems of Europe. Of what utility is any agreement with them since their past record is that of repudiation of contract, solemn and attested. [Applause.]

CONGRESS ABDICATES TO INTERNATIONALISTS—CONSTITUTION JETTISONED TO RESCUE EUROPE

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, it appears that the eyes of Congress are focused eastward and that they are looking to Europe through the telescope at the Wall Street financiers. The admonition of Horace Greeley to go westward was never more pertinent than at the present moment as we visualize the suffering and distress of the Middle West and place ourselves in the position of the suffering youth and women of our land, whose right to the American heritage of prosperity and the pursuit of happiness seems to be effaced in the present regime, to the advantage of the war-loving and heavily armed nations of Europe.

As a result of the World War this Nation suffered a loss of 149,000 of the best of American manhood, and to date has absorbed a financial obligation approximating $35,000,000,000, all as a result of a scrap of paper—Belgian neutrality—if one is to accept the pronouncements of the British as to their reasons for entering the World War.

In this legislation we are making a scrap of paper of the moral obligation of our European debtors to pay us the just debts due for credit extended after the termination of hostilities. The agreement in this bill to accept the debased currency of the countries of Europe as a valid 100 percent return on their obligations is likewise a repudiation of the Democratic campaign pledge and is a direct affront to the American people who supported the Democratic Party on this principle. We are accepting currency with an approximate value of 70 percent of the value of the currency loaned. This pure gift of 30 percent or more of the foreign obligation should be considered in connection with the reductions in veteran benefits, which approximate from 20 to 40 percent for those whose disabilities are unquestionably combat or service connected. In other words, what we take from our own veterans we are granting, by repudiation of contract, to our European debtors.

The stock-market collapse of 1929 was synonymous with the departure of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald from American shores after his first conference here. Equally synonymous with the arrival of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald on his second visit here, the United States went off the gold standard, which would, in a sense, bear out the assumption that foreign influence has contributed in no small measure to our present debacle, and, sad to say, we contemplate a conference with these very agencies, hoping thereby to restore America to the Americans. This, in my opinion, is impossible, recognizing as I do the European viewpoint from personal contact.

If the eyes of America were directed "Westward, Ho", instead of toward London and Paris, through the bloody glasses of Wall Street, it is possible that the American people would obtain real relief.

We heard of the "forgotten man" during the campaign, and he is truly forgotten today in the legislation which has thus far been enacted by Congress. The forgotten man of Europe seems to have supplanted the interests of the distressed and unfortunate unemployed of our own Nation. All I have heard in the special session of Congress has been "tax-exempt bonds" and "follow the President." To date, the only actual relief we have brought to our distressed citizens is the enactment of slave legislation, such as the $1-per-day reforestation measure!

"First things first" would demand that our unemployed be put to work by a huge public-work program with funds derived from the Comptroller of the Currency, issued on the credit of the United States, and not through the sale of further tax-exempt bonds, which continue to weigh down the economic life of our country.

The pending measure, it is conceded, will relieve unemployment for the few administrators, executives, and others involved in this bill who are fortunate enough to receive patronage under the political preferment plan, but it will add an unnecessary expense in living costs to the unemployed, and it is of extremely doubtful value to the farmer himself.

Rather than international conferences on economics and tariff, I am inclined to believe that this question, just as charity, should begin at home and be properly adjusted before we reach into foreign spheres to place our Nation in the thralldom of the astute diplomats beyond the Atlantic.

If we continue along the lines we are now following, I fear that our beloved Stars and Stripes in the Halls of Congress may soon be replaced by the Union Jack, or perchance, the flag of the international bank ring, which has already established itself in Switzerland and to which some of our pseudo-patriots urge that all American gold should be transported for international safe-keeping. Instead of teaching our American children the national anthem, they may soon be taught the English counterpart, God Save the King, and instead of teaching them the song My Country, 'Tis of Thee, they may be called upon to sing, "My Europe, 'tis of thee, for there it is I have my gold!"

The Members of Congress are derelict in their oath if they abrogate their right to any individual in America and indirectly to foreign debtors. The birthright of Americanism, purchased by us in the Revolutionary War, appears doomed for annulment under the procedure and powers granted in the bill under discussion. We went to war to make the world safe for democracy, but under the stimulus of the international bankers, we are, and have been, making the world safe for the plutocracy of wealth, which continues to press down the impoverished and unemployed in the same ruthless manner as of old, thus falsifying the thought of a "new deal" which our people subscribed to in November, but which, as a result of the gag rule and a lack of independence on the part of the Congress, is being withheld from them. Our past procedure seems to indicate that the Members of Congress, especially the new Members, are being placed between the question of patronage and reelection on one side and the interest of the people on the other, which forces them to dance a St. Vitus dance with their own consciences and, unfortunately, they usually are found voting on the side of their own private interest instead of that of our distressed people.

I plead with the Members of Congress not to surrender their own individualities and to follow their own inherent honesty and resoluteness of purpose and to vote as Americans for Americans rather than to fawn upon the agencies which have brought our Nation to its present plight and which, with their tentacles yet in our political body, continue a strangle hold on the right of the American citizen to the pursuit of happiness, vouchsafed him under the Constitution. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to say I am in full accord with the latter part of the speech made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH]. In order to make this sound legislation and to be effective for the years to come, I think the stabilization clause should be in the bill. However, the sole question which is before us at this time is whether or not we are going to confer upon the President of the United States certain power over our monetary system.

I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY], wherein he called to our attention the fact that there is more money in circulation now than there was in 1929, during the heyday of inflation or prosperity. We have had that frequently brought to our attention. Often we hear it said that because there is more currency in circulation now than there was 3 years ago nothing can be gained by now placing more currency in circulation. I cannot exactly go along with that statement. I am going to try to discuss it as best I can.

Our medium of exchange is credit and money. The gentleman from Maine has it right—bank credits have diminished some $20,000,000,000. Obviously, if we had those bank credits we would not need any expansion of currency, but bank credits have vanished or greatly diminished. As a matter of fact, they have vanished more rapidly in the last 40 days than during any other previous period of time. Deflation never came upon this country so rapidly as it did when the banks were all closed, and now with only a part of them permitted to open. No man has yet come forward and offered a solution to restore bank credit in this country. If bank credit could be restored, good and well. We have been trying that. That was the purpose of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We were going to restore bank credit in this country. We were going to take the credit of the Government of the United States and use it for private credit, but, strange as it may seem, experience now tells us plainly that up to date bank credits have diminished, and that plan has not worked.

Now, since our bank credits have diminished and no power seems to be able to increase them, there is then only one way to increase the circulating medium and that is through the process of increasing the other part of the medium, which is the currency.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I cannot for the time being. I will try to yield later.

Now, where do we find ourselves today, with the Government of the United States going into debt some 50 or 60 cents every time it spends a dollar, wholly unable to balance the Budget, with the national debt increasing 40 percent in 3 years' time? No rational man can stand upon his reputation and say that he has any reasonable idea when we will ever be able to balance the Budget. This much is certain: It cannot be balanced until we can increase price levels. Certainly, we cannot go on with this policy of increasing public debts and with private debts being constantly defaulted. What is the program that will increase the price level in this country? There are many of us who think that the program is found in monetary reform. Personally, I do not think it is so much to be found in the printing and circulation of currency. I think it is to be found in deflating the American dollar. It is very apparent that the exercise of the powers about to be conferred upon the President will increase the price levels. The price level has taken a substantial advance since the President submitted this program. If he permits the proposed monetary reform to get out of hand, then, of course, trouble is ahead. We cannot assume that any President will permit an abuse of this power all to the detriment of the country. Just because he may fail to meet his full responsibility is no valid excuse for refusing to take the only course that anyone can say will raise the price level.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

WILL LANGUAGE PERMIT PRESIDENT TO PAY ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the language mentioned by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] a few minutes ago on pages 64 and 65 I should like to read again. It says that the Secretary of the Treasury, if the President directs him, shall issue United States notes under authority of the act of February 25, 1862, for the following purposes:

For the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States and for purchasing United States bonds and other interest-bearing obligations of the United States.

Now, if a comma should be inserted between the words "obligations" and "to" on line 2, page 65, the President would possibly have the authority to pay these adjusted-service certificates with this new money. It would then depend upon a construction of the term "maturing obligations."

Now, in regard to this amendment as a whole, I am very glad to support it. I think the inflation part of it—that is, the expansion part—is the longest step in the right direction that has ever been made by Congress. It is a step in the direction of taking the control of our monetary system from a few powerful New York and international bankers and placing this control in the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. For a question.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman from Maine made the statement that the President advised some of the Democratic Members that he did not intend to use this power. Is the gentleman advised as to this matter?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not have the time to discuss it. If I did not think he would use it, I would not vote to give it to him. I certainly hope he will use the power.

Mr. BOILEAU. I hope so, too.

Mr. PATMAN. If I did not think he would expand the currency, I would not be so anxious to give him the power.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. DISNEY. Up to date is there any evidence of bad faith on the part of the President in his conduct as President to warrant the matter being talked back and forth over this Chamber?

Mr. PATMAN. I believe that the President is acting in good faith. This amendment is recognizing the principle that the Government of the United States should be in charge of the issuance and distribution of money. It has too long been farmed out to a few private bankers. Now we are taking a step in the direction of restoring this power to the Government where it belongs.

The $3,000,000,000 that may be issued in the form of Federal Reserve notes by the Federal Reserve banks will probably save the United States Government $105,000,000 if this power is exercised and assuming that bonds bearing as much as 3½ percent interest are purchased.

Mr. MAY. Annually.

Mr. PATMAN. Annually, I mean.

Under the present law the Federal Reserve banks from their profits pay their current expenses, usually aggregating about $27,000,000 a year. After that they pay dividends of 6 percent on the stock, then 10 percent is set aside in the surplus fund, and the remainder goes into the Treasury of the United States as a franchise tax to the Government for the use of its credit. This year I predict there will be sufficient profits made by the Federal Reserve banks to pay current expenses, pay the 6-percent dividend, set aside the 10 percent in the surplus fund, and then the bonds that have been purchased, $3,000,000,000, drawing 3½ percent interest, aggregating $105,000,000, will go into the Treasury and the Government will not have to pay interest on these bonds.

IDLE DOLLARS

So, after all, this is one good reason why we should support this particular provision of the bill. Furthermore, it will place 3,000,000,000 of idle dollars in the hands of the people and they will want to put these dollars to work. Dollars are no good unless they are working. Commodity prices will commence to rise, and on a rising market every day you hold a dollar that dollar is less valuable, it will purchase less the next day. Therefore, you are anxious to put the dollar to work, or you are anxious to exchange it for goods and services, before the dollar is worth less and before the goods and services are worth more. This has a tendency to stimulate business. A rising market is calculated to bring this country back even without putting much additional currency in circulation.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I cannot yield.

Now, in regard to the issuance of United States notes, remember these notes are not fiat notes. No money is fiat money that is redeemable in gold. These notes have a gold coverage behind them. They are issued under the act of February 25, 1862, as amended; and the act as amended provides that at all times the Secretary of the Treasury must maintain a gold reserve of $100,000,000 and if for any reason that $100,000,000 is depleted, it is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to sell Government bonds drawing 3 percent interest for the purpose of obtaining gold to raise that gold reserve up to $100,000,000. It now amounts to $156,000,000 and it is a gold coverage securing $346,000,000 worth of so-called "greenbacks." Thus, they have more than 40 percent gold behind them. Do you call this fiat money? It is in circulation. It has been in circulation ever since 1862 and 1863. It is worth 100 cents on the dollar. It is true at one time when the credit of the Government was impaired and they were based upon the credit of the Government alone and there was a corner in gold, these notes went down in value, but when the credit of the Government was restored and this small gold reserve placed behind them they returned to 100 cents on the dollar and they have remained there ever since. Who would refuse to take one of them today?

I will not have the time to discuss other provisions of this bill that I am heartily in favor of.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman has not thoroughly discussed the question of whether or not the adjusted-service certificates are redeemable under this act, I wish he would.

Mr. PATMAN. I suggested a while ago, I may state for the benefit of the gentleman from New York, that on page 65 of the corrected copy of the bill the language is used that the President may issue these United States notes only for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States and for purchasing United States bonds and other interest-bearing obligations of the United States.

Now, if there should be inserted a comma after the word "obligations" on line 2, page 65, possibly the President of the United States would have the right and the authority to pay the adjusted-service certificates in the same way or manner, or in any way or manner he chose to pay them, because they are maturing Federal obligations; but there is no comma there, and we must read it altogether. Further, the term "maturing obligations" will have to be construed. According to present law, the adjusted-service certificates do not mature until 1945.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. PATMAN. They must be used for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States. In other words, it is restricted to sums borrowed by the United States that are maturing; and I suggest it is very doubtful that the President would have that authority; and I do not think, under the language of this bill, he would have the authority.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert certain excerpts in connection with my speech that will be explanatory of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to support this provision in regard to expansion of the currency because it is a long step in the right direction. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATMAN. Under leave granted, I herewith insert an extension of remarks more fully explaining the terms of the amendment.

EXPANSION OF CURRENCY AMENDMENT INSERTED BY SENATE ON FARM BILL

Amendment 85 to H.R. 3835 provides for the issuance of additional Federal Reserve notes, United States notes, and gives the President the right by proclamation to fix the weight of the gold dollar.

Section 43 and section 43 (a) of the bill, which is a part of amendment 85, states that when the President finds upon investigation—

First, the foreign commerce of the United States is adversely affected by depreciated currency, or Second, action under this section is necessary in order to regulate and maintain the parity of currency issues of the United States, or

Third, an economic emergency requires an expansion of credit, or

Fourth, an expansion of credit is necessary to secure by international agreement a stabilization at proper levels of the currencies of various governments—

the President is authorized in his discretion to cause the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into an agreement with the Federal Reserve banks and Federal Reserve Board which will require Federal Reserve notes to be exchanged in the open market for United States Government bonds or obligations of corporations in which the United States is a majority stockholder, and may also cause Treasury bills to be purchased, all said purchases not to exceed the sum of $3,000,000,000 in addition to those they may then hold.

A Federal Reserve note is a greenback. It is money. It is guaranteed by the Government, and is therefore backed by the credit of the Nation.

The Federal Reserve banks belong to private bankers. The Government does not own one penny of the stock. The law provides that when these Federal Reserve banks pay their running expenses, which amount to about $27,000,000 a year, and 6-percent dividend on the stock which is held by the private banks, and after setting aside 10 percent of its earnings in a surplus fund, then the remainder shall go into the United States Treasury as a franchise tax.

$105,000,000 A YEAR SAVING

The Federal Reserve banks will doubtless make sufficient money this year to pay all expenses, dividends, and set aside the statutory sum for surplus. Therefore, if the Federal Reserve banks purchase the \$3,000,000,000 in Government securities drawing  $3\frac{1}{2}$  percent, or \$105,000,000 a year, the \$105,000,000 a year interest should go to the Government as a franchise tax. Therefore the taxpayers will be saved \$105,000,000 a year on the \$3,000,000,000 Government obligations purchased.

STOP MOVEMENT TO FURTHER AID FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

There is a movement on foot to give the Federal Reserve banks all earnings and not to require them to pay anything in the way of a franchise tax. I hope such a movement will not succeed. These private banks hold a monopoly on money and credit. They use the credit of this Nation and do not pay one penny for its use, although the Federal Reserve Act—a mandatory provision—requires that an interest rate be charged. It has never been charged. The zero rate has been set by the Federal Reserve Board. The Government has thereby been deprived of hundreds of millions of dollars.

Under this section 43 and 43 (a) the Federal Reserve banks may purchase obligations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the home and farm-land banks that will be established by reason of pending legislation, and obligations of any other corporations in which the United States is the majority stockholder.

MORE FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES TO BE ISSUED

The Federal Reserve banks at this time hold more than $1,882,000,000 in Government securities. This proposed law will enable and perhaps cause the Federal Reserve banks to purchase $3,000,000,000 more of these securities.

PENALTY CLAUSE REPEALED

The Federal Reserve Act, section 11-C, places a penalty on the issuance of Federal Reserve notes when the notes so issued do not have a backing of 40 percent gold. In other words, if the bank issues so many Federal Reserve notes and has only 35 percent gold, it pays a graduated tax. If it has only 30 percent gold or 25 percent gold, it has a much higher tax placed upon it. The proposed act relieves the banks of the necessity of paying this graduated tax by reason of operations under this section and also relieves the banks of any automatic increase in the rates of interest or discount charged by any Federal Reserve bank.

NEW POWER FOR CONTRACTION AND EXPANSION OF CREDIT

Undue credit expansion may also be prevented under this section by the Federal Reserve Board and Secretary of the Treasury requiring the Federal Reserve banks to take such action as may be necessary in the judgment of the Board. Under this provision, reserve requirements of banks may be raised or lowered, which will permit expansion or contraction of credit.

If $3,000,000,000 in new money—Federal Reserve notes—are issued in exchange for the securities permitted under this section, there will be $3,000,000,000 idle money in the hands of the former owners of the securities. Money is no good unless it is working. If there is a rising market, there will be an incentive for the holders of this new money to invest it quickly. On a rising market, every day that the dollar is held it is less valuable, therefore there is an incentive on a rising market for people to invest their money or exchange it for something in the way of goods or services before the dollar becomes cheaper and the goods and services become higher. This expansion will cause velocity of money and make credit easier.

THE SO-CALLED "GREENBACK PROVISION"

Section 43 (b) provides that if the Secretary of the Treasury is unable to secure the proper agreements with the Federal Reserve Board for the issuance of the $3,000,000,000 in Federal Reserve notes as aforesaid, or if operations under the provisions of section 42 (a) prove to be inadequate, or if, for any other reason, additional measures are required in the judgment of the President to meet such purposes, then the President is authorized to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be issued, in such an amount or amounts as he may from time to time order, United States notes, as provided in the act of February 25, 1862, and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof; but notes issued under this subsection shall be issued only for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States and for purchasing United States bonds and other interest-bearing obligations of the United States. Such bonds so purchased shall be retired and canceled. The aggregate amount of such United States notes at any time shall not exceed $3,000,000,000. In order to provide for the retirement of these notes, sufficient money will be collected in the form of taxes every year to cancel 4 percent of them. This will automatically cause their retirement in 25 years. Such notes shall be legal tender for all debts public and private.

TWO LONG STEPS IN RIGHT DIRECTION

I submit that the two steps that are made in this amendment, sections 43 (a) and (b), are the longest steps that have ever been made in the right direction to take the control of money and credits away from a few powerful bankers and restore it to the Government of the United States where it properly belongs. It takes from Wall Street international bankers considerable power they now have to inflate and deflate our currency and to thereby cause commodity prices and the price of everything else to go up or down as they may choose.

ALL LEGISLATION RESULT OF COMPROMISE

Certain changes I should like to see made in these provisions if it were within my power. I realize, however, that all legislation is a result of compromise. We cannot have everything we want. We must give and take. Generally, I am highly pleased with these provisions which relate to the increase of our circulating medium. Money determines the value of everything.

The argument is made that these two provisions if put into effect will cause prices to go through the roof. Considering the recent deflationary moves, including $20,000,000,000 decrease in bank deposits and $5,000,000,000 being tied up in closed banks, the amount of expansion herein proposed will not cause undue inflation.

PROPOSED NOTES BACKED BY GOLD

These United States notes are backed by gold in exactly the same manner as the $346,681,000.16 in United States notes that are now outstanding, which were issued in identically the same manner as the $3,000,000,000 are proposed to be issued under section 43 (b). There is a gold reserve in the Treasury of $156,039,088 as a gold coverage for all notes so issued. The faith of the United States is pledged to the payment in coin or its equivalent of United States notes by the act of March 18, 1869.

GOLD PARITY ACT OF 1900

Under the act of March 14, 1900, should the gold reserve, which is used as a coverage for United States notes, fall below $100,000,000 at any time, then it is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to restore the same to the maximum sum of $150,000,000 by borrowing money on the credit of the United States and to sell bonds bearing interest at the rate of not exceeding 3 percent per annum. Under this section the gold reserve will be increased if it is depleted below $100,000,000, so it cannot be said that these notes represent fiat money, because they are redeemable in gold of the present weight and fineness.

DEVALUATING GOLD DOLLAR PERMITTED

Subsection 2 of section 43 (b) provides that the President may by proclamation fix the weight of the gold dollar in grains nine-tenths fine and also to fix the weight of silver dollar in grains nine-tenths fine at a definite fixed ratio in relation to the gold dollar at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation to stabilize prices or to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of the depreciated foreign currencies and to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed, or in case the Government of the United States enters into an agreement with any government or governments under the terms of which the ratio between the value of gold and other currency issued by the United States and by any such government or governments is established, the President may fix the weight of the gold dollar in accordance with the ratio so agreed upon, and such gold dollar, the weight of which is so fixed, shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity with this standard and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity, but in no event shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed so as to reduce its present weight by more than 50 percent.

OTHER COUNTRIES HAVE POWER

In every country in the world except the United States there is some person who has the authority to devalue gold. We will soon go into an economic conference with foreign nations. The question of gold, silver, and currency will be paramount. The hands of our representatives will be tied if the President is not given this power. If he is given this power, the United States will be in a position to get a great deal more in the way of concessions from foreign countries.

NEEDED FOR TRADING PURPOSES

If I were to be required to vote on the question of devaluing the gold dollar in the United States without reference to its international aspect, I would vote against it. However, in this case, it is necessary that this power be extended in order that our President may properly deal with other countries. It is not necessary to reduce the gold content in a dollar in the United States in order to raise commodity prices. We have a sufficient gold base now to authorize the issuance of $4,000,000,000 additional money. The argument for devaluation is that it will give us a broader base upon which to issue additional currency. What right have we to presume that the power to issue additional currency will be exercised after devaluation if we have a sufficient gold base at this time to issue billions and billions of new money without lowering our gold reserves below 40 percent and do not exercise it?

SILVER AMENDMENT

Section 45, of amendment 85, permits the President to accept silver in payment of debts due some foreign governments, not to exceed the price of 50 cents an ounce, and the amount not to exceed $200,000,000.

Countries on a silver basis are now paying the equivalent of from 20 cents to 25 cents a pound for our cotton. Our farmers are only getting 5 cents and 6 cents a pound because of the depreciated price of silver, the only commodity that these countries have to pay with. A few years ago, one purchasing a small American automobile was required to pay the same amount that one in the United States would pay, $500. Now, that $500 car is costing the foreigner in a silver country from $2,000 to $2,200. Silver has an international aspect and should have much consideration. I favor the remonetization of silver or the use of silver as a commodity base for the issuance of additional money.

INCREASED PRICE OF SILVER HELPS GENERAL WELFARE

This amendment will doubtless cause the price of silver to increase. As the price of silver, which is the circulating medium of so many countries in the world, increases, the purchasing power of the people in these silver countries will increase, which will permit the people of the United States to have a better market in these countries. Personally, I regret to vote in favor of allowing foreign countries to pay their debts to us in silver at 50 cents an ounce and not permit some of our own debtors to do the same thing. However, this is a step in the right direction, and although it does not go as far as I should like for it to go, I am very glad to give it my endorsement. The silver that is accepted will be used as a base for the issuance of silver certificates. These certificates may be used by banks as a basis for credit expansion. This will be very helpful to the country generally.

Section 46, of amendment 85, amends section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act and gives the Federal Reserve Board the right to raise the reserve requirements of banks against either demand or time deposits if the Board declares that an emergency exists by reason of credit expansion.

This is broad power; I hope it is exercised in the interest of the general welfare.

GOING OFF GOLD STANDARD

Going off gold by the United States will have no influence upon prices in the long run. It will, however, tend to increase our exports and reduce our imports by making it cheaper for foreign nations to buy here and dearer for us to buy abroad.

England, when she went off of the gold standard, took some deflationary steps. It was, therefore, impossible for commodity prices to rise. She set about balancing her budget, reduced doles, unemployment insurance, and other public-relief work, and raised the Bank of England rate to 6 percent to attract and hold money in London.

It is our intention, however, that the United States embark upon a program of public expenditure for relief, to expand credit through the Federal Reserve purchases of Government bonds, and, if necessary, to print large amounts of new currency under the old greenback law. Furthermore, the administration is being given power to reduce the gold content of the dollar if these other measures do not work. Therefore, our commodity prices should rise, thereby restoring buying power.

DEFLATION MUST BE ARRESTED

Since we have recently suffered from drastically deflationary steps by the adoption of the economy bill, the closing of so many banks, reduction of purchasing power of the people generally, it is necessary that inflationary measures be enacted.

The United States holds more than $4,300,000,000 of monetary gold, a larger amount than any other nation has ever possessed and more than is now held by all the nations in all the world, except France.

The United States went off gold voluntarily; England was forced off. No nation has ever got out of a depression without inflation.

USES AND AMOUNT OF GOLD

Gold has two main uses. It is employed to settle commercial balances between nations. When the supply of goods and services furnished by one falls short of goods and services furnished by the other, gold normally makes up the difference. The last few years the United States has been selling much more abroad than has been imported. The difference has been made up not in the importation of gold, but in borrowings from our country. Secondly, it is used as a basis for the gold standard within a given nation. A country which is on the gold standard guarantees to deliver upon demand so many grains of gold for a paper dollar. To support its guaranty the country keeps on hand in gold a fixed minimum percentage of the paper dollars outstanding. In the United States the policy has been adopted of maintaining a 40-percent ratio. If everybody with paper dollars demanded gold at once, it is obvious that all of them could not be paid. By the law of probabilities this does not happen any more than all the life-insurance policyholders dying at once and heirs demanding the insurance.

Generally speaking, gold has been too scarce to use as a standard. The total world stock is a cube about 36 feet square.

WILL CHEAPER DOLLARS HURT THE POOR? THE FIVE M'S SAY IT WILL

Mr. Ogden Mills, former Secretary of the Treasury and spokesman for the Republican Party and international bankers, has given out the following statement in regard to the President's program which calls for currency expansion:

The poor people with savings accounts and insurance policies are the ones who will suffer under this proposal.

Similar statements have been given out by Mellon, Morgan, Meyer, and Mitchell, of this group, in the past, but they usually add that the wage earners and farmers will be ruined. We must remember about Esau's hands but Jacob's voice. The five M's—Mellon, Morgan, Mills, Meyer, and Mitchell—have been running this country the past 12 years up to March 4. I have often pointed this out in speeches on the floor of the House. I have the satisfaction of knowing that we now have all of them out of control of the Government and the monetary system except Mr. Morgan; he still has considerable control over the monetary system by reason of international connections with the use of our Government credit free, which is permitted under idiotic banking system set-up. A Senate committee has summoned J. P. Morgan to appear before them. His international banking affairs will be investigated in connection with his sale of worthless foreign securities to the American investors. Possibly we will get rid of the fifth M.

EXPANSION WILL HELP FARMERS

May 1, 1920, cotton was worth 40 cents a pound, and wheat was worth $3 a bushel; the farmers had plenty of buying power. Deflation of the currency was ordered, and in 4 months the farmers had taken a 20-billion-dollar loss, and their cotton was selling for 7 cents a pound and wheat $1.40 a bushel. If deflation can destroy values, reflation can restore values.

If quantity of credit is desirable, quantity of money is also desirable.

The honest dollar will cause taxes to be easier to pay.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to inflation as a general policy, but if we are going to have inflation, I agree with the gentleman from Texas who has just spoken that the most immediate and effective kind of inflation and the most workable and the easiest would be to pay the soldiers' bonus right away. [Applause.]

I propose to consume my time today by reading my remarks, so there will be no mistake as to their exact meaning, and to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the record of some of the instigators and expounders of this combination farm and inflation bill.

Now that the three distinguished guests of the Democratic Party have departed these shores, we can again discuss such domestic issues as inflation and farm relief without interfering with seating arrangements at the White House or diplomatic conversations over war debts, embargoes, consultative pacts, increased foreign importations based on depreciated currencies to further increase American unemployment, and the St. Lawrence ship canal, aimed to divert trade and traffic away from the port of New York.

Senator THOMAS' inflation amendment to the farm bill is the most amazing, daring, and dangerous piece of legislation offered to the American people. Whence does it emanate? Who claims its paternity? The best sources of information attribute it to those tried and experienced financiers—Professors Moley and Tugwell, Mordecai Ezekiel, and possibly Bullitt, who appears to be sitting in on the international conferences. Upon their advice the whole financial fabric of our Government is to be overturned—our traditional policy discarded, our currency debased.

Has any financier been consulted, or given this approval? It is difficult to realize that the Democratic Party as soon as it gains full control of the Government should subject the country to the dangerous fallacies of greenbackism, fiat money and populistic socialism, and the free-silver doctrines of William Jennings Bryan. Would that the President and Congress had the courage and the wisdom of Grover Cleveland.

Within 2 months of the beginning of the Democratic administration the promise in their platform to give the country a sound currency has been flouted and a debased currency is substituted. Is this a part of the "new deal"?

What the "new deal" promised the people of the United States was as vague and theoretical when the slogan was first coined for the American voters as is some of the legislation, such as the farm bill, now offered as a part of the "new deal." Congress must be deaf, dumb, and blind, as the avowed Communist, George Bernard Shaw, said of all Americans, when it enacts the complicated bills that are coming through the White House from the hands of the "brain trust" composed mostly of Columbia University theoretical and socialistic professors.

The farm bill, which the President recommended as a noble "experiment" was explained to Congress by Prof. Mordecai Ezekiel, of the Wallace-Tugwell agricultural department, formerly the United States Department of Agriculture, as follows:

The price for each month may be conceived as represented by a small black ball suspended above the line for its own date at the height of the average price for that month, and as far over from the right to left as indicated by the supply for that month. There would necessarily be only one ball for each month. These balls, however, would all be very close to the demand surface, a little above it for those months when the actual price was higher than the price as shown by the correlation formula and a little lower for the months when the actual price was a little below the estimated price. In general, however, it would be seen that the demand surface approximated the position that these prices occupy as they were thus suspended through space and time.

How simple! If prices do not perform according to the chart, the consumer can be blackballed.

Certain this explanation is so simple that anyone should comprehend it, but fearing that it ought to be further elucidated, Senator HUEY LONG insisted on reading another section of Professor Ezekiel's plan, which dealt with "factor's X from the first to the tenth power", with a "regression equation" showing as fine an assortment of logarithms as a hog raiser ever looked at. In further explanation, the clerk continued the reading, as follows:

The value of the constant (k) in this equation varies according to the units in which the different variables are expressed. The variable X (10) represents the price index, so moving the regression value for that variable to the left of the equality sign gives the regression equation for the prices deflated according to the observed relation.

Now, of course, every farmer and business man can understand this explanation of the farm bill. If Professor Einstein had given such an explanation of the bill to the Congress no one would have been surprised and the matter could have been overlooked, for only he claims the honor of being familiar with relativity. But when our own Department of Agriculture expert digs down into the rich soil and plucks from it the X's, Z's, and what not, the American farmer cannot be expected to understand such fine distinctions. When we dissect this bill, from an American standpoint, its socialistic proposals can be plainly seen and if enacted will plague us for years to come.

Where did the "new-deal" idea come from? Could it be that this masterpiece of Russian ideology is the handout of the President's "cap-and-gown" advisers, or college professors, hailing mostly from Columbia University? Or is it possible that the "new deal" was borrowed from the Socialist book, A New Deal, from which apparently a large part of the proposed legislative program has been taken?

As Al Smith often says, "let's look at the record." Let us see what the record discloses about the instigators and exponents of the farm bill and inflation. Let us get acquainted with the past affiliations of each member of this "brain trust"—Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, Prof. Raymond Moley, Mordecai Ezekiel, and William C. Bullitt. We will have to pass up Secretary Perkins at this time, as her pet measure to control the hours of labor and wages is not now under consideration.

Professor Tugwell is quite a book agriculturist. He has made a study of agriculture and knows all about the farmers' plight, so he says. He is especially informed on the Russian Gosplan, and if the Communist publications are correct, as early as January 1930 Mr. Tugwell advocated the Bolshevik plan for the United States. We have only to read the reports from Moscow to know how effectively this plan works in Russia at the point of the bayonet.

It might be interesting to know that here is a clipping from the greatest propagandist of Soviet Russia in the world, a writer for the New York Times, Mr. Walter Duranty, who says that after 15 years the agricultural plan in Russia has failed. The heading of this article in the New York Times is "All Russia suffers shortage of food, supplies dwindle, two thirds of the people are not expected to get sufficient allowances in winter; crops far below 1930; livestock reduced more than 50 percent from 5 years ago, with fodder lacking; new plans dropped." These are the agricultural plans that were commended by Mr. Tugwell and probably are the plans now being suggested or copied from Soviet Russia in the pending farm bill. If it is the purpose to reduce production of farm products, as has happened in Soviet Russia, then this farm bill ought to succeed at least in that respect, although that was not the intention of the framers of the Soviet gosplan in Russia.

Mr. Tugwell is coauthor with Stuart Chase (another Socialist) and Robert Dunn (a Communist) of the book, Soviet Russia in the Second Decade, and this same Stuart Chase (Socialist friend of Tugwell) is the author of the book, A New Deal, in which he says that "in a way it is a pity that the road to revolution is temporarily closed." We find that Professor Tugwell has for years trained with the Socialists of the Nation. He was professor of economics at Columbia University; contributing editor to the socialistic New Republic magazine, more or less a semiofficial organ of the Socialist Party; a member of the advisory board of the People's Lobby, a socialistic movement set up by John Dewey, another Socialist professor of Columbia University; and is on the board of directors of Manumit Associates, Inc., a radical enterprise partially supported by the American Fund for Public Service (Garland Fund), the spending of which fund was in the hands of a committee of Socialists and Communists, who doled it out for Socialist and communist activities. Tugwell has been a member of several committees of the American Civil Liberties Union, an organization specializing in the defense of Communists and radicals of all types. He has written on socialism, having collaborated in Socialist Planning and a Socialist Program, while he wrote Experimental Control of Russian Industry, and Soviet Russia in the Second Decade. He believes there is "no difference between Russians and Americans."

Tugwell has opposed such farm-relief plans as the McNary-Haugen bill, and tariffs which he says lead to "isolated nationalism." With Prof. Mordecai Ezekiel, he is credited with preparing the newly proposed farm bill, which grants the powers of a dictator. It requires a dictator and the red army to force a similar program down the throats of the peasant farmers of Russia. Perhaps that is why a dictator of agriculture is required here. The control of acreage, of production, of markets, of earnings, of what the farmer may grow, and how much, how he shall spend his money and how much he shall have are only the powers granted a dictator.

The second in line in the "brain trust" appears to be a Prof. Raymond Moley, who also hails from Columbia University. Professor Moley is our new Assistant Secretary of State. Professor Moley has been a lecturer at the Rand

School, a socialist-pacifist college which was raided during the World War for slackers. These lectures were regularly attended by extreme radical Socialists, pacifists, and Communists. Moley is a director of the Foreign Language Information Service set up by the American Civil Liberties Union crowd. Some months ago, following the arrest of a number of Communist agitators in New York City, the American Civil Liberties Union held a protest meeting against alleged "police brutality", at which the radicals of the American Civil Liberties Union directorate held forth, and Professor Moley was there in prominence. Professor Moley is looked upon as the right arm of the Professor Tugwell group composing the "brain trust."

Prof. Mordecai Ezekiel, the economic adviser to the Secretary of Agriculture, is a real shadow of Professor Tugwell, so far as the Russian farm plan is concerned. He appears to be the Professor Einstein of the administration and carefully elaborates the workings of the "new deal" to Congress by the use of logarithms, letting a hog equal X, the squeal equal Y, and the price equal Z. If it works out "everything will be all right." Professor Ezekiel has visited Russia where he made considerably study of the gosplan.

A new Assistant to the Secretary of State is a close friend of Professor Moley. He is William Bullitt, who is credited by Mr. Tumulty with having brought about the physical collapse of that great Democratic President, Woodrow Wilson. He was accused recently by our distinguished Senator ARTHUR ROBINSON of representing "someone" in trading off the American people while in Europe. I am informed that he married a Communist sympathizer; in fact, the wife of my classmate at Harvard, John Reed, the American hero of Communism, and now buried in Moscow near the tomb of Lenin. This is the man who is an Assistant to the Secretary of State.

Bullitt has been a bosom friend of Lincoln Steffens (Communist) for many years, and he spent much time in Russia with the red publicist in close association with Lenin, Tchitcherin, and Litvinoff. While he denied, on returning recently from Europe, that he had been on a mission for anyone in the United States, it is significant that he now sits at the head of the conference table with the other members of the administration in dealing with the European debt and other questions. In Europe he announced that Europe would pay America 10 cents on the dollar, and apparently this is the offer being made by Europe today. The loss to America would be 90 cents on the dollar, which American taxpayers would necessarily have to pay for Europe.

The effects of the Thomas inflation bill and the Tugwell farm bill will automatically cut the purchasing power of the American wage earners, as the cost of necessities will increase, while at the same time their wages are being reduced by shorter hours and a minimum wage as set forth in the Perkins-Black bill. This stifling plan will naturally tend to reduce consumption all along the line, and, while increasing the farmer's selling prices, it reduces his sales, and he is back where he started, only he will be worse off, because the cost of what he has to buy has also increased.

The embargo on gold exports was undoubtedly a healthy and necessary move by the administration. It had the effect of a tariff, but should the administration follow its announced plan of reducing the American tariff, that act will undo the advantage we have gained by the gold embargo.

How transferring under the inflation legislation the load of the debts of one class to another class will solve the difficulties our people are experiencing I cannot see, for the debts still exist, it does not matter which way they are transferred. The fact is that in all the legislation so far proposed by the "brain trust" the purpose is apparently an attempt to rob Peter to pay Paul. One individual calls it a "shot in the arm", from which we will have a sick headache after it has taken effect.

I find no fault with the manner in which the administration solved our emergency banking situation, except that I feel that those many banks that are still closed should be reorganized immediately and the millions of dollars tied up in them put back to work. This is our greatest handicap today, and it must be straightened out very soon if business is to revive. The administration's proposal for power to lay an arms embargo will not help our domestic problems; it will not reopen these banks; it will not put men back to work; it will not help the farmer and home owner take care of his taxes and mortgage payments, but it is apt to lead to war.

The reforestation plan is a sample of what may be expected from other legislation that is awaiting enactment. It, of course, has taken a number of deserving men off the streets and put them to work on the forests at $30 per month, but if it causes the release of 15,000 of our soldiers and 4,000 officers into the ranks of the unemployed, what purpose has it served? The soldiers in whose camps the foresters are placed for training purposes train these men who receive $30 a month, while they themselves receive only $17.50 a month, and they are now wondering each day if they are to take the place on the street vacated by those they are now training.

It occurs to me that the "brain trust" has miserably failed in its attempt to establish an American "new deal"; that we are getting nowhere, and in fact slipping. Unemployment appears to be on the increase, as the administration skates from one pond to another in its combination of a so-called "economy plan", and a socialized construction plan. We hear control of transportation, control of air, control of mines, control of power, control of labor, control of banks, control of wages, control of hours, control of agriculture, control of distribution, control of production, and control of Congress itself, through the transfer of its constitutional power to self-imposed dictators.

If one reads the Socialist platform of 1912, it makes one wonder whether the "brain trust" has not substituted it for the Democratic platform, on which latter not they but a majority of the Representatives in Congress were elected by the American people. Socialism and communism were not voted into power; yet these are what the people are having thrust upon them under the Democratic banner. Congress is ignored in the framing of the legislation, and we are asked to swallow it as an experiment after it is prepared.

It is no wonder that Frederick Prince, president of the Chicago Stockyards Co., on his recent return from Europe called upon the Nation to strip itself of meddling professors. "You have only to think back the last 10 years upon the difficulties into which we have been drawn because of the influence of the professors to realize that the sooner we get away from this influence the better we will be", said Mr. Prince. We now have a new crop, and this time they ask for control of our Government. What can we expect the result to be? Are we going to turn over blindly our powers and risk the future of our Government and the welfare of our people by supporting such theorists who, as Mr. Prince truthfully says, are the wrecking squad of the past?

As Bourke Cockran, that great Democratic orator, said back in 1896, "What is the issue? Stripped of all verbal disguise, it is an issue of common honesty; an issue between an honest discharge and a dishonest repudiation of public and private obligations", and that is the same issue today, revived by the "brain trust" and based upon the fantastic dreams of populist agitators. The pretense that men can be enriched by swelling the volume of the currency is a delusion which has affected mankind at recurring intervals since the dawn of civilization. [Applause.] The "brain trust" has raised doubts as to the soundness of our money and has frightened trade from the market places. The basis of sound trade is sound money. It is perfectly clear, however, that the purpose of the "brain trust" is to raise the price of certain commodities, but when you debase the dollar to do it, you cheat and rob the laborer of that which he has earned by the sweat of his brow.

The Populist, Socialist, and inflationist declare that the creditor is a person who oppresses the western and southern farmer. These inflationists invariably describe the creditor as "loud of dress, coarse of feature, gaudy of ornament, with cruel expression on his face, vicious in morals, and hateful in appearance." According to the inflationists, the money lender and the creditor are synonymous expressions. But, as a matter of fact, the creditors of this country are not the bankers; they are not the so-called "capitalists." The real creditors are the laborers, the American wage earners, and if the creditor is to be cheated by a reduction in the value of the dollar it is and must be at the expense of labor.

The proposal to debase the dollar is an attack on the wage earners and industry in the North and the East. The farm bill proposes to reduce the wages of labor by reducing the purchasing power of labor to obtain foodstuffs and the necessities of life. Paraphrasing the famous remark of William Jennings Bryan, "You shall not place a crown of inflation and reduced purchasing power upon the brow of labor." You shall not rob labor in the East and the North by dividing the American people into hostile and sectional classes by increasing the cost of living and reducing the value of the dollar.

The proposed inflation amendment will prove more injurious to the little man than to the big. I am thinking of the men in the factories, the workshops, and in all lines of American industry. I am not thinking of the millionaire class, as they no longer exist in my district except a few closely associated with the President.

Who are the forgotten men today but 30 millions of consumers in the East and 40 millions of wage earners throughout the country and the distinguished former Secretary of the Treasury, CARTER GLASS, to whom his party owed the enactment of the Federal Reserve Act, the only great and sound financial legislation ever enacted under a Democratic administration.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us—H.R. 3835—is a bill to relieve agriculture and to put it on the basis of equality with other industries and to expand the currency.

I doubt if there was ever a more important bill before the Congress of the United States at any time in the past that was as important to the United States Government and its people as this measure.

The present acute economic emergency is in consequence of a severe and increasing disparity between the prices of agricultural and other commodities, which disparity has largely destroyed the purchasing power of farmers for industrial products, has broken down the orderly exchange of commodities and has seriously impaired the agricultural assets supporting the national credit structure. Agriculture is our basic industry, and if our Government continues, it must be taken care of.

This bill gives a great deal of power to the President of the United States and to the Department of Agriculture, and the success or failure of this bill depends largely upon the administration of it. The bill is not a single plan for agriculture alone but contains the several plans that have been suggested, and they are placed at the option of the Department, so that either of them may be enforced where it will best help the conditions of agriculture.

This bill seeks to establish and maintain as a policy of this Government such balance between the production and consumption of agricultural commodities and such marketing conditions therefor as will reestablish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period.

The base period in the case of all agricultural commodities except tobacco, milk, and its products shall be the pre-war period August 1909–July 1914. In the case of tobacco and milk and its products the base period shall be the post-war period September 1919–August 1928.

The purpose of the bill, taken in its entirety, is to raise the price of agricultural commodities and bring it to that price that it was between 1909 and 1914.

This bill provides for a method to accomplish this by what is known as a "processing fee", which goes to the benefit of the man producing the agricultural commodity. The bill has already been more effective, even before it has been signed by the President of the United States, than any other measure that has been proposed in Congress during the past 4 years that I have been a Member of this Congress. Wheat, corn, cotton, rice, and practically every agricultural commodity has increased 25 percent by reason of the fact that everybody knows that if this bill goes into effect agricultural commodity prices must come up and the high, costly, and expensive dollar must come down.

It is now, and has been for a long period of time, a moot question as to whether we now have an overproduction or an underconsumption of these commodities. My contention is, and has been, that it is caused more from underconsumption than by overproduction, by reason of the fact that the purchasing power of the people has been almost wholly destroyed within the past 4 years. You give the people employment, give them a chance to make money, and when they start spending it you will have very few surplus crops in this country. In other words, if the hungry were properly fed and all the people were properly clothed, we would have no surpluses.

This bill seeks to deal with that question on the theory that the reduction of acreage is necessary in order to restore normal conditions. By doing this they seek to make it possible for the farmer to reduce his acreage and yet get a profit from his lands not used in cultivation, as is provided for under the terms of this bill.

Let us first take cotton. That is our staple commodity and moneyed crop of the South. If cotton brings a fair market price, the South is prosperous, and if the price is placed where it has been for the last year or two, then farmers are reduced to the point where they cannot survive. This bill provides that if the acreage is decreased 30 percent the man who decreases his acreage has the right to take an optional contract for whatever amount of cotton his land left out of cultivation would reasonably produce during this year, and if cotton goes up, say 2 or 5 cents per pound, the farmer gets the advantage of that by reason of his reduced acreage. It is purely optional with him whether he takes his contract or does not exercise his option before the time is out.

In other words, he cannot lose anything but stands a chance to gain and brings about the result of decreasing the amount of cotton produced each year until the surplus can be used up.

It is impossible for a farmer having all he has invested in lands to allow his lands that are susceptible to cultivation to the amount of 30 percent to lie idle and produce nothing. This provides a way whereby he may let them lie idle and still produce just as much to him as if he had cultivated them, and possibly more.

There are two provisions of this bill that will apply to cotton. First, the plan just discussed, known as "the Smith bill", and the other is the allotment plan, and the allotment plan for cotton, in my opinion, as well as other agricultural commodities is far better than the one just discussed.

For instance, suppose you want to raise the price of cotton 5 cents per pound. All you have to do is put a 5-cent per pound processing tax on the manufacturer, and that is passed out into the manufactured product, and the consumer that buys it will hardly know the difference in the price, and it should make very little difference in the cost of manufactured articles. Yet the man who produced it is enabled to live in prosperity.

The same argument will hold good as to wheat, corn, rice, and all other staple agricultural commodities. It is my opinion that within a year from this date, as we have gone back to the double standard of money of both gold and silver, we will not have any surplus of cotton in this country that will affect our market prices.

If you will only take the time to investigate, you will find that one of the most hurtful things to the American cotton grower is the fact that the foreign countries have been growing a much larger quantity of short-lint cotton, which is the only kind they can produce, and that has been the worst enemy the cotton farmer of the United States has had to fight.

Prior to the last war foreign countries grew only about 6,000,000 bales of this short-lint cotton. Now they are growing 12½ million bales. It is not profitable for them to grow it, and they only grow it because it becomes a necessity for them to do so because our gold standard of money prevented them from trading with us as they once did. Before we went off the gold standard the amount of silver that was in their dollar, measured by the gold standard in America, was only worth 25 cents. Or in other words, when India, China, or any of the silver-using countries came to this country to buy cotton, if cotton was selling here for 5 cents per pound they had to pay four times that amount, or in their money, 20 cents per pound.

Now we have gone back to the double standard of money, both gold and silver; there is no reason why they should not discontinue growing this short-lint cotton and buy our long-lint cotton; and if they do, as we firmly believe they will, it will only be a short time until America will be asked to produce more cotton instead of decreasing its acreage.

Another plan furnished in this bill, known as "the Simpson plan", is optional and can be used if the Secretary of Agriculture finds it is a more desirable and workable plan than the others. It has a worthy purpose which seeks to provide a price for the farmer equal to the cost of production with a reasonable profit for the investment. No one can contend that is unfair, but it is something that everybody must concede the farmer is entitled to.

The former President of the United States in his campaign for reelection last time said many times in his speeches that I heard over the radio that he had been able to keep us on the gold standard and to maintain a high tariff. I thought then, as I think now, that they are the two greatest evils we have had to contend with recently. Not that a gold standard is not sound and right, and that it should be maintained, but it should not be used as the only standard is my contention.

I have always been a believer in a bimetallism of money, both gold and silver used as a basis for our money, and our Constitution provides for that, and when that is done we will have plenty of money on a sure and safe basis, so that we can trade with all the world, and no living human can say it is fiat money, but he must concede that it is constitutionally sound and economically right.

The Constitution of the United States gives to Congress the power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof. Congress, in my opinion, made a great mistake when they gave this power to the Federal Reserve, and provided that they might issue the money when 40-percent gold reserve or eligible paper was retained to back up the currency.

The trouble with our Government has been that it has never used the thought of eligible paper until recently but has tried to maintain everything on a gold standard with 80-percent reserve instead of 40 percent.

This bill provides for the issuing of $3,000,000,000 in Treasury notes or money which will be backed by the good faith and credit of this Government. It provides also for the free coinage of both gold and silver. It provides for reducing the gold content, or reevaluating gold and fixing a different standard from that that is now fixed.

In other words, the Congress, having the right as given them under the Constitution of the United States to issue money and regulate the value thereof, can say that the amount of gold that is in the $20 gold piece now is worth $40 just as easily as to say it is worth $20. That is a crude illustration, but that is what this bill provides, that the gold content may be reduced and that silver may be used as a medium of exchange, as provided for by the Constitution.

That an expansion of currency will bring up farm and commodity values no one can doubt, because even the agitation of it has had a wonderful effect before the bill was passed and signed by the President, by the very fact that they know what the result of this character of legislation is going to be.

I said in some literature I circulated 2 years ago in my district that agriculture was being crucified on the cross of gold and at the altar of shame. I repeat now that is true and has been thoroughly demonstrated to be true.

Let us hope that we will never again have to contend with conditions we had had for the past 3 years.

I introduced nearly 3 years ago in this Congress a bill asking for $2,000,000,000 of silver money to be put into use to still the storm that many of us then saw coming, but the ear of the administration was closed to that kind of arguments and on and on it went from prosperity to the worst money panic the world has ever seen, and I hope the worst we will ever see.

When this bill is signed, then I want to see us pass a bill which will correct the evils of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill and give us reciprocal trade relations with other countries, tearing down the tariff wall entirely if it is necessary in order to have our export trade; and when this is done, with our new ideas of the use of constitutional currency of both gold and silver, we are then, in my opinion, headed toward another era of prosperity equal to any this Government has ever experienced. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that leave of absence may be granted to my colleague from New York [Mr. REED], on account of sickness, for 3 days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a short while ago a question was asked on the Democratic side whether anything had happened thus far to make the people lose confidence in President Roosevelt, or if he had done anything whatever different from what he had promised before election. I shall take a few minutes to call the attention of Members to an address made by President Roosevelt at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on November 4 last, and then you can draw your own conclusions and answer the question for yourself. Governor Roosevelt at that time said:

One of the most commonly repeated misrepresentations by the Republican speakers, including the President, has been the claim that the Democratic position with regard to money has not been sufficiently clear. The President is seeing a vision of rubber dollars, but that is not the only part of his campaign of fear. I am not going to characterize these statements. I merely will present the facts.

And here are the facts as presented by Governor Roosevelt at that time:

The Democratic platform specifically declares: "We advocate a sound currency, to be preserved at all hazards." That, I take it, is plain English. In discussing this platform on July 30, I said: "Sound money is an international necessity, not a domestic consideration for one nation alone." In other words, I want to see sound money in all the world. Far up in the Northwest, at Butte, Mont., I repeated the pledge of the platform, saying sound currency must be maintained at all hazards. In Seattle, I reaffirmed my attitude on this question. The thing has been said, therefore, in plain English three times in my speeches. It is stated without qualification in the platform, and I have announced my unqualified acceptance of that platform. So much for that misrepresentation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Not yet. At another point in his address Governor Roosevelt said:

The business men of the Nation, battling hard to maintain their financial solvency and integrity, were told in blunt language in Des Moines, Iowa, how close an escape this country had some months ago from going off the gold standard. But that, my friends, as has been clearly shown since, was a libel on the credit of the United States.

And it is worthy of note that no adequate answer has been made to the magnificent philippic of Senator GLASS the other night, in which he showed how unsound this assertion was. And I might add, Senator GLASS made a devastating challenge that no responsible government would have sold to the country securities payable in gold if it knew that the promise, yes, the covenant, embodied in these securities, was as dubious as the President of the United States claims it was.

That is the statement of President Roosevelt on November 4, and if I read the newspapers correctly, the distinguished Senator to whom he refers, if he is quoted correctly, says that he, the Senator, has not broken with the President, but that the President has broken with him. I leave that for your own conclusion, and the reason for this break.

In order to prove by a distinguished Democratic Member of this House that the kind of money that you are proposing to issue under this bill is not the kind of money that the distinguished President of the United States said that he stood for on November 4, I shall quote from a report made by the distinguished Speaker of this House just about 1 year ago today, when the Ways and Means Committee reported the Patman bill adversely.

This bill provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should issue Treasury notes that should be legal tender and in a good many ways about the same kind of money the present President wants issued under this bill.

Quoting Mr. RAINEY:

It is contended that what we need is more money in circulation in order to restore the prices of 1929, but in 1929 we had $900,000,000 less of currency outstanding than we have now and it is difficult for me to understand this kind of reasoning.

Some of these pending bills provide for a bond issue, the bonds to be held by the Federal Reserve bank and Treasury notes to be issued against the bonds.

It does not appear to me that this makes any substantial difference in the proposition. Fiat money is money which is issued on the credit of the Government, for its payment and the mere promise of the Government to pay Treasury notes based upon the promise of the Government to pay bonds does not appear to me to relieve the situation in the least. It is still fiat money.

That is what Speaker RAINEY said a year ago about the kind of money you are authorizing under this bill.

Continuing quoting from the Speaker:

In the recent past we have seen European governments resort to fiat money until it took in Germany millions of marks to buy a small loaf of bread, and finally the German issue of fiat money, based on the promise of the German Government to pay, was stabilized on the basis of one trillion of marks, based on the promise of the Government to pay, for one gold mark. A government once embarked upon the practice of issuing fiat money finds it difficult always to stop. The experiences of Germany and other nations ought not to be repeated in this, the greatest and richest Nation in the world. There may be some excuse for impoverished European nations, emerging from the World War, to deprecate their currency with such disastrous results to them, but with their example staring us in the face it is incomprehensible to me that this proposition can be seriously considered in this country.

Gentlemen, there are the statements of your own two leaders, and I leave those statements with the people of this country to draw their own conclusions as to whether or not President Roosevelt stands today where he stood before election as regards sound money and the credit of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. No; I am not going to yield at the present time.

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] as he may desire.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I am sure it was not very surprising to any of us when the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], in advance of consuming all of his time, left the floor, declining to yield to an inquiry from the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

In my judgment, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], in his short address, has given the very best reasons in the world why this bill should be passed, and why all of you gentlemen, including the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], should vote for it.

The gentleman quoted from speeches made by the President during the campaign last fall, in which the President declared in unquestioned terms that he favored a sound currency. The gentleman from New York did not undertake to assert that the President had changed his views from what they were last fall. This bill is simply discretionary upon the part of the President, to use the powers conferred if the necessities of the Government and the people of this country demand it. Nothing more and nothing less. If the views, as expressed by the President in his campaign and approved by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] are still his views, and certainly nobody would be heard to deny it, then there can be no reason why he should not have this authority, in order to bring down the unprecedented value of the dollar, and give to the producers of this country an opportunity to realize a fair price for their products. And we can have no return to permanent prosperity until this is brought about.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I was trying to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], the minority leader, whether he really and sincerely believed that under present conditions we had a sound currency?

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will yield to me.

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, the gentleman refused to yield in his own time, and I do not propose that he shall take my time. [Laughter and applause.] The gentleman had his opportunity when he was before the House, and he did not avail himself of it.

Is it a sound currency when the gold dollar is worth 170 cents today? Is that sound? Yes; it is sound, insofar as those who hold the gold dollars are concerned; but how about the millions of people who produce the wealth of this country and who are unable to realize the costs of production, in many instances, of their products?

Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anyone who will seriously argue that we do not need some additional currency in this country. The great problem and the great question in controversy on this matter are how we shall get the increased currency. There are some who believe that it should be left to the great bankers of this country. There are others who, like myself, believe that the people themselves, the producers, should have an opportunity to realize some of its benefits. How are the farmers of this country and how are the small manufacturers of this country to exist under present conditions? I do not know whether it will ever be necessary for the President to exercise the discretionary power which this bill places in him and issue currency to the amount of $3,000,000,000 or not, but all this bill proposes to do is to give him that authority in the event that he, as President of the United States, feels that the interest of the people of this country demands it. Certainly, with the approval of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], there is every reason why this House should give him that authority at this time without the slightest fear that he will misuse it. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I realize the uselessness of attempting to say anything on this measure, because I know under the rules under which this bill is being considered there is no opportunity to amend.

It is most unfortunate that a bill of this importance, which, if used, will affect every man, woman, and child in the United States to a serious extent, should be considered in this way. I am surprised that during this debate there has been practically only one speech devoted to one of the most vital things in this bill, the question of the cancellation of the foreign debts due the United States.

In December of 1931 this House and the House at the other end of the Capitol went on record that there should be no further extension and no reduction or cancellation of war debts. That is the position today of Congress. The rider that was placed on the moratorium bill took from the President of the United States all authority relative to this debt. Here today we see the surprising lack of interest in the payment of the international debts to the United States.

Why this change? Why, under this authority that is granted here to permit payment of foreign debts due the United States, is the authority given the President to negotiate and take $200,000,000 in silver in exchange for the payments which are due and past due, and practically no reference whatever by any man in this House has been made to that particular clause. Why are you surrendering to the demands of the President and the foreign demands when such want and suffering exist everywhere in the United States? Are you going to reduce wages of Government employees and not pay the soldiers their bonus and compensation; are you willing to do this for the foreigner and do this other to American citizens and taxpayers? This establishes the precedent of shouldering the payment of this debt from the back of the foreigner to the back of the American taxpayer.

Has this Congress, under the persuasion of the necessities of the emergency, abandoned that clause which the people of the United States approved of and approve of now?

I venture to predict that any man who votes for the clause changing the rider on the moratorium bill of December 1931 will be defeated in the next election. The people of the United States do not propose to cancel war debts to Europe.

This proposal of silver is an interesting one. I am just wondering how much the international lobby on silver was successful in exerting its influence.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Did not the present President himself say during the last campaign that he was opposed to the cancellation of these international war debts?

Mr. McFADDEN. He did.

Mr. SNELL. Then he certainly will not cancel them now, will he?

Mr. McFADDEN. Well, here is the proposal in this bill to permit a revision of these debts; and every step that has been taken has been a step toward reduction and final cancellation of these debts. The fact that the President accepted the foreign plan of the last administration is proof to me that he stands in the same position relative to cancellation of war debts as did the previous administration.

Now, I was saying, whence came this suggestion of buying this commodity silver? There has been one of the greatest international lobbies at work in connection with the sale of foreign silver to the United States that this country has ever known. I have here in my hand a circular issued by one of these lobbyists, one of these international paid emissaries who is having, and has had, a lot to do with selling this silver idea to the American people, and particularly to the American Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is the gentleman laying grounds to impeach the present President of the United States?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not think that question needs an answer. I may say to the gentleman in answer to that, however, that if the present President of the United States violates again the Constitution, this Congress may take such action.

This circular I am referring to is written by René Leon, an expert on silver in the pay of the international group that is more interested in speculation in silver than in anything else. I want to read you just a little from this circular.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I cannot yield.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I merely wanted to ask the gentleman to develop a little more who Mr. René Leon is, whether he is in the pay of foreign interests, and so forth. The gentleman's statement is very important. I should like to have the answer for my own information.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will read this.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I wish the gentleman would do this if he can.

Mr. McFADDEN. "Authority should be given"—I am quoting from this circular now:

Authority should be given to the Treasury to purchase $200,000,000 of silver at a cost not to exceed 50 cents an ounce.

That is the provision in this bill and that is the provision in the circular of Mr. Leon.

Mr. Leon was for many years connected with the Guaranty Trust Co., handling their foreign department as regards money and commodities. This connection was severed some years ago. He is probably one of the best posted men internationally on silver. He flits back and forth between Paris, London, and New York. Recently he returned from a trip abroad and visited me. From the information which I got, I drew just what the gentleman's activities were. He is in very close touch with the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., and the Montagues of London, I am told. They are very much interested in the price of silver, as are other speculators here. Under the influence of this legislation silver has already gone up from 20 to 36 cents. Many people who have been "in the know" have made and are still making millions of dollars speculating in silver. Why not, when Congress is passing a bill to pay 16 cents per ounce above the present market? Mr. Leon's influence is manifest to anyone who will connect what he has said and has been doing here with this particular bill.

Why should Americans buy foreign silver at this time as a commodity? Why not buy American silver mined in the United States? It is like buying wheat. There is just as much sense in our buying silver today as there is in our buying wheat. Why take England's surplus of India silver as part payment of her debts due us payable in gold or permit France and the other nations who are in default to do it—And why take it at prices above the market? This is all I have time to say about this one particular clause of this bill.

I want to quote right here from article I of the Constitution. It has a bearing on what we are doing here today.

Article I of the Constitution provides that—

The Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States; to borrow money on the credit of the United States; to regulate commerce with foreign nations; * * * to coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

Let me direct your attention particularly to the authority which is given in the last part of the Constitution, in which it states:

Shall have the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof.

Who has this power?

The Congress of the United States; it has no power to delegate this power to the Federal Reserve System or to any other agency, not even to the President of the United States. Under the Constitution we have the power to regulate the value of foreign coin. Why should we go into a foreign country and consult with foreigners in an economic conference to change the value of our money and the value of foreign money, when we have that right under our own Constitution?

I say to you this bill is unconstitutional, and you cannot expect to stabilize business until you stabilize the dollar. I say to you Members here who vote for this legislation that you are doing it in violation of your oath of office; and I, for one, do not propose to do that.

You are still continuing to deal with the effects and not the causes of this depression, just as the last administration dealt with them. I was pleased today to hear my colleague the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREEDY] denounce the international bankers and those other American bankers who are allied closely with them for destroying the last administration. I pointed out in this House in a speech on December 15, 1931, that that was exactly what was taking place, and the gentleman from Maine the next morning got up and denounced my speech. I am glad he is a convert. [Applause.] I am glad he has arrived at the point where even he knows that I told the truth.

Now let me say that money does not work out right mathematically; if it is made plentiful, then the price of everything goes up and no one is any better off, and if the reverse takes place—that is, if it is made scarce—then the price of everything goes down, and again the people are no better off. Wages do not go up in proportion when prices go up, and, conversely, wages do not go down in proportion when prices go down, but always are less than the upward and exceed the downward trend of prices. The purchasing power of the masses can never be enough to enable anyone to be benefited by either a rise or fall in prices except only those who have large amounts of money; and it is the same when there is an increase or decrease in the volume.

I would also call your attention to the fact that when prices of things are high, then, they sell better. It is to be noticed, particularly, in the commodities known as "stocks" when the prices of these are high, then they sell like the proverbial "hot cakes", but it can be plainly seen that impoverishment of a nation would be soon accomplished by this means, and this is usually prevented by a panic appearing at such a time, since a period of the highest prices precedes a panic. The peculiarity of this latter consists in the fact that in order to head off impoverishment, impoverishment is resorted to. Is that what we are doing now in the blind attempt that is being made by this legislation?

We are now in the throes of a panic which was caused by inflation—inflation of the credit system from 1921 up to 1929.

Credit inflation can be controlled, and has been controlled to a certain point by the Federal Reserve System, but the continued inflation of the Federal Reserve System, wherein it furnished nearly $200,000,000,000 for stock-market speculation, got out of their hands and now we are suffering because $150,000,000,000 of that money and credit was lost in the stock market and a lot of it shipped abroad, because during that same period of time, and for 2 or 3 years previous, the international-finance group, aided and abetted by the Federal Reserve's great credit stream, permitted the lending out of this country of hundreds of millions, yes, billions, of dollars of the Americans' money. This is why we are short of money and capital in the United States today. Do you want to go back into this condition? You cannot control the inflation of money.

An analysis of the very plan you are proposing here—to run the printing presses and to inflate credit through the use of Government bonds and the Federal Reserve System—only tends to draw your attention to what happened in Germany. There is not any question about it. They said in Germany they could control the inflation when it started. You can ask the present minister from Germany, Dr. Hans Luther, who knows; he saw it operate in Germany; he is here, and he will tell you that they thought they could control it, but they had no sooner got it started than it went the full length. It went the full course; they could not control it; they repudiated all debts, including the Government's debts to the German people. Is this what you want to do here in the United States?

Now, Mr. Speaker, understand what inflation is. Inflation is repudiation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER].

IF THIS CONGRESS WAS ANYTHING BUT A RUBBER-STAMP CONGRESS, IT WOULD FRAME ITS OWN LEGISLATION AND EXERCISE ITS OWN CONSTITUTIONAL FUNCTIONS, INSTEAD OF SUPINELY ACTING AS THE ERRAND BOY OF THE "BRAIN TRUST"

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, there is only one part of this polyglot measure that meets with my entire endorsement in principle, and that is the provision for the relief of farmers burdened with mortgages. This is of such vital and immediate import that it covers a multitude of legislative sins. The need for some such relief for the distressed farmer is so great and so insistent that for this one purpose Members, weighing all hazards of the abuse of powers granted to the executive department by a servile and cowardly majority of this Congress, must close their eyes to its obvious and patent imperfections and hidden, undetermined ends, hoping that the President, more cautious and conservative than the majority in this radical Congress, will exercise those powers to protect us from the disasters that could easily flow from the improper use of the powers granted. Power ever breeds caution and conservatism in the wise. Let us hope and pray he will be wise in the execution of the powers granted by this bill.

At this time we must not load all the responsibility upon the President, for we have had experience already in granting him extraordinary power and we have seen how he exercised it under the Economy Act. We hoped he would use justice and moderation in the administration of the Economy Act with respect to the veterans, particularly those of the Spanish War. Instead he has figuratively taken the shirts from their backs and made paupers of at least 40 percent of them. In that case we hoped in vain.

If we repeat that mistake it is now partly our own fault. If this Congress was anything but a rubber-stamp Congress, it would frame its own legislation, exercise its own constitutional functions, instead of supinely acting as the errand boy of the "brain trust."

By all political and historical precedents and traditions, as the followers of Jefferson the majority should be the last either to grant such extraordinary powers or to burden the Executive with such overwhelming responsibility. The one thing that Jefferson and Hamilton agreed upon was the distinct and independent functions of the three departments of government, modified only by specific checks that one had upon the other so connected only as to give a constitutional control of the others and afford a practical working scheme of free government. Thomas Jefferson, in his Notes on the State of Virginia, writing of the formation of the constitution of that Commonwealth, said:

An elective despotism was not the government we fought for, but one which should not only be founded on free principles but in which the powers of government should be so balanced among the several bodies of magistracy as that no one should transcend their legal limits without being effectually checked and restrained by the others. For this reason that convention which passed the ordinance of government laid its foundation on this basis, that the legislative, executive, and judiciary departments should be separate and distinct so that no one person should exercise the powers of more than one of them at the same time.

This you may find in Jefferson's works or in the Forty-eighth Federalist, as quoted by James Madison.

Notice how far from Jefferson's ideal you have wandered in this farm bill. In this bill we are not only asked to extend additional powers to the Executive himself but also to extend even more sacredly legislative prerogatives to the Secretary of Agriculture, an office not specifically provided for in the Constitution. What powers are to be exercised by this member of the Cabinet? First to levy taxes, and that with only the limit he is to determine. Just imagine Arthur M. Hyde having the temerity to suggest such a thing. How the pillars of liberty would have trembled; how the lean and hungry Democratic Cassiuses would have clamored:

"Now in the name of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great."

We are not only asked to grant the Secretary of Agriculture the power to levy taxes but to distribute the taxes collected as he sees fit. What if Andy Mellon had suggested such a thing?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman expressed surprise at the possibility of our yielding power to Secretary Hyde. Of course, the gentleman realizes that in all the yielding by Congress the individual and the personality to whom we yield enters into the question.

Mr. GUYER. I admit that your Secretary of Agriculture has good Republican ancestry and environment, and I expect he is a mighty good man, but so is Arthur M. Hyde, former Governor of Missouri, who is my neighbor across the line in Missouri, and I never knew anything against him any more than I do against Secretary Wallace. One thing, however, Mr. Hyde never did, and that was to demand the power to levy taxes and distribute them when collected.

He asks the power to control by license all processors of basic agricultural products or of competing agricultural commodities, domestic or foreign. He asks power to appoint an unlimited army of employees and to fix their salaries. He asks power to veto the Sherman antitrust law. These powers when granted will make him the absolute master not only of agriculture but of all industries using agricultural products. The Secretary, no doubt, is a very good man, having had the advantage of good Republican ancestry and environment, but human experience, which evidently counts so little with this Congress, has taught that it is a dangerous thing to grant such unbridled power even to a good man.

If we keep on at the pace we have set the past 8 weeks, how long will it be until some modern Louis XIV will announce as he rises to power, as Louis did when he ascended the throne of the Bourbons, "L'état, c'est moi"? "The State, that is myself!" "I am the State." How long will it be until some up-to-date Hohenzollern like William II, who declared that in his acts as sovereign he acknowledged responsibility only to his conscience and his God, will strut his stuff upon the shattered ruins of American democracy?

Of course, there is no danger of anything of that sort now, but we are setting the precedents that justify such fears for the future.

Believing the President will use carefully these unprecedented powers reposed in his hands and save us from some of the ills that a radical Congress would condemn us to, I, for one, only under protest, am going to vote for this measure in order that the farmers of my district may get some relief from the mortgage situation. I do this charging the Democratic majority with lack of courage to map and carry into effect a legislative program and with abject servility accepting everything that emanates from the "brain trust" and the trickery that mixes up an omnibus measure which forces Members to vote for half a dozen things they cannot conscientiously support in order to get a single one they do approve. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWANK].

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, the farm relief bill passed the House March 22, 1933, with a vote of 315 for and 96 against. When the bill went to the Senate, some beneficial amendments were added, and these amendments are now before the House for consideration. In my judgment, no farm relief bill can operate with much benefit to the farmers unless it contains a provision that will enable farmers to receive at least the average cost of producing their crops as determined by the Department of Agriculture. In addition to the cost of production, farmers should, of course, have a reasonable profit.

January 15, 1932, I introduced H.R. 7797, in line with the National Farmers' Union program and sponsored by that great organization. From the efforts largely of Hon. John A. Simpson, president of the National Farmers' Union, the cost-of-production provision of that bill, which was reintroduced in this special session of Congress, was added to the farm bill. With this amendment in the bill, I believe much good will be accomplished by this legislation. Agriculture is the only business that has continued at less than the expense of conducting that business. Since first coming to Congress I have advocated agricultural relief legislation, and I am glad that something is now in sight that I believe will help.

Reports of the Department of Agriculture state that the cost of producing cotton, wheat, corn, and oats for the past year and the year before is as follows:

	Cotton	Wheat	Corn	Oats
1930.....	16 cents per pound.	$1.09 per bushel.	89 cents per bushel.	54 cents per bushel.
1931.....	9.1 cents per pound.	$0.81 per bushel.	61 cents per bushel.	42 cents per bushel.

If a bill containing this cost-of-production provision had been in effect in 1930, farmers would have received 16 cents per pound for their cotton, $1.09 per bushel for their wheat, 89 cents per bushel for their corn, and 54 cents per bushel for their oats, instead of the low prices they did receive. Under that provision of the bill in 1931, farmers would have received 9.1 cents per pound for their cotton, 81 cents per bushel for wheat, 61 cents per bushel for corn, and 42 cents per bushel for oats. There can be no revival in business until agriculture is revived. That provision of the bill provides that the farmer shall receive at least cost of producing that part of his crops consumed in this country.

Reports of the Department of Agriculture show that the average production of lint cotton per acre in Oklahoma for 1931 was 186 pounds and that the average cost of production for Oklahoma for that year was 8.8 cents per pound. It has been stated that the average family will produce about 12 bales of cotton per year. At 6 cents per pound, an average bale of cotton would bring $30 and the price for 12 bales would be $360. One fourth of this is for rent, which would leave the producer, if he is a renter, nine bales worth $270. With the average production of cotton in Oklahoma in 1931 at 186 pounds per acre, to produce 12 bales would require about 36 acres. The average production of this cotton would require the following labor:

One man 9 months at $30 per month equals $270.

One boy 9 months at $10 per month equals $90.

Housewife 9 months at $15 per month equals $135.

These figures include $15 per month for the housewife, which at least would be the expense of employing another woman to do her work, and the wife's labor should be counted the same as that of the man. Then, the average family will at least have one boy who will assist on the farm. Food and clothing for the family and feed for the stock for this production would amount to at least $200. This would total $695, exclusive of taxes, interest, depreciation, and other miscellaneous expenses.

This, of course, is just an estimate of the average cost of production which, with a little study, can be figured by any farmer. Even with an expense of $600 to produce these 6,000 pounds of cotton, the cost of production would be 10 cents per pound. For that year, if all items of expense and the taxes were included, it would cost at least 15 cents per pound to produce cotton in Oklahoma. I also believe cost of the other products will be more than indicated by the Department. I have produced and sold cotton and other farm crops, am familiar with the expenses of crop production, and can figure costs.

In connection with this farm bill the emergency relief bill will be of much benefit to our people. This bill will put many of the unemployed to work on useful projects, such as reforestation in our national forests and parks, and we hope the work will be extended to include flood-control and soil-erosion work by the construction of dams and lakes.

The farm mortgage relief bill recently passed the House and provided for the issuance of more than $2,000,000,000 in nontaxable, interest-bearing bonds. I proposed an amendment to this bill to issue Treasury notes instead of nontaxable bonds, and, with the interest that would be paid each year placed in a sinking fund, the total issue would be retired in 25 years, without paying this large amount of interest to the bondholders. The issuance of nontaxable bonds should be stopped, and now is the time to take such action. That bill is followed by another bill for relief of town and city mortgages and could be financed by Treasury notes instead of a nontaxable bond issue. I hope and believe that this administration will remove the talons of Wall Street and the international bankers from the Treasury Department and stop their control of the finances of the United States. If a man has $1,000,000 invested in 4-percent nontaxable bonds, he receives an income of $40,000 per year upon which he pays no taxes. If a widow has a cheap shack that she calls "home", she is required to pay taxes. This is a situation that should be remedied by putting a stop to the issuance of these bonds, and now is a good time to start.

In the United States power is with the people and, by proper action, they can have any laws enacted which they desire. Many Senators, Members of Congress, leading business men, and economists are of the opinion that no permanent relief can be granted until silver is remonetized, the gold content of the dollar reduced, or currency expanded by the issuance of Treasury or Federal Reserve notes against the gold in the Treasury. The silver question is coming to the front in Congress as never before. April 17 Senator

WHEELER offered his silver bill, which provides for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, as an amendment to the farm bill, and the vote was 33 for and 43 against. That is a great gain over the vote last January, when the vote was 18 for and 56 against.

The inflation amendment adopted to the bill by the Senate provides for the issuance of United States notes in such amounts as the President may approve, not to exceed $3,000,000,000. The amendment also gives the President power to reduce by proclamation the weight of the gold dollar by as much as 50 percent. The President is further authorized by the amendment to accept $200,000,000 in silver from foreign governments in payment of their debts to the United States and provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause silver certificates to be issued against this silver for the payment of obligations of the United States. This will be one of the greatest and most beneficial acts ever passed by the American Congress. Debts will be scaled down by reducing the content of the gold dollar, as provided in this amendment.

When a real and properly controlled expansion of the currency occurs and money is put into circulation, which can be done by the payment of salaries, pensions, compensations, refinancing of these mortgage bills, and in other ways, then commodity prices will increase and business in general will be rehabilitated.

Mr. Speaker, with the advent of this administration a new era has dawned in the United States, and I believe the President will properly administer this law for the people. Against the opposition of the international bankers and moneychangers, whom he so bitterly denounced in his inaugural address, he has taken the United States off the gold standard, and commodity prices at once began to rise. Those of us who have been working so diligently for an intelligently controlled expansion of our circulating medium rejoice in the action taken by our Chief Executive and the Congress. When these provisions are put into effect I believe that real prosperity in the near future will again be enjoyed by our citizens.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, nothing that I can possibly say at this late hour may have any bearing on the passage of the pending farm bill, but I cannot forego the opportunity of raising my voice in support of this important legislation.

May I state at the outset that in my judgment this is by all odds the most important and far-reaching legislation of any that has come before this body during the Seventy-third Congress. The very fact that the passage of this measure with the so-called "inflation amendment" has been predicted has already materially raised farm commodities, and I do not hesitate to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am more interested in the increase of farm commodities to reasonable price levels than in any other phase of the money question.

Regardless of what we may think of silver, gold, greenbacks, or copper, the steady rise of farm commodities is the one thing that the farmers are demanding and must have before any reasonable degree of prosperity can be restored.

Many years ago when the farmers prospered it will be recalled that all business prospered, but with the decline of products of the farm to the lowest levels in the history of the world, all business has been stagnated.

It is agreed by all fair-minded people, irrespective of what section of the country from which they may come, that something must be done to help the farmer, and that very quickly, or ruin and chaos are just ahead of us.

If taking control of the currency from Wall Street gamblers, money-changers, and gold-hoarding shysters and returning this control to the people will not assist materially in advancing commodities to reasonable levels, then I confess I do not know the way out.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively to this discussion for the past several hours. I have been somewhat surprised at the stubborn opposition of our Republican friends on the other side of this aisle. The distinguished Republican leader from New York [Mr. SNELL] was bitter in his denunciation of the pending bill, and especially of the so-called "inflation amendment", which authorizes the President to put $3,000,000,000 of new money actually into circulation; not send it to the Wall Street banks, mind you, in keeping with the idea of some of our Republican leaders, but permit at least a goodly portion of it to circulate out in the small farm communities. The distinguished minority leader, in denouncing this plan to really expand the currency, talks loud and long about "sound money", but he did not say that we now have sound money. With a money panic facing the people of the United States it is idle folly to talk about sound money at this late day. We have no sound money. The trouble is our people have no money at all, and we must restore the control of money to the people instead of permitting the international bankers and Wall Street crowd to control it.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEBY], the lone Republican returned to this House from that great State, made an onslaught on this bill and took a great deal of his time discussing sound currency and credits. It seemed to be the burden of his argument that the country does not need an expansion of the currency but rather an increase in credits. If I remember correctly, the same gentleman and many of his distinguished colleagues have been talking credits to this House for the past several years. During the last Congress we were assured that if the big bankers and great trunk railroads, shipbuilding companies, and other giant corporations were given sufficient credit the depression would end and everything be normal within a few short weeks. You brought in here your Reconstruction Finance Corporation giving vast sums of Government money and unlimited credit to the favored classes and a few Democrats were actually inveigled by you Republican leaders to vote for that brand of dole to big business. One of the first to get a loan under that act was J. Pierpont Morgan, of New York. Another to get both money and credit was the Dawes Bank in Chicago. The last administration ran this credit business into the ground; you simply overdid it; and the people showed their resentment by demanding a new deal. Relief was given all right by your "credit system", but it was to the big boys in Wall Street, and other streets, but not to the man behind the plow, or the small business man or laborer.

Another very distinguished gentleman, the Republican orator from New York [Mr. FISH], predicted here this afternoon dire calamities that would undoubtedly befall us if and when the pending bill becomes a law. Of course, the gentleman, running true to form, had to say something about Bolsheviks and Reds, and it was really amusing to hear him intimate that this farm bill is, in fact, fathered by that element. But the gentleman from New York was fair enough to admit that the President was right at least in one thing. He admitted that the President took the wise and proper course in declaring an embargo on gold being shipped from the United States to nations across the sea. If a private American citizen had hoarded gold like some of the European countries have been doing for the past several months he would have been sent to the penitentiary. Then, surely the President of the United States cannot be criticized for preventing foreigners from hoarding American gold.

The gentleman from New York, like several of his predecessors who are so bitterly opposed to this constructive legislation, talks much of the so-called "brain trust." I do not propose to waste the time of this House answering such slurs and useless silly expressions, but may I say in passing that if the leaders of his own party had employed a brain trust instead of catering to the money trust our economic conditions would not be in such a miserable mess today.

I was somewhat surprised at the lengthy speech made a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN], who discussed war debts. I agree that under no circumstances should war debts be canceled. I have spoken many times on the floor of this House against cancellation, and I say here and now that under no condition will I ever vote to cancel Europe's war debts. The Democratic platform pledges our party against cancellation. Our great leader at the White House is pledged against cancellation, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is unduly alarmed in his suggestion that European debts are to be canceled. The fact that the President has offered to take a very small part of the money due the United States in silver does not mean that foreign debts are to be canceled, but merely assures an increase in the value of silver.

I shall not take the time to answer my friend, the silver-tongued orator from Kansas [Mr. GUYER]. He made a stirring and almost convincing speech against this bill, and then announced at the close of his masterful address that he was going to support this legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, like my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. SWANK] I am interested especially in two phases of this legislation. I refer to the so-called "inflation", or Thomas amendment, proposing to expand the currency $3,000,000,000, and the other is the guarantee cost of production amendment, sponsored by the Farmers' Union of America. I understand a desperate effort will be made to eliminate both provisions from this pending bill, but should that be done you would not have much farm relief left.

More than 2 years ago I joined a little group in this House in urging a controlled expansion of the currency. I have repeatedly urged upon the floor of this House, and before the respective committees, that $2,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000 be placed in circulation. I have contended that currency expansion is farm relief; it is mortgage relief; veteran's relief; bank relief, and old-age relief; but without reasonable currency expansion, or inflation as gentlemen across the aisle prefer to term it, there cannot possibly be any appreciable degree of relief from our present unprecedented plight. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], was very adroit a few minutes ago when he was addressing the House and criticizing the statements of the President and the present Speaker of the House. I notice, however, in that adroit discussion he failed to state his own views in respect of the money that would be issued under subsection 1 of paragraph (b), pages 64 and 65, of the bill. In that subsection authority is granted to the President of the United States in his discretion to issue $3,000,000,000 of currency against $3,000,000,000 of Government bonds. I pause now to inquire of the gentleman from New York if, in his opinion, the currency that would issue under this authority is sound or unsound money.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think that would be more sound than some of the other provisions of the bill. I also said in an open statement that I would subscribe to that provision of the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I see that in this instance the gentleman from New York is consistent, because on July 16 last, when the Glass-Borah amendment on the home-loan bank bill came from the Senate for the third time, after the gentleman from New York had refused to take it twice, he rose in his place and made a plea to this House for the passage of that amendment. The money under the Glass-Borah amendment was currency issued on Government bonds. If the currency issued under that amendment, for which he voted and for which, in the main, he is responsible, was good money then, the currency that will issue under this provision will be good money today. I might add that Mr. Hoover endorsed the soundness of the Glass-Borah currency in signing said bill.

The gentleman from New York referred to the majority report upon the bonus bill filed in this House by the present Speaker of the House. Mr. Speaker, we must view the situation as it existed at that time. That report filed by our distinguished Speaker, then a member of the Ways and Means Committee, was not directed at the money in the bonus bill as it passed the House of Representatives. It was not directed against currency such as is contained in this bill. It was not directed at currency such as was authorized to be issued under the Glass-Borah amendment. It was directed at currency that had no control feature. It was directed at section 2 of the original Patman bill, and in that section you had no control of the currency that would be issued thereunder.

In the Ways and Means Committee 14 members voted to report the original Patman bill adversely. Eleven members voted against the motion to report it adversely, with notice served that if their position was maintained, the Owen amendment would be offered as a substitute for section 2 of the original Patman bill.

It was under those circumstances that the report was written. The Owen amendment having the control feature was not in the bill that was voted adversely by the Ways and Means Committee. When it came to the floor of the House, this House, by an overwhelming vote, inserted the plan written by ex-Senator Robert L. Owen, coauthor of the Federal Reserve System. No witness who testified before the Ways and Means Committee ever uttered a word of objection against the money that would have been issued under the Owen plan, and every witness testifying relative thereto said it was sound money, such as is the money under discussion. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the pending amendment conferring unprecedented powers on the President in respect to the national currency. I am opposed to the amendment because, in my judgment, it permits the violation of the most fundamental principles of sound credit and currency policy. I am opposed to it because it cannot possibly in and of itself, in my judgment, bring about the objectives claimed for it. I am opposed to it because it carries with it the possibility of the most far-reaching and most disastrous consequences to the welfare of the Nation in the event of uncontrolled inflation as a result of the exercise of the powers conferred.

It has been urged, apparently as a reason for supporting the amendment, that the powers conferred will not necessarily be exercised. If it be intended not to exercise the powers requested, why request them? Why deal a further blow to confidence inevitably resulting from the request? The pressure which has been strong enough to compel the request for powers in the absence of improved conditions will in all human probability, as I see it, be more than strong enough to compel their exercise once they are accorded. The grant of power, the exercise of which is believed to be detrimental to the national interest, on the assumption that it will not be exercised is, in my judgment, a surrender of legislative responsibility.

It is also urged that the inflation contemplated is a "controlled inflation." I hope sincerely that this may prove to be the case. I appreciate fully the technical aspects of the situation at this time, but I cannot escape from the fact that all history demonstrates the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of maintaining such control over a prolonged period of time.

Adoption of the amendment is advocated on the basis that inflation has always been advocated. Its proponents believe that through inflation and cheaper money we shall obtain objectives which all of us deeply desire—an increase in purchasing power, an increase in business activity, a decrease in unemployment, an increase in foreign trade, an ability to compete more favorably with other countries with depreciated currency. Experience affords no basis for this belief. On the contrary, experience demonstrates that inflation once initiated is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to keep in hand. Experience also demonstrates that inflation once out of hand spells further impoverishment to labor, an unbearable burden for professional workers, paralysis of business activity, and disastrous impairment of national credit. By the flame of inflation the nations of the world have been seared again and again.

It was my privilege for 4 years to serve as assistant to and counsel for the then agent general for reparation payments under the Dawes plan. During those years the organizations of which he was in charge were in the position of a receiver for 11 different nations, having a principal place of business in Germany, a twelfth and debtor nation. This experience served to emphasize the misery resulting from an inflation in Germany which it had become impossible to control, an inflation which went so far, as the Members of the House will recall, that it required a million million reichsmarks to equal the preinflation value of a single reichsmark. It served to emphasize the desperate plight of the workingman, the fearful burden imposed on the middle class in that country, the paralysis of industry, the impairment of national credit to which I have just referred. It served to emphasize conditions which a distinguished German, Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, arriving in America this week, as president of the German Reichsbank, has described in terms of starvation in the cities of Germany as worse than anything experienced during the most difficult days of war and blockade. I wish the testimony of the German workingman could be taken this afternoon.

The experience was not limited to Germany. It brought me face to face with similar conditions in other countries—in Austria, in France, in Italy, in Belgium—where it had also proved impossible to maintain effective control over inflation. The facts and figures are known to all. I wish that all the Members of the House could have shared in the experience to which I refer.

Our own history corroborates the dangers of inflation and emphasizes the difficulty of effective control. The fiat issues of the Continental Congress and original States, if I am correctly informed, depreciated in 3 years to a basis of about 40 to 1, and thereafter to a basis of about 1,000 to 1. The fiat issues of the Civil War period depreciated, I am told, almost as from the date of issue. It is said to have been some 7 years after prices had reached their peak before normal wages were paid.

Other examples could be cited, among them the experience of prerevolutionary France, referred to in such striking manner by our able and distinguished colleague from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] in his admirable address of January 25 last, in which he pleaded for "a sound currency, to be preserved at all hazards", in accordance with the campaign pledge of the Democratic Party.

Inflation means further sacrifice for millions of wage earners, for millions of those receiving pensions or compensation, for millions of owners of bank deposits, for millions of holders of life-insurance policies, for all those who are owed anything.

The pending amendment, Mr. Speaker, is presented for consideration under conditions which are probably unique. Despite the fact that we have about 40 percent of the gold supply of the entire world, despite the fact that we have deposit and reserve-note ratios of more than 45 and 61 percent, respectively, despite the capacity for expansion in currency to the extent of some $4,000,000,000, despite the fact that we enjoy a favorable balance of trade, despite these and other facts, we have deliberately elected to suspend gold payments and to accord authority to the President to embark on a policy of inflation in respect to which effective control may prove to be impossible.

Probably no nation in the world has taken such a step under such conditions. We are taking that step in the face of the campaign pledge of the Democratic Party to maintain a sound currency at all hazards, in the face of pleas of leading members of the Democratic Party, such as Mr. Bernard Baruch, who recently characterized inflation as "the road to ruin", and at a time when commodity prices are apparently doing their best to turn upward. The future may regard the action we are about to take with amazement as well as bitterness.

The amendment makes provision for the purchase by Reserve banks in the market, or directly from the Federal Government, of Federal securities to the extent of $3,000,000,000. The dangers of this policy in curtailing essential service by the Reserve System to agriculture, industry, and trade and in further jeopardizing the market for Federal securities have been emphasized in the remarkable address in the Senate in respect to the amendment under consideration by the former Secretary of the Treasury, Senator GLASS.

The amendment makes provision for the direct issue of greenback currency to the extent of $3,000,000,000 for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States and for the purchase of United States obligations. The issue of this currency is unnecessary in view of existing capacity for expansion. It is a first step in the direction of all the evils inherent in fiat currency. It suggests the possibility of the impairment of contractual obligations, both public and private.

The amendment also makes provision for bimetallism and for devaluation of the gold content of the dollar to the extent of 50 percent, with doubtful authority under the Constitution and with all that it may imply in terms of national repudiation and dishonor.

The amendment is open to other objections.

The inflation contemplated, in my judgment, is unnecessary. There is ample basis for currency expansion. There is ample basis for credit expansion. It will not, in my judgment, bring about the desired objectives.

I am opposed to according the requested powers to the President because the very existence of such powers, whether exercised or not, must of necessity tend to destroy fundamental business confidence without which no road can lead to recovery. I am opposed to according the powers requested because I believe that the demand that they be exercised will, in the absence of improved conditions, prove too strong for any individual to resist. I am opposed to according the powers requested because of the difficulty of effective control of inflation once those powers are exercised and because of the inevitable consequences to the country as a whole in the absence of such control.

Currency inflation—

Says the Encyclopedia Britannica—

is perhaps the most fatal disease from which a nation can suffer. It destroys wealth and redistributes what is left in an arbitrary and inadequate fashion. It makes extravagance a virtue and thrift a vice. It will ruin one man and enrich his neighbor, and neither can lift a finger to stop it. It is born of government extravagance, and fosters that extravagance as it grows. Profits and wages look princely, but measured in real worth sink to penury. Well might the German workers say, "Give us a stable currency."

I devoutly hope that the Nation as a whole may not have cause for bitter regret as the result of the action we are about to take.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-seven Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 28]

Adams	Buckbee	Douglass	Holmes
Almon	Caldwell	Duffey	Hornor
Andrew, Mass.	Cannon, Wis.	Duncan	Hughes
Andrews, N.Y.	Carden	Durgan	Imhoff
Arnold	Carley	Evans	Jenckes
Ayers, Mont.	Cary	Fernandez	Kahn
Bailey	Cavicchia	Fiesinger	Kee
Bankhead	Celler	Fitzgibbons	Kelly, Pa.
Beiter	Chavez	Flannagan	Kemp
Berlin	Cole	Frear	Kennedy, N.Y.
Biermann	Corning	Fuller	Kerr
Bland, Va.	Crosser	Gambrill	Kniffin
Blanton	Crowther	Gifford	Kvale
Bloom	Crump	Gillette	Lamneck
Bolton	Culkin	Greenwood	Lanham
Boylan	Darden	Griffin	Lea, Calif.
Brand, Ga.	Darrow	Hamilton	Lewis, Md.
Brennan	Dear	Hancock, N.C.	Lozier
Britten	Dickstein	Harlan	McLeod
Brown, Mich.	Dingell	Hoeppel	McMillan
Browning	Dondero	Hollister	Maloney, La.

Merritt
Montague
Montet
Moynihan, Ill.
Muldowney
Nesbit
Norton
O'Brien
O'Malley
Oliver, N.Y.
Peavey
Perkins
Peterson

Pierce
Pou
Prall
Ramspeck
Randolph
Reed, N.Y.
Rich
Richards
Romjue
Sadowski
Sandlin
Schulte
Simpson

Smith, Wash.
Smith, W.Va.
Stalker
Steagall
Stubbs
Studley
Sullivan
Summers, Tex.
Swick
Terrell Tinkham
Tobey
Treadway

Underwood
Waldron
Weaver
Whitley
Willford
Williams
Withrow
Wolfenden
Wood, Mo.
Woodruff, Mich.
Woodrum, Va.
Zioncheck

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and ninety-six Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the majority leader a question? Is it expected to take a vote on this bill tonight, or just finish general debate?

Mr. BYRNS. It was my idea, if we were permitted to go along and complete the debate, that we would adjourn until tomorrow for the roll call; but, of course, if points of no quorum are to be made, I am going to ask the Members to remain here, because it is our intention to complete this debate tonight.

Mr. SNELL. That is entirely satisfactory to me. I am not interested in any points of no quorum.

Mr. BYRNS. I am sure the gentleman is not, and I hope that nobody else is.

Mr. SNELL. I thought perhaps certain gentlemen who wanted to speak may have decided that they did not want to speak.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I had yielded 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I want first to thank the leadership on my side of the House for the liberalization of time which they have given in this case, and I suggest to them that if they want to be still more popular, they will continue the good work and give plenty of time for discussion of all these important matters hereafter. I certainly hope they will do that.

Amendment no. 85 is an important measure. It is indeed not an amendment at all but an entirely new bill. It ought to have been referred to a committee and ought to have gone through the regular routine, because it is a new measure.

The expansion of currency provided for under this amendment under the Federal Reserve System is a normal expansion and one that has been provided for for a long time. This bill provides nothing new along that line except the method. The printing of greenbacks, as provided for in this bill, is a new old measure, and I want to talk briefly to you about that, because I have been for some months studying and preparing an address on the subject of greenbacks. It is not yet complete, but I hope to finish it and submit it to the House for the consideration of the Membership, as well as for the people of my country. I hope to make a full exposition of the entire subject of greenbacks, the money of the people.

I hope to show the necessity which compelled it, the laws which created it, the results which justified it, and the emancipation of the people to which I believe it may ultimately lead us.

I have on my desk at the present moment the old Congressional Globes, and have been reading and rereading the debates and the laws that brought about the greenback measure of 1861, and I am going to talk to you about that for about 2 minutes, if I may have your attention.

On July 17, 1861, the emergency that existed at that time, due to the coming of the Civil War, impelled the Congress to act very quickly, and to pass what was called "demand notes." Those demand notes were payable in coin. Yet notwithstanding that, demand notes went below par, because the bankers and brokers both began to depreciate them by refusing to receive them at par, even though they were redeemable and were actually redeemed in coin. So on the 5th of August the Congress took the bit in its teeth, and it provided for the issuance of $50,000,000 of pure, unadulterated greenbacks, that had no exception clause on them. That amount was extended by an act a few days later that added 10 million more to the pure greenbacks. Those greenbacks were "receivable for public dues", and there was some dispute for a short time whether they were to be received by the Government in payment of taxes and internal revenue or not.

The Secretary of the Treasury decided that they were receivable for all governmental obligations, and the Government proceeded to so receive those greenbacks. Immediately those notes went to par. I want you to get this. From that time forward those greenbacks which had no exception clause on them were never more at a discount. They went up constantly with gold, and when gold in this country had been cornered and brought $2.80, those greenbacks that had no exception clause also brought $2.80, because the United States Government continued to receive them in payment of interest on the public debt, for import and excise duties. Within the next year, another act was passed and approved February 25, 1862.

Under this act of 1862 we printed greenbacks of quite another class. I hold in my hand one of them and I hope some of you will take your glasses and read it, because here, printed across the face of this note, to this day is the statement that "This note is legal tender at its face value for all debts public and private, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt." This is the note that went to 35 cents on the dollar because our Government refused to receive its own money in payment of its own dues. This act also provided for taking up the greenbacks of the first and second issues and retiring them with the new issue bearing the exception clause, and this for no other purpose than to allow those then in control of money and credits to continue their control. It is the opposition to this bill.

I promised to answer certain questions. One of the Members asked me to explain how this money is to be placed in circulation. This is a great bill, Mr. Speaker. It provides the means for it; but another step is necessary to make it effective, and that is the step of putting men to work in this country and paying them with the money we are providing in this bill. It is the one way to get the money circulating in this country—but by a great public-works program, not a limited one. It should be one as big as may be necessary to accomplish this object, and as much more money as is necessary to restore every man to his old job again should be spent.

I do not want to appear before you in the roll of a prophet whose prophesy has been fulfilled, but neither should I permit any modesty to withhold from you facts which I saw clearly as early as my school days spent in post-graduate work in Heidelberg.

At that time, as a correspondent of a country newspaper, I wrote of the time that we are now experiencing in America. In my travels about Europe I talked with men who had been replaced by machinery; men who no longer had any means of livelihood. It required no genius of mind to see that some day we would experience a similar condition in America, and we are.

During the latter part of 1929, when the crash came upon us by way of the New York Stock Exchange, I gave an address in the city of Marion, Ill., based upon my early knowledge and that which accumulated with added years, and there foretold the horrible conditions which have existed in this country during the past 4 years.

I hope I am never one, however, to offer destructive criticism without adding to it, purely for consideration, some plan by which the difficulties may be remedied. My suggestion was then that our Government provide an opportunity for the men who had been displaced by technological advances to work on public projects. I said then as I say now that there is enough public works needing to be done in these United States to employ every one of our technologically unemployed for a period of 50 years.

If our technologically unemployed are reemployed on public works, it will automatically put to work our other millions of idle, supplying the needs of those employed by the Government on public works.

This is no idle comment. Tomorrow, with the permission of the Speaker, I shall place a chart in the Speaker's lobby so that each one of you may see what it means to put a few men to work on public-building projects.

This chart was prepared in great detail and absolute accuracy by the Association of Federal Architects, of Washington, D.C. I commend it to you for your earnest consideration and careful perusal. It will graphically show you how men can be put to work in industries very remotely connected with the public-works program with which we shall be called upon shortly to deal.

A great Federal public-works program means something more than just putting our idle millions to work. It means that the Government shall have at last recognized that the first principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence, "The right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness", shall attain its full significance.

The right to life certainly entails the right to labor.

The right to liberty can only be attained through economic freedom. A man unemployed has no economic freedom.

The pursuit of happiness ends when a man willing to labor is denied that opportunity through no fault of his own.

On May 10, 1932, I introduced a bill providing for a public-works program sufficient in extent to have put a million men to work, and I provided means for doing this for a certainty within 60 days.

The main provisions of that bill were made a part of the so-called "Garner public-works program", which was passed by both the House and Senate and vetoed by Mr. Hoover.

Early in the final session of the Seventy-second Congress I introduced a bill for a comprehensive public-works program, and it was reintroduced in this session as H.R. 1620. The summary of this bill will be found on page 5538 of the Record of March 3.

One of its provisions is for a limited and controlled expansion of currency by authorization of an issue of $1,000,000,000 in greenbacks. This fund is to be used for the purpose of giving the initial start to the public-works program also provided in the bill.

Subsequent provisions financed the program by means of a sales tax. Not the kind of sales tax, however, that was advocated in the Congress some 2 years ago and which would have transferred the burden of Government from the rich to the poor, but a straight-out 1-percent sales tax on every sale made in America. Such a tax would collect at the counters of Wall Street as well as those of the country crossroad store. It provided that the money derived from the sales tax could be used only for the purpose of putting men to work, and that is the only justification for such a tax.

Such a program offers an ideal opportunity for circulating this new money where it will do America and its people the most good. It is the one opportunity to put both money and men to work, both of which are idle today.

I am happy to see such a measure as this one initiated by our President, and I shall be much happier when the public-works program comes to us, to complete the program so necessary for the revitalization of labor and industry.

I want also to offer for the Record the provisions—because I see that even our friends over in the Senate appear to be very much mixed up on that—the provisions in the bonds from France, England, and other countries that are owing to the United States. These have been misquoted so many times that I am going to read a copy of the words in the bonds of France and England, so that it may be observed that they vary but little, and that the principle announced in these two apply generally to all the countries owing money to the Government of the United States. The bonds carry this statement:

FRANCE

This bond is payable as to both principal and interest in gold coin of the United States of America of the present standard of value, or, at the option of France upon not less than 30 days advance notice to the United States, in any obligation of the United States issued after April 6, 1917, to be taken at par and accrued interest to it and of payment hereunder.

BRITAIN

The bonds shall be payable as to both principal and interest in United States gold coin of the present standard of weight and fineness, or its equivalent in gold bullion, or, at the option of Great Britain, upon not less than 30 days' advance notice indicating the minimum amount which it is contemplated to pay at next due date in gold, cash, or available fund, in any bonds of the United States issued or to be issued after the 6th of April 1917, to be taken at par and accrued interest to the date of payment hereunder.

I am now ready to answer questions, but in asking questions I do not want you to make speeches. Ask me questions and I will answer them if I can.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman inform the House, if he can, whether any of these greenbacks are in circulation at the present time? I understand there are.

Mr. KELLER. I am informed that there are about $75,000 still outstanding, but these probably have been lost or destroyed.

Mr. WEARIN. If they turned up, they would still be good at their face value?

Mr. KELLER. Absolutely as good as any dollar that was ever printed in the world.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman believes a large program of public works is essential and necessary to make this plan effective?

Mr. KELLER. It is not only necessary but it is more than necessary; it should be a part of this plan.

Mr. MEAD. I agree with the gentleman fully.

Mr. KELLER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GOSS. In view of what the gentleman has read from these bonds is he in favor of our Government receiving payment in silver?

Mr. KELLER. I may say that before we get to that the silver will be worth more than we are going to accept it for. So, really, what is the difference?

Mr. MOTT. Where in this bill is the provision for paying people to be employed on public works?

Mr. KELLER. That comes in the next bill which I understand the President is sending to the House in a very few days.

Mr. MOTT. I mean where is the provision for paying these men in this new currency that is to be issued? The gentleman stated that the way this money would be got into the hands of the people would be by paying them for work they did.

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. Where is that provision?

Mr. KELLER. I think the gentleman will find that in the law relating to the issuance of money as it exists today. I think perfect justification will there be found for this.

Mr. BEEDY. I agree with the statement of the gentleman that one of the methods to distribute this money is through a program of public works.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, may I have 1 additional minute?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GREEN. I should like to know if the gentleman can inform us how the expansion provided for in this bill, compared to our present currency, compares with the $50,000,000 expansion of currency in 1862, compared with the money in circulation at that time? Is it favorable?

Mr. KELLER. To answer the gentleman's question one must take into consideration the number of people and the amount of business done. It would be an involved answer.

Mr. GREEN. I am very much interested in the guaranteeing and insuring of bank deposits.

Mr. KELLER. So am I.

Mr. GREEN. I should like to have the gentleman's views along this line.

Mr. KELLER. It is one of the necessities that must be met.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, do not let the sight of these volumes [indicating] lead you to fear that I am to deliver a speech on inflation. That subject has been thoroughly discussed this afternoon. I intend to deliver a political speech—not a partisan speech, but one bearing upon the political aspects of the problem before us; and to that end I want to read just a few sentences from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 8, 1893, when Grover Cleveland had called Congress together in special session, as he said, in the opening of his message:

By reason of the existence of an alarming and extraordinary business situation involving the welfare and prosperity of all our people—

He went on with calamitous description that might be used with equal accuracy today.

In this message he asked Congress to give him power—he did not ask to exercise this power himself, but he asked Congress to allow him to sign a measure that would repeal the law for the purchase of silver bullion. What a contrast between the President of 1893 and his request and the President of 1933 with another request just 40 years later.

Let it be recalled that in the year before, in 1892, in the campaign there had been much argument such as we have heard voiced here in recent days, on the part of those who constituted what is known as the Populist Party, and in that election, while Mr. Cleveland got 5½ million votes, the Populists had more than a million votes and they carried these States—and I would suggest that gentlemen from these States take to heart the facts of history—they carried Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Nevada, with 1 elector each in Oregon and North Dakota, a total of 22 electoral votes. Conditions were much the same as they are today—very much the same as they are today—and history repeats itself.

A year ago there came before this House a measure known as "the Goldsborough bill", and, if I may claim even a slight measure of justification as a prophet by reason of what came afterward, I feel that I may be warranted in asking your attention to what I then said:

I am satisfied that the only prudent, safe course is to do this thing—passage of the Goldsborough bill—in order that it may, perchance, and it may, we hope, be some barrier against the rising tide of demand for fiat money. There comes over our desks every day an ever-increasing volume of propaganda, letters, pamphlets, newspaper articles, urging us to set the printing presses agoing to grind out paper money or bonds. In my judgment, this is going to be the greatest issue in the coming campaign, or, if not, in the next campaign—the issue of the 1896 controversy with money uppermost in the public mind. Money, the love of it, is the root of all evil, and the love of it and the desire for it are the chief source of our political strifes. If you do not want to take some precaution against the renewal of this agitation, perchance the rise of a new political party, at any rate an attempt to change the principles of the old parties with a revival of the theory that the way to salvation is through the medium of the printing press, why then, vote against this resolution, a resolution which attempts to raise a barrier, if possible, against this tide of inflationary sentiment.

Sir, that tide is coming into this House with ever-increasing volume; it shows itself here; and in its application to the pending question I desire gentlemen who believe in inflation to bear in mind certain considerations.

The issue in the vote tomorrow will not be whether you believe in inflation or not; it will be whether you will prevent inflation or not; and, believing as I do, that every step possible ought to be taken to prevent inflation, I welcome the trap into which gentlemen are falling by assenting to this proposal. Never was there a more ingenious stratagem. Never was there one that put gentlemen, sent here to represent certain views, in a more awkward position. They have my sympathy, but I must point out to them the nature of the trap that they may know what they will do by the vote cast tomorrow.

The proposal is that we turn over to the President certain powers. These powers have been much discussed and I must not go into them in detail. I would pause long enough, however, to say that I thoroughly agree with the exercise of the first of these powers. It was that power which was contemplated by the much misunderstood and misrepresented Goldsborough bill.

The purpose of that bill was to inflate credit, not cash currency, but to inflate credit currency, and I am glad to see that so keen an observer and excellent a judge as Mark Sullivan, one of the best newspaper men in the country, has recently said that the conservatives now see no harm in it, and to radicals, so called, or debtors, increase of credit money is as good as any other. There is now no objection anywhere to an increase of credit.

The event has completely justified every vote that was cast for the Goldsborough bill, for now the whole country says we were right in wishing to expand credit currency. Yet I must make one exception, for a few days ago a gentleman in another branch of the Congress characterized it as an insane proposal—an insane proposal—when everybody now wants it, when his President recommends it, when gentlemen of both parties agree that it is the wise thing to do.

But let me get back and portray what is being done by this bill. The proposal about valuing the dollar I should like to discuss at length, and also that as to silver, but unfortunately time does not permit. I cannot point out the bearing of these things as individual propositions, but address myself to the whole as the problem of every man here.

It is proposed that we turn over all of these things to the President of the United States to decide.

Not one man today has dared to predict what the President will do. No authoritative statement has ever come from the White House as to what he intends to do. How shall we conjecture, therefore, what he will do?

By his words.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] earlier in the day quoted the President; and inasmuch as the attendance at that time was small, I feel warranted in repeating what the President said in this particular matter.

In Brooklyn, November 4, 1932, he said:

The Democratic platform specifically declares: "We advocate a sound currency, to be preserved at all hazards." That, I take it, is plain English.

I did not say that—Franklin D. Roosevelt said that.

Then he went on to say:

In discussing this platform on July 30 I said, "Sound money is as international necessity; not a domestic consideration for one nation alone."

Sound money! Sound money! What does it mean? Does it mean the kind of currency you have heard advocated on the floor this afternoon? Does it mean fiat money? Does it mean printing-press money? Did any man who heard the President utter those words think for one moment they contemplated that kind of currency?

Then he went on:

Far up in the Northwest, at Butte, I repeated the pledge of the platform, saying sound currency must be maintained at all hazards.

Next:

In Seattle I reaffirmed my attitude on this question. The thing has been said, therefore, in plain English three times in my speeches. It is stated without qualification in the platform, and I have announced my unqualified acceptance of that platform.

It is only 2 months ago, out here in front of the portico, he told the whole United States that he believed in "an adequate and sound currency." Has there ever been a President of the United States who has ever violated his own pledges, who has reversed his position? Has there ever been a President who would deceive the voters by getting votes for election by a promise and reversing his position afterward?

No, that is not the type of man we have in the White House. The voters have put a man in the White House whom the people of the United States trust and a man who will never betray the people by reversing his explicitly avowed position. [Applause.]

And so, gentlemen, knowing this, every man here who wants inflation will by voting for this measure tomorrow tell his constituents and tell the country that he has thrown away, discarded, rejected the opportunity to give his constituents what he promised to give them and what he rises here and says he wants. Now, staring that fact in the face, knowing that if you vote for this measure tomorrow, if you trust your own President, if you believe what he said was true, if you think that common honesty still rules in the White House, as, thank God, it rules throughout the land, then you will know that tomorrow if you vote to give him this power you have destroyed that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, it may be that this was what was intended. We cannot read any man's mind, we may not impute motives, but the newspapers have said freely that it was the plan to deprive the gentlemen on my right of the chance to legislate, to deprive the gentlemen on my right of the chance to express by their votes their own feelings, their own views, their own judgments, to deprive the gentlemen on my right of the opportunity to override a veto.

I trust the result will be as I, for one, desire. I desire that the President's view of sound currency shall prevail; I desire that Grover Cleveland's view shall continue to animate the Democratic Party. I am distressed by the prospect, however, that the Democratic Party in the next congressional election may be confronted with precisely the same situation that it was in 1894 and 1896. I regret that the new friends I am making bid fair in many instances not to give me the blessings of their company for more than 2 years. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Not now. I shall take what little time I have left to regret greatly the necessities of the case. Undoubtedly, unquestionably, the President has done what he believes to be the wise thing. It is to be pointed out, however, that what he has done has undone a very great part of the good he had previously accomplished. He has by this proposal made it impossible for any manufacturer or any merchant to forecast the future. There is no industrialist in the United States, not an employer of labor, who will buy the raw material today when he does not know what will be the price of the finished product 6 months from now.

Furthermore, if the President seeks to exercise these powers, the question of constitutionality is sure to be taken into the courts. Remember that in the case of Field v. Clark (145 U.S. 649 (1892)) decision was not handed down for 29 months after the tariff act involved was passed. Remember, too, that Chief Justice Fuller and Justice Lamar dissented, on the ground that the act said of the President "he may deem" and "for such time as he deems just." These phrases calling for judgment the two Justices held could not be delegated by Congress. In the other case most relied upon by defenders of the pending proposal, known as the "Hampton case" (276 U.S. 394 (1928)), decision was not made until almost 4 years after proclamation issued under the Tariff Act of 1922. Uncertainty must last until the courts act.

For such reasons the request of the President for us to save him from his own party has thrown the whole country into confusion. It has delayed the prospect of recovery by many months. It has deluded the gamblers in Wall Street, anxious for a revival of speculation, to proceed again in the manipulation of stocks on an unsound basis. They ought to have known that there is no idea of inflation in this proposal; they ought to have known that the President will keep his word; they ought to have known that Franklin D. Roosevelt is an honest man, and yet they are deluding the public to rush into the market to buy securities on the false assumption that tomorrow morning the printing press is going to be set going and this country is to be flooded with fiat currency.

Because thereby so many innocent people have already been injured, because thereby we see much further in the distance the possibility of good times, because this proposal must arouse still more fear, the cause of all our troubles—for these reasons I greatly regret that the President has put his own party in such a dilemma. Take which prong of it you choose, impale yourself on either one or the other; you may survive the wound to regret the day when you were ever compelled to vote to turn over to the President of the United States the decision of the questions that you were sent here to decide. Under our representative form of government you took the oath to support the Constitution, and under that form of government it is your duty to decide these questions.

While I regret, if it was a necessity, while I deplore the delay of recovery, yet I view with some equanimity the certain effect on the political party that is doing the thing. And I still maintain courage, I still maintain hope that the ideas of Grover Cleveland will once again become those of the Democratic Party, and that as a united Nation we may forswear public dishonesty. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from California [Mr. Ford].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I take issue with the gentlemen on the other side, that the Democratic Party is going to be a party to anything that smacks of unsound money. Those gentlemen have tried to point out to us that we are repudiating our platform. They would be the last ones to point out anything they thought would beat us. They have come here and told us in smooth and honeyed tones just exactly how we are going to perdition, telling us they hope that we will not. The President of the United States is going to be given by this measure the right to give this country any measure of inflation which, in his judgment, he thinks it needs. That inflation has four-wheel brakes, a steady hand, a clear brain, and high courage with which to exercise it, and I am going to vote for the bill. I hope some of my good friends on the other side will do likewise.

We are all trying to adopt a policy which shall revive business, create employment, produce dividends, and make the United States a prosperous country in which all the people share in the high standard of living made possible by the Nation's resources, productive power, and energy.

We have for all too long been suffering from falling prices, lack of jobs, loss of business, failure of dividends, foreclosures, evictions, and despair. In my judgment, the one essential thing we must do to bring about recovery is to bring wholesale commodity prices back to a level where production can yield fair returns. As things are now the farmer, the industrialist, the miner, and all others are unable to produce and come out even. Prices are too low. Profits are impossible. So curtailment has become necessary, with loss of jobs and of every kind of income.

Reflation is the pivot upon which recovery revolves. And increased currency is what we must have to bring about controlled inflation. Bank credit has totally failed us. The banks have restricted loans to the point where no one can be sure of getting credit. Money is too tight. Business is paralyzed. Unemployment is destroying millions of our people. And yet we hesitate to use the sure and certain method of reviving business and making it profitable, of stimulating employment and making it obtainable, of saving the debtor from ruin and the creditor from losing his investment.

And why? Because, forsooth, someone cites the case of Germany in the post-war years, although the German plan of letting the printing press pay the bill is comparable in no least particular to the plan for reasoned and controlled expansion of the currency now before us.

And the other objection is that the bondholder is going to suffer. How, I ask you, is he to suffer if he gets for his bonds the exact number of dollars called for on the face of those bonds, and those dollars have a purchasing power equal to that of the dollars invested in them? Why should we insist that the bondholder be paid in dollars that have from one third to one half more purchasing power than had the dollars invested? Why not consider that injustice instead of the imagined injustice incident to controlled reflation, which is merely the bringing back of prices to the normal?

The crime of the past few years is that those with fixed incomes have been able to buy more, have more, enjoy more than ever before, while the rest of the country suffered from a deflation that undermined and all but ruined them.

Some talk of the injustice to the creditor class. I wish nothing but justice for every class of citizen and for every people. But it becomes increasingly clear that unless the debtor can be saved the creditor cannot long prosper. The farmer who borrowed money on a mortgage at one price level is now asked to pay back the proceeds of twice as many bushels of wheat or other product as would have canceled the mortgage when it was made. Is this justice? And the home owner who borrowed money on a mortgage finds his income restricted or gone, while he must pay that mortgage in dollars that are twice as hard to get as they were and that are worth to the creditor from one third to one half more in purchasing power. The farmer cannot do this; the home owner cannot do this. One alternative faces us: Either let all mortgages be defaulted and the ownership of land and homes be dangerously concentrated, with millions of honest people ruined, or reflate.

This is merely an act of justice, in the interest of all classes. The creditor does not want the farm; he does not want the poor man's home. What he wants is interest on his money and the assurance that in time he will get that money back. And the money he should get back, in the name of good sense and good business, should have the same purchasing power as that he loaned. And that is what we are trying to do and going to do. To fail to do this would be to fail to protect the interests of the people of America, of both the debtor and the creditor class. And it would be to fail to take the one sure way of starting up the wheels of industry and of putting people back to work. But we shall not fail. We shall vote this bill and thus give new hope and new opportunity to this long-suffering Nation.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I do not see how I can consistently vote to concur in the Senate amendments on this bill. These amendments, under the silver provision of the Senate bill, provide that Congress shall hand a nice little gift of $80,000,000 over to foreign governments by reducing their debts by that amount. This same body at the other end of the Capitol refused to pass an amendment which provided for the payment of the soldiers' bonus to men who are in need, whose families are in need, and who are out of work and should get the soldiers' bonus at this time. [Applause.]

Every opponent that I heard 2 years ago, when we were fighting for the adjusted-service certificate so-called "bonus bill", said the only reason they were against the bill was because it meant inflation. Now inflation is here with us; we are going to have inflation, and as long as we are to have inflation and that opposition is removed, I say the only way to inflate the currency or to expand the currency, if you will, properly, is to see that this money goes into 48 States of the Union [applause], and that it goes into the hands of the people of the Nation and not the bankers. This can be done by passing the bonus. We have had plenty of bank legislation during the past 2 years.

In an amendment to the home loan bank bill we gave a nice little bonus to the banks on every $100,000 worth of Liberty bonds which they were turning over to the Federal Reserve System. That little bonus amounted to about $5,000 a year on every $100,000 worth of bonds for nothing, because they did not do any battling for their country during the World War. Most of them did a beautiful job of selling Liberty bonds at 100 and then buying them back at 70. We had no reason to give that bonus to them. You cannot borrow it; I cannot borrow it; the ordinary citizen cannot borrow it unless he gives his right eye as security. I say I cannot vote to concur in this Senate amendment to make a gift of $80,000,000 to Europe, while we leave the soldier and his family hungry and out of work. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK].

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, it is with great hesitation at this late hour of the day that I trespass upon the patience of the House, and if I do so it is simply to call your attention to a feature of the bill to which little attention has been paid in today's debate but which was too hastily discussed when the bill was before the House and before it was sent to the Senate.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], in his very eloquent and illuminating address, paid high tribute to a great Democratic President, Grover Cleveland, and he emphasized the great part that Cleveland played in the history of America, in defending the integrity of the American dollar. He might have added to that another great service that Grover Cleveland rendered, and that was when he maintained by an act of rare courage the freedom of interstate trade.

It may be well for us to recall this courage and loyalty to the Constitution, for no more audacious proposition has ever been made in any bill submitted to Congress than that in the present bill, to restrict the freedom of interstate trade and reduce a substantial part of it to a state of economic slavery.

The Members may remember that when the bill was first before the House it provided, as it now provides, that there should be given power to the Secretary of Agriculture to license processors of agricultural goods, to engage in interstate commerce in their products. I called attention to that remarkable provision, under which thousands of business men could only engage in the interstate transportation of their products by permission of the Secretary of Agriculture, and ventured to call attention to the fact that it was in plain violation, not merely of the spirit but of the very letter of the Constitution, in denying to a man his natural liberty to engage in any useful and lawful calling.

I remember the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] corrected me by stating that it was limited to interstate commerce, and therefore it was thus defensible, as far as the question of power under the Constitution was concerned. I did not agree then and I do not agree now, that the commerce power justifies such an invasion of natural liberty. The Constitution never conferred any right to engage in interstate commerce. That right was antecedent to the Constitution, and the Constitution was brought into existence to vindicate it. Its aim was the freeing of commerce, not its enslavement.

Even the commerce clause cannot be invoked to justify the Senate amendment, which provides that the Secretary of Agriculture having determined in some remarkable way what is the cost of production of an agricultural product, thereupon shall have the right to license anyone who seeks to sell the processed products of those agricultural commodities, and that if the party thus licensed shall sell the processed commodity, having purchased it at less than the cost of production, he can forfeit his license and thenceforth be unable, either in intrastate trade or interstate trade, to sell his products. All processors of agricultural commodities are thus obliged, if the Secretary so wills, to get a license, and that license can be forfeited if it appears to the Secretary that he has purchased from the farmer, even with the consent of the farmer, the raw material of his processed commodity at less than the assumed price of production. The decision of the Secretary of Agriculture to forfeit his license and exclude from the future sale of the product is final and cannot be reviewed by any court.

This monstrous proposition must have been inspired by the "brain trust" or certain of its members after their visit to Moscow. From no other source could the theory have emanated to vest in this Government and in one Government official the power to determine who can engage in business and under what conditions, for the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized by this bill to determine, in his sole discretion, the conditions and limitations of the license, and if the unhappy licensee violates them he can lose his license without trial by jury or any review by any court. "Can such things be and overcome us as a summer cloud without our special wonder?"

If that be true, then it is in the power of Congress to vest in the Secretary of Commerce or the Secretary of Agriculture the power to determine whether any American can engage in business unless he first gets a license from a bureaucratic officer and respects the conditions of such license as prescribed by the official.

Why, there never was such an amazing suggestion made to the American Congress from the first session until this bill was returned to this House by the Senate.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, the commerce clause of the Constitution was intended to emancipate commerce and not to put it into the chains of bureaucratic slavery. It was the restrictions of the various States upon the free flow of the commerce of the States that caused the Virginia and Maryland commissioners to meet on the porch at Mount Vernon in 1786 and, with delegates from other States later at Annapolis and still later in May 1787 in Philadelphia. And the convention, in taking the power to regulate commerce from the States and vesting it in the Congress, intended to emancipate it. Certainly it never intended to vest a control of the free right of men to engage in commerce to a bureaucratic tyrant. For the first century of the Republic no attempt was made by Congress to restrain the free flow of commerce. It was to flow "unvexed to the sea."

This proposed law provides that the decision of the Secretary of Agriculture shall be final and conclusive, "if within the law." The law gives no limitations to his discretion, and the Secretary can say to a certain man: "I will not give you a license," and there is no court, if this law be constitutional, that can restore to the citizen, who is thus proscribed, the natural right either to purchase from the farmer upon such terms as he and the farmer may agree, or to sell his processed commodities either in or out of interstate commerce, if knowingly or ignorantly he purchased his raw material at less than the cost of production, as guessed at by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Gentlemen, if you adopt this law and if it has the signature of the President, then this is true: You have not only debased the American dollar, you have not only deflated the Constitution of the United States, you have not only deflated the common ideas of morality in this country in respect to the payment of debts and the fulfillment of obligations, but you have debased that individual liberty of the citizen, which constitutions are brought into existence to defend and not to destroy.

Are you prepared to subject this country to bureaucratic tyranny? The interests of the Democratic Party are not in my keeping. It is not for us of the minority to advise you as to your welfare. We wish you well. You have a very serious responsibility in this great crisis, and I think it is the honest wish of the Republicans that, if consistently with the Constitution, you shall be able to relieve the farmer and thus render an inestimable contribution to the country by saving us from a depression that is world-wide in character, and for which no party or no country is peculiarly responsible, then there will come to you the blessings of the people and all the advantages that go with political success, for nothing succeeds like success. Let me advise you of the majority that you put your great opportunity to a great hazard by the provisions of the bill I am now discussing.

Let me say to the distinguished leader of the majority side that if I were in his place and had his responsibility I would consider further this matter. I respect him as highly as I respect any man in this House; I know he has honesty of purpose, clearness of view, and unquestioned patriotism. If I were he, I would go back to the Senate and with the Senate leaders would reconsider this monstrous, this un-American idea that the Secretary of Agriculture can tell American citizens whether they can engage in interstate commerce or sell processed commodities in or out of interstate commerce except upon terms that he prescribes. I would do that, and I will tell the majority why they should do so, even from the standpoint of the Democratic Party. Let us suppose that this law is passed and signed and meets the challenge of the courts. It is unthinkable to me that the Supreme Court will sustain a law which violates the Constitution in so many ways; but suppose it does. The moment the Secretary of Agriculture enters into these agreements with farmers and then enters into agreements with processors by which he licenses them to engage in interstate commerce and licenses other processors to sell products, provided they will pay the farmer more than the cost of production, the moment that indefensible and un-American system of licenses is placed into effect, that moment the shackles of economic slavery are fastened upon the American people, and they will speedily become conscious of it.

They may for a little time be happy with their chains if there is any immediate advantage. I think the advantages will be illusory and certainly temporary, but their second thought, unless they have ceased to be Americans, will be that they are being subjected to tyranny like that of the Russian peasant, and they may hereafter trace those portions of what is in many respects a commendable farm relief bill back to the visits to Moscow of the "brain trust", for only from Moscow could have come such an un-American, such an unconstitutional, such an indefensible idea as that which attempts to give power to one bureaucratic official in Washington to tell the American citizen that he has not a right to engage in a lawful and normal occupation, that he cannot engage in interstate commerce, which the Constitution intended to be free from restrictions, without a license, that he cannot buy or sell under the conditions of this law, except he crawls to the Department of Agriculture, that cavernous grave in Washington, and begs for a license and then holds the license as long as the Secretary approves of his ideas, knowing that the moment he displeases the Secretary or his agents throughout the country the Secretary can revoke the license. Then the man is helpless, if this law is constitutional, to resume a normal and useful occupation in America, except he make his peace with a bureaucratic official who may be a thousand miles distant. The American people will not stand for this kind of slavery. If I am wrong in this, then I have much mistaken the character of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, with the probable exception of the signing of the Armistice, which brought to a close the most devastating war in all history, the passage of this currency-expansion measure will likely be the greatest step ever taken by any government since Biblical times. If properly and fully carried out, it will be the greatest boon to suffering humanity of all measures ever passed by a legislative body in all the tides of human history.

I only regret that every man in this House cannot join in its support, the passage of which will probably mark a turning point in the history of our civilization.

I should particularly like to see my distinguished, able, affable, eloquent, and erring friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] who has just spoken—and for whom I have an abiding affection—throw the weight of his great ability upon the scales on the side of this program and help secure the passage of this the most far-reaching and beneficent measure ever adopted by a legislative body. If he would do that, he would render his country the greatest service of his long and distinguished career. The suffering people throughout the world, even the generations yet to come, might then "rise up and call him blessed." [Applause.]

In order to successfully contest on this floor with the gentleman from Pennsylvania one should be able to "bend the bow of Ulysses" or wield the spear of Goliath. I realize my feeble inabilities to meet such a test. But I am conscious of the admonition of his favorite author, William Shakespeare, to the effect that "Thrice is he armed that feels his quarrel just." Or, as was once said by William Jennings Bryan, "The humblest citizen of the land, clad in the armor of a righteous cause, is stronger than all the hosts of error." [Applause.]

It is said that Alcibiades once stopped up his ears and fled from the presence of Socrates for fear that he would grow old listening to his eloquence.

As I have listened to the adroit and persuasive arguments of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, the greatest Shakespearean scholar in either House, and one of the ablest lawyers in America, who probably knows more about the Constitution than any other man in Congress, and possibly more ways around it—as I have melted beneath the magnetism of his marvelous eloquence, embellished by his unaffected rhetoric, and reinforced by a literary resourcefulness equaled by few men on this earth, I have found myself holding to the seat to keep from slipping, lest he should sometimes even persuade me to go astray. [Laughter and applause.]

I am told that he was once a Democrat, back in those struggling years of his youth and young manhood, before he attained his present status of eminence and distinction. But you know we are told by his favorite author—

That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber-upward turns his face;
But when he once attains the upmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend.

[Applause.]

But we also have the consoling assurance of Holy Writ that if you teach a child the way it should go, when it is old, it will not depart therefrom. Probably when he begins to grow "old" and reaches the age of mature discretion, he will return to the conviction of his early youth and join in the fight for the promotion of every righteous cause. [Laughter.] Nothing would be more fitting as a climax to his long and able career than to make that change today. "While the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return." Come on, Mr. BECK, join the hosts of righteousness in this crisis of the world's history, when America is awakening like a sleeping giant, from a long and hideous nightmare, breaking the fetters of this depression, turning from the dead past toward the living future, catching the step and taking the lead in the onward march of modern progress.

If he will do that, he will not only render his country his greatest service, but he may then spend the evening of his career in quiet and ideal peace, conscious of a well-spent life, and confident of its good, enriched with an abundance of those blessings which Shakespeare says should accompany old age, such "As honor, love, obedience, troops of friends." [Applause.]

I have often remarked that his speeches remind me of another expression of his favorite author, when he said,

The world is still deceived with ornament.
In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt,
But, being season'd with a gracious voice,
Obscures the show of evil?

And when I hear his attempts to fortify his erroneous positions with copious quotations from the celebrated literature of the past, even including passages from Holy Writ, I am reminded of the further expression,

In religion,
What damnd error, but some sober brow
Will bless it, and approve it with a text,
Hiding the grossness with fair ornament?

I am afraid that by his gracious voice, his persuasive eloquence, his attractive personality and literary resourcefulness, he has not only obscured the evil of his contentions, but has led the minds of many members to reach the wrong conclusion. [Applause.]

As was once said by a great American, "It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us." We are not only charged with the gravest responsibility that will probably ever come to Members of this body in our day and generation, but we are confronted with the most glorious opportunity for service to humanity with which we will ever have to deal.

We are in the midst of the most terrible panic of all history. For more than 3 years we have witnessed the tragedy of increasing failures, foreclosures, and bankruptcies—farmers forced to sell their crops far below the cost of production, and see their lands swept away for debts or sold to pay their taxes. People are being driven from their homes to join the hungry multitudes who crowd the streaming bread lines along the streets of our cities. Ten or twelve million men, who are able, willing, and anxious to work, are tramping the streets or treading the highways, begging for employment by which to earn their daily bread. Men, women, and children from the best families of America, people who would not get the chill of the humiliation out of their blood for two or three generations, are forced to beg their bread from door to door. A crimson wave of suicide is sweeping over the land—mothers killing their children to keep from seeing them suffer and then committing suicide across their dead bodies.

All this is happening in a land teeming with abundance, where we have more wheat, more corn, more cotton, more manufactured articles, more of everything necessary to sustain human life and contribute to human happiness and human comfort than was ever known before. All this is happening in the most advanced and enlightened age, when we have gained the greatest ascendancy over the forces of nature and the greatest command over our surroundings ever reached in all the history of the human race.

What is the cause of all this? The answer is simple; we are in a money panic—a man-made panic, which we are attempting to cure by the passage of this, the most far-reaching piece of financial legislation ever enacted on this earth. We are "cutting the Gordian knot" that binds suffering humanity to the gold fetish, antiquated theories, and discredited policies of the past. By this measure we hope and expect to put the people of America back on the highway to permanent prosperity.

When the Great War closed, it left the people of the world, including America, loaded with a burden of indebtedness that at best it will take generations to pay. Those debts were contracted on an expanded currency, when times were prosperous and commodity prices were high. We are now asked to pay them with a contracted currency that has so reduced commodity prices as to render this burden too heavy for the people of the world to bear. Yet they are asked to carry on, or told to carry on, driven by the whip of the money kings, who offer them no hope of relief. They have about reached the point of exhaustion and are now stumbling, fainting, and falling under the very cross of taxation upon which they and their children and their children's children are to be crucified.

Something must be done. They can stand this strain no longer. This bill will do the work. I have said time and time again that one of three things is bound to happen:

We shall have to expand the currency, to bring back commodity prices to where they were when our debts were incurred, or we shall have to have a readjustment of all debts, public and private, scaling them down, extending the time for payments and reducing interest rates almost to the vanishing point. Unless one of these two courses is pursued, we are going to be swept into a saturnalia of wholesale repudiation of public and private obligations, including district, municipal, county, State, and Government bonds. That would be revolution, the last protest to which an oppressed or suffering people resort.

By this measure we propose to expand the currency to raise commodity prices, and restore the purchasing power of the American farmer, which will automatically restore the purchasing power of the industrial laborers, because it will enable the farmers to buy the things they need. That will start the wheels of industry to turning and furnish work for the unemployed. Then our bread lines will melt away, our entire economic machinery will begin to function normally and the clouds of this depression will disappear.

But the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania questions the constitutionality of this law which delegates to the President the power to diminish the gold content of the dollar. In my opinion that question was settled by the court when it upheld the constitutionality of the flexible clause in the tariff bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and I both voted against that clause and both of us thought then that it violated the Constitution of the United States, but the courts decided differently, and the law was upheld, just as this one will be, in my opinion, if it is ever put to a test. Besides, this matter will be disposed of by the President before the Supreme Court could ever act upon it. Then, if there is any doubt as to the constitutionality of his acts, Congress would have ample time to ratify them.

Then, too, "there is a higher law than the Constitution." The "safety of the people is the supreme law." This is war! We are at war with the most destructive depression of all times—one that not only threatens the life and safety of every person under the American flag but one that challenges the very existence of our civilization.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to the President's advisers as the "brain trust", as if this currency-expansion theory originated with them. He knows, and every other Member of the House knows, that for more than 3 years I have advocated a liberal, controlled expansion of the currency as the only possible means of relief from this unprecedented depression. I have made this appeal in the House, through the press, over the radio, on the stump, and everywhere else where an opportunity has presented itself. Other Members of the House and of the Senate have done the same thing.

We were not prompted by any "brain trust", but we were opposed by the "money trust", representing the owners of great fortunes who have their money invested in tax-exempt securities and are now opposing expansion because they know that under the present state of depressed prices their hoarded dollars will buy 3 or 4 times as much of American commodities as they will when this currency is expanded and normal conditions return.

I want to touch briefly on the three principal points involved in the currency-expansion provision of this bill. It has been stated, by the opposition, time and time again, that the $6,000,000,000 of new currency provided for in this bill, $3,000,000,000 through the Federal Reserve System, and $3,000,000,000 of United States notes, will be "fiat money".

There is not a scintilla of truth in that statement. Every dollar of this money, under the Gold Standard Act of 1900, will be worth 100 cents on the dollar. It will be interchangeable with every other dollar we have, whether it is gold or silver, or United States notes, or Federal Reserve notes, or national-bank notes, or what not.

This measure has also been attacked because of its provision on the silver question. Did you know that more than one billion people in this world use silver almost exclusively as a money? Silver is mentioned in Holy Writ as a money, before we find any mention of the use of gold as a currency. Silver is the money of the Orient. It is the money of all Central and South America, of all eastern Europe. In 1926, when the international bankers who are opposing this measure induced England to force India onto a gold standard, they destroyed the purchasing power of silver and therefore destroyed the purchasing power of a billion of America's customers.

Some of you gentlemen opposed William J. Bryan on his silver policy in 1896. We Democrats were in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 [applause], and in the Republican platform of 1900, if not in 1896, you provided for the coinage of silver, provided it was done by international agreement, on the theory that if you remonetized silver in the United States alone it would draw the surplus silver to America and drive down the American dollar.

This bill, from that standpoint, is merely carrying out the ideas you expressed more than 30 years ago. In addition to broadening the base for the issuance of American currency it will restore the purchasing power of the people of the silver countries throughout the world, who buy American cotton, cotton goods, wheat, wool, manufactured goods, and other commodities.

Probably the most important proposal contained in this measure is that to give the President the right to reduce the gold content of the dollar, in order to broaden the base of our circulating medium and to reach an understanding with foreign nations for some kind of a working agreement as to monetary standards.

The chief opposition to this provision is coming from that element of our people who own Government bonds payable in American dollars based on the present gold standard. They prefer to prevent, in any way they can, an expansion of the currency that would raise commodity prices, for the simple reason that it reduces the purchasing power of their dollars invested in those tax-exempt bonds. They prefer to exact the last "pound of flesh." They ignore the appeals of suffering humanity. They ignore the ominous warning of discontent. They ignore the pleas of the President to the effect that this change is necessary to bring order out of chaos, restore the prosperity of the American people, and to save American institutions. When they are asked to cooperate in this stupendous undertaking, they raise the question of the Government's right to cut down the gold content of the dollar and ask, in the words of the greedy Shylock, "Is it so nominated in the bond?"

If by some chance we had discovered an unlimited supply of gold and had offered to pay these bonds in that commodity, then they would have demanded American dollars instead.

The Government has a perfect right to change the gold content of the dollar, without consulting the holders of Government bonds. If this program goes through, they will be paid every dollar the United States owes them in United States money. If they should block its passage, and this country should be swept into the maelstrom of repudiation, they might find, as did Shylock of old, that they had forfeited their bonds by their own perfidy.

We have come to a change in world affairs. We are in the same condition the people of Europe were in at the time of the fall of the Roman Empire. Two thousand years ago Rome sat upon her seven hills, the unchallenged mistress of the world. A few people owned practically all the wealth of the empire. They had gathered unto themselves the gold of the known world. The supply was limited and the amount per capita was gradually diminishing, and there was little or no hope for the discovery of new supplies. They were charging the people as high as 48 percent interest at the time of the murder of Caesar. He was murdered, not because he was ambitious, as many of us have been led to believe, but because he had taken the side of the people of Rome and was wringing the loathsome fingers of the money changers loose from the throats of the suffering people of Europe, just as Roosevelt is doing in America today. [Applause.]

After his death, they continued to concentrate and control the money supply of the world. They drove commodity prices down. International trade fell off, and commerce died. Because of the lack of a circulating medium, the people were driven to barter in trade. Poverty increased, stagnation prevailed, patriotism withered and perished away, corruption crept into the state, Rome tottered and fell, and Europe lapsed into an economic lethargy that lasted for a thousand years. It was broken only by the discovery of America, and with it new, and apparently unlimited, supplies of gold. When this new gold was added to the circulating medium of the Old World, Europe awoke as it were from her lethargy of centuries and leaped forward into an era of prosperity, the like of which mankind had scarcely dreamed.

Commodity prices began to rise, wages were increased, employment became plentiful, commerce was revived, international trade was stimulated, and there dawned upon this earth what is known as the "golden age", the most glorious period in the history of the human race—an age that gave to the world more of genius and of greatness than any other period in all the annals of recorded time. Into that age Shakespeare was born—"the rarest genius and the richest soul that ever lived and loved and wrought of words the statues, pictures, robes, and gems of thought." Into that age came Cervantes, the author of Don Quixote, who by his ingenuous pen swept away the fallacies of centuries, and struck from the minds of men the shackles placed upon them by caste systems of ancient institutions.

Into that age came Galileo, the seer of the centuries, before whose matchless genius the old heavens folded away, and a new universe swung into view. It was indeed a golden age. Its glories are still reflected in the marble of Michelangelo, the paintings of Rembrandt, the engravings of Cellini, whose handiworks today adorn the art galleries of the world.

Under the impulse of progress generated by this revival, our forbears swarmed across the Atlantic and carved this republic out of the unbroken wilderness of the New World, and established here, for the first time, a nation dedicated to the proposition that government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed.

For approximately a century after the establishment of the American Republic, we had a double monetary system of gold and silver. In 1873 silver was demonetized, and soon thereafter the supply of gold per capita began to wane.

Today we are in the same condition the people of Europe were in at the time of the fall of the Roman Empire. The gold supply is insufficient, with the present standards, to supply the basis for the circulating mediums of the world and the amount per capita is on the wane. We are virtually at the end of gold. We have prospected every field, we have searched every territory, we have exhausted every mine. There are apparently no more fields to be discovered. We must find some other method of broadening the base for our monetary supply, or suffer the fate of the people of Rome.

A great American orator once said that "It took Rome 400 years to die, and our death, should we perish, will be as much more terrific, as our intense civilization has given us more bone and sinew and nerve and strength and vitality."

We are making history today! The world is looking to America for leadership. The destiny of our civilization is in our hands. We must not fail! [Applause.]

Some years ago, Lord Robert Cecil, Viscount Cecil of the British Empire, is reported to have said in a speech in Chicago, that "England's sun is going down." But he said it would be a "glorious sunset." And it will. No nation that has ever risen and fallen in all the tides of human history has contributed more to the progress and enlightenment of mankind than has the British Isles. He is quoted as having said further that "The leadership of the world has now been transferred to the United States." In order to maintain that world leadership, we must prove ourselves worthy and able to lead. We are in the crucial test today. Upon the outcome of this measure may depend, not only our leadership, but the very destiny of our American institutions.

One of the ablest ambassadors ever sent to the United States said in a speech in this country a few years ago that "An age is dying in Europe; the waves caused by its death agonies are lashing the shores of America."

In the midst of possibly the greatest crises through which the British Empire has ever passed, when all that she had builded for a thousand years was threatened with dissolution, Phillip Snowden, one of the greatest Chancellors of the Exchequer that country has had in a hundred years, arose in the House of Commons, just out of a sickbed, pale and emaciated, dramatically pointed his bony finger at the opposition across the aisle and hurled at them a challenge that will ring down the centuries, in which he said:

All our past acclaims our future: Shakespeare's voice and Nelson's hand,
Milton's faith and Wordsworth's trust in this our chosen and chainless land,
Bear us witness: come the world against her, England yet shall stand!

In this tragic hour, when American institutions, and probably American civilization, are trembling in the balance, let us draw courage and inspiration from the sacrifices and accomplishments of the past, and say in the words of that great Englishman that all our past proclaims our future. The sword of Washington, the pen of Jefferson, the heart of Lincoln, the spirit of Lee, the valor of Davis, and the voice of Bryan—the blood of a million American heroes crying out to us from the ground, echoed and reechoed from the hearthstones of millions of American homes—all these admonish us that America must not fail, our civilization must not perish, our institutions must not die! [Applause.]

By the consummation of this program we can restore the prosperity of the American people, broaden the base of our monetary supply, and restore normal conditions throughout the world, and thereby usher in the golden dawning of a new and a grander day.

Let me appeal to you again, and especially to the erudite gentleman from Pennsylvania, to join us in this fight and follow our great leader in this "battle of centuries", to rescue and perpetuate the civilization of mankind. Then you will not only receive the deserved plaudits of a grateful Nation, but throughout the distant lapse of far-off years your praises will be sung by the sons of men, even in the ages yet to come, when this, our lofty scene, shall be acted over "In states unborn and accents yet unknown." [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the difficulty of following these orators. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] at the beginning of his eloquent address commented upon the ability and type of learning of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and expressed his timidity in following such a Member of the House as he is. I have somewhat the same timidity in following the gentleman from Mississippi. Certainly, I cannot quote history and indulge in such flights of eloquence as he has brought to our attention.

There is an old story, however, that the gentleman from Mississippi reminded me of, that men in my line of business enjoy telling. It happens that I am one of the few Members of Congress connected with the hotel business. It is a favorite yarn amongst hotel men of a customer going into a restaurant, taking up the menu, with the waiter beside him anxious to get his order quickly so that he would get the tip so much sooner. The man looked at the bill of fare and said, "What am I going to order? Here is tomato soup—no; I don't want it; here is pea soup—no; I don't want any pea soup; here is onion soup—no; I don't want any onion soup." The waiter is getting more and more impatient all the while, and finally down the list the customer sees ox-tail soup and said, "Yes; I want some ox-tail soup." The waiter said, "Why go back so far as that?"

Our friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] went clear back to 400 B.C. to tell us about Alcibiades. Why go back so far? Then he brought in another interesting simile. I have heard the distinguished President of the United States compared to a great many different heroes of the world, and undoubtedly he is entitled to these various comparisons that are being made for his glorification, but when the gentleman advocates the passage of this measure before us today and brings in as a justification for it a comparison of President Roosevelt with Julius Caesar, I think he is going back too far. I fail to see the resemblance. Undoubtedly, however, the simile is a good one from the standpoint of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Earlier in the day I endeavored to bring up a question that seems to me to be considerably more up to date than Alcibiades or Caesar. The gentleman from Mississippi objected to my speaking at that time. Recently he asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK], the advocate par excellence of the Constitution of the United States, to join with him in bringing about this "progressive legislation," as he described it. Can he conceive or can any other Member of this House conceive of the gentleman from Pennsylvania joining with him in an endeavor to write on the statute books legislation which every man in the House knows will prove to be unconstitutional?

He has asked, forsooth, the greatest constitutional lawyer of the House to join with him in passing legislation that we all know is unconstitutional. Where is the comparison that the gentleman from Mississippi wants to indulge in when he brings up such a proposition as that, either to the gentleman from Pennsylvania or to any of the rest of us?

Mr. Speaker, it is very presuming upon my part to refer in any way to the Constitution, but this morning, if it had not been for the great desire of the gentleman from Mississippi to proceed quite so rapidly with this bill, I would have brought up a constitutional question which I think is involved here. I maintain that no bill should be received from the Senate containing appropriations inserted contrary to clause 7 of article I of the Constitution.

The pending farm relief bill, which is now before us in the form amended by the Senate, contains a number of provisions for raising revenue. Section 21 authorizes the issuance of $3,000,000,000 of bonds by Federal land banks; section 37 increases the authorized obligations of the Reconstruction Finance by $325,000,000; section 43 authorizes the issuance of $3,000,000,000 of United States notes; and section 45 authorizes the President to accept not to exceed $200,000,000 in silver in payment of the obligations of foreign governments. All these provisions affect the revenue, and under the Constitution must originate in the House of Representatives.

While conceding the power of the Senate to amend House bills, yet this power does not give that body the authority to add revenue items to a nonrevenue bill. The title of H.R. 3835 states that it is a bill "to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power."

It may be argued that inasmuch as the House has already passed upon the subject matter of the farm-mortgage amendment made by the Senate, this amendment may be said to have originated in the House. I do not concede this; but be that as it may, the inflation amendment and the provision authorizing the President to accept silver in lieu of gold have never been passed upon by this body.

Under the rule that has been brought in for the consideration of the Senate amendments, all points of order are waived. However, my objection to the consideration of these amendments is not a question of a point of order, but a question of constitutional privilege. I submit that such questions cannot be waived in this manner. Neither the general rules of this House nor a special rule reported by the Rules Committee can set aside the Constitution of the United States. If the House wishes to permit this invasion of its prerogatives it can do so, but it must do so by a direct method and not under the provision of the special rule waiving all points of order.

Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the resolution I presented earlier in the day. In it the same language is used as Joseph G. Cannon, then a Congressman from Illinois, used in 1878 and which caused a bill to be returned to the Senate for precisely the same reasons I say the bill before us today should be returned.

In those days evidently the Constitution was of some value in this House. Today it does not seem to be. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to incorporate therein this matter which Mr. CANNON brought up at the time, which is found in Hinds' Precedents, volume 2, paragraph 1495.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

1495. The Senate, having added certain revenue amendments to a nonrevenue House bill, the House ordered the bill to be returned to the Senate.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is on all fours with the question before the House today, as to the right of the Senate to attach appropriations to a bill that has been passed by the House. What are the items to which I particularly refer in that respect? The Senate incorporated an additional bill as an amendment. The House never considered the question of the inflation amendment nor the provision authorizing the President to accept silver in lieu of gold in payment of foreign debts. Show me where those two subjects were at any time in either bill that this House passed and sent to the Senate. They were not there. Therefore I say we had no right to accept this measure back from the Senate. You can make in order, of course, anything in the way of legislation by special gag rules, such as you are adopting here; but I stand here to say that you cannot make in order an infringement of the Constitution by any form of measure, rule, bill, or otherwise that you may see fit to draft, nor to gag the minority and rush through ideas here undigested and never considered by this branch of the Congress.

Violate the rules if you wish, crowd out the Republicans if you wish, but for all that is good preserve, maintain, and respect the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I brought up this same question some time ago by resolution which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for examination and report. As the present bill is the second infringement of the Constitution by the Senate in originating revenue legislation, I trust the committee will not longer delay its report on this very important question. I shall feel constrained to offer a resolution of inquiry as to the cause of the delay unless the Committee on the Judiciary reports in the very near future.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LAMBETH].

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, this debate brings before my mind a day in February of last year when, with the humility of one who claims no prophetic license, I tried to tell the House why I could see little hope for the success of President Hoover's latest plan. Not a word of that utterance needs any change today. But I am far from pluming myself upon the accuracy of my predictions, for this was an easy task. I wished with all my heart that I might be wrong, as I now wish no less that I had been. We were simply dealing with a so-called "leader" always months or even years behind events—the Ethelred the Unready of modern times.

Today we find the country near the brink of the precipice, where it was saved practically at the last moment by a very different type of man—a man who faces the hardest facts, instead of shutting his eyes against them, and who meets trouble at least half way. The contrast is almost painful. I should never think of mentioning it except that certain gentlemen who shared the former President's ideas and methods are offering themselves as our teachers today.

Just a word to those gentlemen. Mindful of the ancient sage's dictum that man is a political animal, I feel no surprise when, seeking to lay some foundation for possible advantage hereafter, they act as political animals do. Their late chief may indeed have been wiser than they, for they were certainly blind; and is it not a true saying that in the realm of the blind the one-eyed man is king? Or he may have been precisely as wise as they, for the whole crew of them slumbered while the country went on the rock; and is it not likewise a true saying that all men are on an equality when asleep?

Instead of such a captain the ship of state now has at her helm one who can steer her between the Scylla of inflation and the Charybdis of deflation and keep her course true while defending her from both monsters with the fire of her own guns.

When Grant's critics spoke their complaints, Lincoln answered them: "I can't spare this man. He fights." Thank God, we have at last a man who fights.

What is the nature of the cooperation asked of us this afternoon by our "Marshal Forwards", our leader of 2 o'clock in the morning courage, in his unwearied efforts for the relief of our suffering people?

We are asked to vote affirmatively on the currency amendment to the farm bill, a measure no doubt of very human imperfections in this or that particular and yet the victim of much undeserved prejudice consequent upon wild talk by its nominal sponsor at the Capitol's other end.

I will say at once that if these proposals did indeed threaten to halve whatever little may still be left millions of people whose lifetime savings have melted away, I would be against them hammer and tongs. No destruction of building and loan memberships, of life-insurance policies, or of the financial structure upon which these absolutely depend. And insofar as there are any wealthy people still remaining, I would not rob them either. True enough, the dollar is due some reduction from its present swollen purchasing power, but we may well hope that an accompanying revival of prosperity will bring to virtually everyone more good than harm.

God speed the day when human beings are no longer taught to hate and injure one another because of rabid nationalism or rabid agitation along so-called "class lines." President Roosevelt is a judicious worker in the good cause, and he will soon be asking Congress for further powers to promote economic disarmament—the fundamentally important brand of disarmament—among the nations of the world.

Now, what is this farm relief bill, more wronged, as I said, by some of its friends than by its enemies? As it comes back to the House with the Senate amendments, we see that it has taken on the form of an omnibus measure for the worst or the deepest-lying ills inherited from war inflation, followed after brief deflation by what everyone now recognizes as the half-crazy inflation and extravagance of the post-war boom. First, the farmer, who got a maximum of deflation in 1921, a minimum of the recovery up to 1926, and a most cruel deflation beginning 3 years ahead of the general crash, was to be helped through a frankly experimental price-lifting scheme. Then there was tacked on an originally separate project for lightening his burden of debt, the farm mortgage bill. Third (or fourth, if we count the Smith cotton-option plan separately) came the Thomas currency-inflation amendment, which was a child of storm and which has stirred the country as nothing else has since 1918.

The farmer along with all the rest of us is most interested in the currency proposals, highly important and complex though the others are. No subject is better worth our attention at the present time.

I want to help impress upon everybody the clear, cold fact that these proposals were no part of President Roosevelt's own program, but were taken in hand by him solely to keep within bounds an upheaval which threatened the very foundations of the country. It had become evident, and had been so reported to the President, that the extremists would shortly stampede a majority of Congress into financial insanity. Accordingly he stepped into the breach. He had the projects of the inflationist leaders toned down as much as he could, and then he asked to have the whole matter placed within his discretion, so that he might use any or all or none of the various schemes following their enactment into permissive law. Thus the country was saved from inflation run mad and of a mandatory or compulsive sort. It got instead nothing beyond permissive inflation, which it confidently regards as being in safe hands. As between the otherwise certain calamity of uncontrolled inflation on one hand and this controlled inflation on the other, I am for the controlled inflation every time.

That we can have controlled inflation with almost any modicum of good sense and self-restraint is clear enough. The Senator who speaks for the Mellon-Mills group of reactionaries has attempted to cite German inflation as a frightful example confronting us. But the two cases are extremely different. Germany used printing-press currency after she had no money left to meet the demands of the Allies and little of anything else that was movable. What could a government do, for instance, when placed under the necessity of taking 100,000 cows from children already half famished for milk? And as she necessarily kept on paying her people in printing-press currency, the practice, of course, broke all bounds. It created a demoralization which she ended at the first moment she could. There is no record of any country ever debauching its currency while it possessed superabundant gold, had a favorable balance of trade, was a great creditor among nations, enjoyed complete security. Overinflation has always been forced by conditions from which the United States is and should remain entirely free.

Right here, let me say, I believe that our view of the whole subject will be clearer if we recognize how conditions render inflation of some sort unavoidable for us and how doubly fortunate we are, therefore, in getting the controlled sort. We would have had to inflate or re-inflate considerably even if the country and Congress had kept quite cool and there had never been any question of a Thomas amendment.

Make no mistake on this point: The deflationary movement simply had to be halted. Necessary as President Roosevelt's measures were in the matter of the banks, of the gold embargo, and of the Budget-balancing economies, they were all practically deflationary. They hastened the zero hour. Further downturn would have multiplied bankrupt homes, farms, and industries. There would have been even more severe unemployment, even more defaulted obligations, even more certainty of final ruin. It was a question of bucking the country up at almost any cost.

Furthermore, the sheer size of the figures involved would itself have compelled expansion, whether of credit or of currency or both, just as did the sheer size of the figures during the war.

Statisticians agree that our total public and private indebtedness stands above $200,000,000,000 and that the country at present levels is mortgaged or otherwise indebted for all it is worth. Not only is the Federal Government alone indebted about 21 billions, but it must refinance seven billions of short-term debt within the next 5 years, and it will soon come forward with a huge project of billions for public works. In addition, the new Government corporations, headed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and including those in the farm mortgage and emergency home loan bills, along with a lot of others, require billions. These conditions absolutely demand expansion or inflation, whichever name we may give it. There is no use in kicking against the necessity. There would be as much sense in kicking against the multiplication table.

As for the currency inflation we could have without any of the pending proposals, let us glance at the record since last July. On July 16 an amendment to the Home Loan Bank Act authorized the issue of a billion dollars in national bank notes. The Emergency Banking Act of March 9 authorized 2 billions in Federal Reserve bank notes. Neither authorization has been used in amounts of real consequence. The Emergency Bank Act authorizes any bank, whether or not a member of the Federal Reserve System, to bring to the Federal Reserve bank any paper, eligible for rediscount or ineligible, provided only it has value, and receive Federal Reserve bank notes for it. In fact, a leading member of the House Banking and Currency Committee recently quoted the Federal Reserve authorities as stating that the possibility of currency issue under this provision alone was no less than $20,000,000,000. At $6,068,000,000, our money already in circulation stands $643,000,000 higher than a year ago and almost a billion and a half higher than at the peak of the 1929 boom. Another feature of our paradoxical situation is that, though off the gold standard, we have more gold than ever—enough to support four billions of currency in addition to the amounts actually or potentially outstanding, which I have noted before.

Compared with these figures, there is nothing very formidable about the three billions which the Thomas amendment contemplates through purchase of additional Government paper by the Federal Reserve banks if the banks are willing or through the so-called "greenback section" if they are not. This second provision has been justly criticized, yet its notes could be used only in the purchase of United States obligations and would be retired in 25 years with a 4-percent sinking fund—by no means the same thing as printing money for running expenses. Unlimited coinage of gold and silver at a rate negotiated by the President with foreign countries is another merely permissive step. The Hayden amendment would let the President accept up to $200,000,000 at not over 50 cents an ounce on debt payments from foreign governments due or overdue June 15, such silver to be used as a basis for silver certificates.

I want to call attention to the fact that, besides minor but useful checks upon possible overexpansion, this important safeguard is contained:

The Federal Reserve Board, upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members and with the approval of the President, may declare that an emergency exists by reason of credit expansion, and may by regulation during such emergency increase or decrease from time to time, in its discretion, the reserve balances required to be maintained against either time or demand deposits.

Here is the declaration of a policy which, if carried out even with the authority then existing, would have largely averted the disaster of 1929. But the criminal greed and folly which were preying on the small saver and investor, which continue preying on him so far as they dare or can, and which constitute a greater menace to the foundations of the country than any radicals, these unfortunately controlled the say.

Not until we come to a provision that the President may reduce the gold content of the dollar within a limit of 50 percent is there any authorization which as a mere authorization and irrespective of its use or nonuse presents a downright ugly look. For my part, I do not believe that such a proposal should be legislated even in permissive form. The power may prove useful simply as a lever to the President on the London Economic Conference beginning June 12, when an effort will be made to disarm nations fighting with depreciated currencies instead of with guns. Certainly we want relief from a condition where foreign countries deliberately keep our dollar so high that they can beat us in all markets, including largely our own. But the seriousness of the matter is indicated by the record of history that never since the gold dollar was set up in 1792 has it been changed except in 1834, and then only to the extent of 6 percent. I doubt gravely whether any possible advantage from this provision will counterbalance the effect of however slight a fear that it may be used.

If, indeed, the dollar-devaluation feature checks the return of confidence, there will be difficulty in contriving or operating any sound inflationary scheme. For it must be plain from the figures I just gave that having plenty of currency available is one thing and getting it into action—if in any wise good currency—is quite another. Banks do not take out currency for which they think there is no safe or profitable use, or if they do, they quickly send it in and demand back their collateral from the Treasury or the Reserve banks.

Something of the extent to which the country needs loosening up is indicated by the fact that people still have approximately $427,000,000 of the old large currency hidden about their homes, Treasury officials say. This takes no account of other currency or of an estimated $600,000,000 gold.

The chief assurances of reviving activity in circulation are perhaps the psychological effect of inflationary talk and the big sums to be set going through the projected public works.

Finally, I should like to point out that so long as the normal total of our clearing houses is $800,000,000,000 annually and there is a normal ratio of 10 to 1 between bank credit and currency, velocity of circulation must impress us as more essential than practically any volume of currency, inflated or otherwise. What we want and expect now is that activity, that motion which is the very distinction between living things on one hand and lifeless or dead things on the other. If we get enough velocity soon, we need concern ourselves little enough about the price-lifting project, the cotton-option project, the farm-mortgage project, or anything else in the economic realm.

Mr. Speaker, the soundest money is the money which best serves the needs of the Nation.

Not that any or all of these projects, nor yet the President's entire program, should be regarded as a panacea. We still have before us a struggle out of great depths. No doubt we shall feel ourselves slipping back at times and tempted to lose heart. The speculative markets will alternately excite and depress many. Not a few of us will follow wandering fires. But all this is to be expected. Great depressions have never ended in such a manner that one could say, "Lo here, lo there", at any exact dividing line.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I first want to avail myself of the full and very generous time accorded me on this bill to make plain my position and viewpoint as to the cause of this panic, as well as the pending legislation designed to remedy the evils brought about and bring farm and industrial relief; and I want to do this using words that will leave no doubt of my solution and the meaning I intend to convey.

I do not believe that this panic is a mystery, a deep, dark, unexplainable mystery. I do not believe that this panic involves a problem defying the comprehension and powers of men. I do not believe the blight of this panic has come like some weird phantom ghost from the somber depths of darkness to hover over the land for a time only to disappear as mysteriously as it came, some way, some time in the far distant, hazy future. I do not believe that this blight upon nature's bounty has been sent as a curse by a revengeful God, nor as a scourge upon the people to rebuke and chastise men for enterprise, industry, and thrift.

Only natural conditions and the supernatural are confusing, bewildering mysteries before men. We cannot comprehend eternity, the causes in far-away space, the infinite works of the Almighty. We cannot solve the problems of birth, life, death, and our being, because the causes in nature and space and the problems of our lives and beings and the reasons for creation are beyond the power and comprehension of the weak, finite human mind, which only God can solve.

But this panic does not involve creation or the supernatural. This panic is not a natural condition. Want, suffering, and distress in the midst of plenty and great abundance is not a natural condition. It is an unnatural condition, an abnormal industrial condition, a perverted economic condition, a condition brought about by men, resulting from the relations of men, in the course and conduct of men. This panic was caused by men, is within the comprehensions of men, can be analyzed and solved by men, and can be remedied and relieved by men. To say that this man-made panic is an insolvable problem, an incomprehensible mystery, is a maneuver to evade responsibility or a cowardly mental retreat.

I believe there is a cause, a reason, a remedy, a restoration, a relief in rational means and methods. And if time will permit, I propose to show the cause, to show how, when, where, by whom, and for what purpose. I propose to give dates, places, and names of men, to particularize, to go into detail and show the operations by which this panic was brought upon the people of this country.

When the blight of this great panic fell upon this fair land of ours, the farmers of the country were a prosperous, happy, and contented people. They were selling or giving up one fourth or not more than one third of their products with which to pay taxes, interest, and fixed charges, leaving them with the other three fourths or two thirds of their earnings and income to pay with, to buy and consume with, to live with, to provide themselves with the necessities and some of the comforts and conveniences of life, and to lay away a saving for the winter of their declining years. And while they so remained in this prosperous and contented condition they were great and liberal consumers of all the products of factory, mill, and workshop, all of which were kept busy and speeding up to meet their wants and demands.

And during this same time the industrial, laboring people of the country were alike prosperous, happy, and content, prosperous with continuous employment, employment at a fair and living wage, happy for the opportunity to labor, content to labor to live and grateful for the right to enjoy the fruits of their labor and toil.

The song of the reaper in the field, the call of the farmer to his team in the harvest, the glad voice of the farmer boy, happy and content on the farm, met, joined, and mingled with the din of saw and hammer, the whir of machinery in motion, and the rumble of the busy marts of trade to swell the chorus and anthem of a prosperous and contented people, rejoicing, bringing in the sheaves. Such was the condition of the people on the farm, in the factory, mill, and workshop under higher values, higher price levels and wage scales. Such was the condition of the country and the people under a greater volume and supply of money, under a so-called "expansion of currency and credit", under so-called "inflation", when the blight of this panic and its withering shadows fell to prostrate and destroy agriculture.

But suddenly, while the people of the country were reveling in nature's copious bounty, rejoicing in plenty and great abundance, there came a change to interrupt and reverse this happy order of things, this prosperous and happy condition of the people, coming not like a slow, creeping, loathsome disease unawares, but coming like a bolt from the clear sky, like an avalanche from the mountains, like a devastating tide from the sea, or, in the language of the Prairie Farmer:

In 1920, in almost the twinkling of an eye, the condition was reversed. Prices fell to a ruinous low level, the exchange of commodities almost stopped. No one could sell anything at a price that was considered fair. Wheat fell in price from $3 to $1.60 per bushel. Corn fell from $1.50 to 35 cents per bushel. Hogs, cattle, and all farm livestock and other farm products fell in proportion.

Under this sudden fall of values and the price level, the confiding, unsuspecting farmers awoke as at the break of day, in the morning, to find their property, crops, and produce sinking in a vortex of falling values and prices, forcing down and destroying their tax-paying power, their interest-, debt-, and mortgage-paying power, their buying and consuming power, their power to take and consume the products of industrial labor.

Under this sudden fall of farm values, this failure of earnings and income, over 2,000,000 farmers have lost their farms by foreclosure, and over 3,000,000 are in default and subject to foreclosure. Over 7,000,000 acres of farm land has been abandoned for want of sufficient earnings to pay the costs of production; 2,000,000 farmers have left the farms in quest of employment and a living wage only to compete in the bread lines of public charity in the great cities.

Under this sudden fall of prices, this failure of farm earnings and income, farm debts have increased and multiplied until farm debts today exceed the valuation of all farm lands and property, until the farmers as a class are insolvent, bankrupt, and in hopeless debt. And if all farm property were sold under the hammer today, all farm lands, stocks, crops, and implements, the proceeds of the sale would not pay farm debts.

Under this sudden fall of farm prices farm values have been depreciated over $50,000,000,000, farm values over 25 billions, farm grain and stock over 20 billions, or a loss of over $5,000 to each and every farmer, and over $1,000 for every man, woman, and child on the farm, and variously estimated at 2½ times the costs of the World War assessed against Germany as the amount to pay for reparations.

Under this fall of values and the price level 10,000 farm banks have failed, entailing a loss of multiplied millions suffered by stockholders and depositors, sweeping away their earnings and income, their frugal savings of a lifetime.

Under the awful blight of this panic, thousands of farmers realizing the loss of their life's savings, and facing the humiliation of hopeless debts, have gone insane, other thousands have committed suicide, and still others have left for parts unknown to escape the burdens of farm property and the loss of farm operations. And the ghost of a landlord-and-tenant system stalks abroad in the land with corporations as landlords and former farm owners as tenants.

But these conditions of want and distress have not been confined to farmers alone, nor to the people of the rural communities. The failure of the farmers of the country and their want of earnings, income, and consuming power has slowly but surely crept back through retail merchant and wholesale house until its withering hand has touched factory, mill, and workshop, and the rumbling shafts, pulleys, and wheels have slackened, slowed, and stopped. The whir and din of machinery in motion have died away in oppressive silence; until the mines are running low or closed; until the lumber camps are deserted; until freight cars run empty or are sidetracked, to remain idle; until transportation is stagnated; until traffic is halted, and for want of orders production and consumption and travel is all but suspended; until the blight of this depression, with 14,000,000 industrial workers idle, men are begging in vain for employment and with their families and children are supported by charity and benevolence by public contributions or the dole.

For want of earnings and wages industrial laboring men are unable to meet their building and loan dues and payments, and loan associations are without funds with which to pay their depositors from their savings accounts. And with this failure of wages to make payments and their frozen deposits in banks, the laboring men without wages or hope of income are begging the associations to take their home and relieve them of the impossible burdens of taxes, mortgages, and debts. And for want of earnings and wages tenants cannot pay their rent, tenant property remains vacant or is held without the payment of rent, while landlords are compelled to maintain repairs and upkeep and pay insurance and taxes, leaving their investments not only without profit but a liability and an impossible burden.

Calamity has suddenly fallen upon the people, a cloud has obscured the sunlight of prosperity like a creeping black shadow or a withering blight falling from a clear sky transforming the bounty of nature into an economic curse, and under which starving men, women, and children stand begging before great mountains of food, but are denied and must go hungry, and under which shivering men, women, and children stand looking upon great storehouses of clothing but cannot take for their comfort and protection and must wait in suffering, cold, and exposure. A black cloud has loomed in the horizon of the land and rising until it has overcast the sky, until its shadows falling forward, have obscured the sunlight of prosperity and have left humanity gasping in the darkness of want, in despair and suffering without hope.

It has been well said that all great problems by a proper analysis can be resolved into simple propositions capable of understanding and solution. And it has been truthfully said that the surest way for men to find their way out of a condition is to first take their bearing and find how they came into that condition.

While I am not assuming the role of a Moses to lead the people out of this wilderness of suffering, want, and distress in the midst of plenty and great abundance, I want to throw on the light, to blaze the way, and let the people see for themselves how they were brought into this condition so they can realize, find and fight their own way out of this condition of suffering and despair.

Following the Biblical injunction, "Seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you, ask and ye shall receive", and believing that there was a cause, a reason, it has been found that this $40,000,000,000 taken from farm values has not been destroyed, has not been burned up, has not been cast into the sea, but has continued to exist somewhere in some form of property and wealth, held by some individual or corporation. It has been further found that by the magic wand of money this 40 billions of value lost to the farmers has been shifted and transferred from farm crops, stock, and land of money, and war-debt claims and bonds, the property of certain manipulating bankers, and now remains in their hands and coffer.

Following an apparent trivial amendment passed by Congress April 13, 1920, amending section 14 of the Federal Reserve law, the section taking the control of money away from private bankers and financiers and placing that control in the Government, a secret banker's meeting was held May 18, 1920, in Washington, D.C., behind closed doors and closed curtains and under the very shadows of the Capitol. And in the name and style of "the orderly deflation committee of the American Bankers' Association", a secret resolution was passed declaring for the contraction of money and credits, and then they folded their tent and as silently moved away.

No one knew of the meeting. No one knew who attended. No one knew of the resolution passed. And for 2 years 8 months and 4 days this meeting was kept a guarded secret. But true to an old saying, murder will out. And on the 22d day of February 1923 the manipulating bankers and financiers became involved in a dispute and contention over certain Liberty Loan bonds affected by the resolution passed. And in revenge or in retaliation or for other cause the proceedings of the secret meeting were published in the Manufacturers Record, of Baltimore, Md. And for the first time the proceedings of this meeting and the names of the bankers attending were known to the outside world.

When the curtain was drawn and the world looked in on the secret conclave of bankers there could be read from the resolution passed the disguised, concealed hand of a secret gentlemen's agreement. Brushing aside the veiled preamble, the resolution passed and held in secret reads:

In their capacity as members of the orderly deflation committee of the American Bankers Committee of the American Bankers Association, they hereby agree to abide by the spirit of the address in their own affairs, and that they will encourage its general adoption by bankers and the people of the country.

The bankers in secret conclave assembled did not say what they purposed to do, but pledged themselves to abide by and stand together to do it. The effect of this secret resolution passed at this bankers' meeting was to secure and bind all bankers in a gentlemen's agreement for the concerted action and cooperation to make effective the control of the discount rate and the open-market operations immediately to contract and take out of circulation the money and credits of the country.

Further following the amendment of April 13, 1920, and the secret bankers' meeting held May 18, 1920, in Washington, D.C., the Federal Reserve banks, under orders of the Federal Reserve Board, without notice or warning, with the people groping in the darkness, began the raise of the discount rate, raising the rates from 2 to 5 to 7 to 8 to 9 percent, and until in some farm banks the rates were raised as high as 85 percent. And with the cooperation of the open-market policy, the reserve banks selling bonds and securities under the mechanism of the Reserve System, the money and currency of the country began to gather and flow back in great swollen stream and current, back until 1½ billions of currency was withdrawn from circulation in 8 months, reducing the volume and supply of credit over 10½ billion dollars. And under the law of money and the volume of supply in circulation, the value of money, the property of these manipulating financiers, was doubled and tripled in value.

Under the same law of money, as the discount rate arose and bonds and securities were sold and money and credits withdrawn from circulation, commodities, values, and the price level fell, fell first upon the unsuspecting, the confiding, unorganized farmers, forcing down farm values and the price level and doubling and tripling taxes upon the farmer—doubling interest, debts, and mortgages upon the farmers, measured in farm crops and products, the only means with which the farmers have to pay—and reducing by more than one half the farmer's earnings and income and impairing his tax-paying power, destroying his interest- and debt-paying power as well as his buying and consuming power; and at the same time doubling, tripling, increasing and multiplying the value of the remaining money in circulation and of war-debt bonds and claims and all contracts and obligations payable in money, the property of the international financiers and the manipulating bankers.

This panic is not a mystery; it is a conspiracy, a deep-laid criminal plot. No pirates boarded a merchant ship to scuttle and sink the vessel, no highway robbers ever rode masked, no bandit burglars ever blew a safe with more deliberate criminal intent than the international financiers and bankers who maneuvered from afar or pulled the manipulating wires from behind closed doors and closed curtains, directing their tools and puppets in the secret bankers' meeting and on the Federal Reserve Board, fawning to do their will and bidding.

When the crisis fell upon the farming industry with the higher, normal valuation and price level, the farmers were selling not more than one third of their crops with which to pay interest and taxes, and leaving them the other two thirds or more with which to buy, take, and consume the products of factory, mill, and workshop. But when money was secretly contracted, forcing down values and the price level, the farmers were compelled to sell all their crops and produce to pay interest and taxes, leaving them with no part of their crops and produce with which to buy and consume the products of industrial labor, destroying the buying and consuming power of 40,000,000 farm population and dependents.

And this failure and destruction of the farmer's buying and consuming power left the retail merchant without demand, the wholesale house without sales, and the factory, mill, and workshop without orders. And the wheels of industry slackened and slowed down and brought unemployment to industrial labor, and destroyed the buying and consuming power of another 30,000,000 and their dependents, and the fatal circle of hard times, want, suffering, and distress in the midst of plenty and great abundance was realized and complete.

The published proceeding of this secret meeting shows the same held as a conference in the name and style of the Federal Reserve Board and advisory council, with the action taken on a resolution assuming to be presented by the American Bankers Association. George L. Harrison was there. James B. Forgen was there. J. H. Puelicher was there. James A. Alexander was there, and other bankers who participated. But the manipulating financiers and bankers, the master minds of frenzied finance, engineering this gigantic secret movement were not there, present and in person, but were pulling the wires, directing and prompting their tools, puppets, and cat's-paws from afar, who may have been unmindful or unconscious of the crime they were bringing down upon their unsuspecting fellow men.

But the bankers in this secret meeting knew the power of money and their power to control money and credit and commodity values and the price level. W. P. G. Harding, the chairman, said:

We all know that if the bankers in any community, large or small, were to clasp the screws on tight, they could bring disaster upon the community, which might spread to other communities.

These bankers knew the effect of the contraction of money and credit to force down values and the price level. A Mr. Smith was there and said:

Of course, liquidation (contraction of money and credits) would result in low prices and the easing up of business.

These bankers knew the effect of contraction of money and credits upon farm values and the price level. Another Mr. Smith was there from Wall Street and the stock exchange, claiming to have secured the farmers' consent to reduce farm values and the price level, and, assuming to speak from personal conversation directly with farmers, said:

The farmers with whom I have talked are in thorough accord with this.

This Mr. Smith had probably met these farmers standing around on Wall Street wearing overalls and cowhide shoes, carrying manure forks and scoop shovels, and there secured their consent to reduce farm values and the price level.

These bankers not only knew of the effect of the contraction of money and credits but were warned of what they were doing. A Mr. McDowell, of North Dakota, was there and, protesting, said:

It looks to me like the institution that they told us, when we started the Federal Reserve System, was going to take care of us and prevent panics, was now going to fall down and penalize them.

It seems to me that now is a poor time to penalize the little fellow, and I am afraid that we are just going to create a little more unrest out in the Northwest, where socialism has got such a strong foothold now.

This bankers' meeting was not only called in secret, held and kept hidden, covered, and concealed for 2 years 8 months and 4 days, but the chairman counseled and warned the bankers to hold its proceedings in sacred secrecy. W. P. G. Harding, presiding over the secret conclave, at the close of the secret proceedings said:

I would suggest, gentlemen, that you be very careful not to give out anything about any discussion of discount rates.

That is one thing there ought not to be any previous discussion about, because it disturbs everybody.

You can go back to your banks, of course, and tell your fellow directors frankly as you choose what happened here today, but caution them to avoid any premature discussion of rates [established here today] as such.

John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of the Currency at the time of this secret contraction of money, who protested and remonstrated against the secret orders of the Federal Reserve Board, in explaining the course being taken said:

I heard much talk while I was a member of the Federal Reserve Board about forcing the farmer to sell his wheat or the cotton planter to sell his cotton or the cattle raiser to sell his livestock or the wholesaler or retailer to sell their stock of goods.

But I must frankly tell you that I do not recall of a single occasion during the last 2 years of deflation when the Board ever discussed seriously the importance or desirability of requiring the big banks of New York City to liquidate (pay) a portion of their loans; some of which were lending millions of dollars to their own executive officials on highly speculative securities and to big syndicates in which those officials were actively interested, and which those banks had been carrying for months, and some for years, to liquidate a portion of their loans.

This same John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of the Currency during this secret contraction of money, explaining his efforts to stop the secret contraction of money and credits, to John A. Simpson, president of the Farmers Union, said:

I told the other members of the Board, "Do you not know that that will break lots of little country bankers?"

They cold-bloodedly answered me: "They ought to break. There are too many of them."

I told them, "Don't you know it is going to ruin lots of farmers?" and they cold-bloodedly replied to me, "They ought to be ruined. They are getting so prosperous they will not work."

The currency provisions of this farm bill provide the means and facilities for the issue of new currency for the restoration of the volume and supply of money secretly contracted and withdrawn from circulation, and when carried into force and given effect will cause a rise of values and the price level which is necessary to bring farm and industrial relief. But the most difficult and vital part of such a measure and necessary for immediate and prompt relief has not been provided for or determined upon, but is left with the Executive in the administration of the measure. The issue of the new money making it available to go into circulation is only a part of the program for economic relief. The new money must be made to reach the masses, whose buying and consuming power is to be restored, and not to banks and the certain special few to be hoarded and held from circulation.

There are many means and channels by and through which the new currency can be distributed and carried into circulation, but not all of them can make the distribution to the masses where it is most needed nor promptly and without delay to restore the buying and consuming power and start the wheels of industry.

The payment of the governmental expenses with the new currency would bring a distribution of new money, but the distribution would not be broad enough to restore the buying and consuming power of the people generally.

The costs and payment of new construction and public works authorized and to be authorized as new relief measures would give the distribution of the money among certain industrial classes, but would require a large expenditure of public money for buildings and works that we do not now need and may never need, the money largely going into the pockets of contractors and material men and then would not go to the masses promptly, as the emergency will require, and, lastly, would leave a huge debt to be paid by taxation in the future.

While the payment and retirement of United States bonds due and coming due would distribute the money to a smaller class, and largely to a class not suffering from the want of buying and consuming power, yet it would stop interest and save the people multiplied millions of dollars annually and without adding to and increasing the obligations of the Government to be paid from taxes hereafter. The retirement of the bonds would cancel the bond obligations and transfer that obligation to the obligation of the money used and paid out, leaving the obligation upon the Government the same and unchanged with the huge interest sum saved to the people.

The payment of the soldiers' bonus would put the money into circulation and spread or make distribution of the buying and consuming power among the masses as no other measure could provide. It would go directly and immediately into millions of homes suffering from a want of buying and consuming power and into every community of every State of the Union. It would be spent at once for necessities, and it would find its way promptly to every retail store in the country. It would start on its journey from retail merchant to wholesale and commission house, carrying new orders to every factory, mill, and workshop in the land. It would start the wheels of production and bring an almost immediate and full-time employment and thereby directly restoring the buying and consuming power of 30,000,000 industrial workers through the restored and increased pay rolls. And the magic circle of production and consumption would be complete and normal prosperity restored without waiting.

The payment of the soldiers' bonus with the new money would not be the creation of any new debt to be at some time repaid by taxation. Congress has already, years ago, passed a law recognizing, obligating, and binding the Government to pay the soldiers' bonus. It is a binding, existing debt which must be paid now or some time in the future. If paid now in the distribution of this new money, the debt is canceled and the Government is free from the obligation for all time.

Under the present conditions of the country, the widespread suffering and want among the people; with millions being spent annually to support a vast army of unemployed in enforced idleness; and in justice and fairness to the soldiers now in distress and in greater need of relief than at any other time probable in the future, this new money should be distributed and put into circulation by the payment of the bonus at least to those soldiers now in want and who are asking for the payment at this time.

And after the payment of the bonus the further increase of money required in circulation to raise values and prices to the level necessary to restore the buying and consuming power should be paid out in the retirement of United States bonds to save the millions of interest we are now paying annually from taxes collected from the people.

With this distribution of the new money by first making payment of the soldiers' bonus, restoring the buying and consuming power of the masses, values and prices for the farmers' crops and stock will be raised to a fair and higher level by next fall market time and normal prosperity will be far on the way.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by placing in the Record certain tables, data, and diagram showing the fall of values and the price level concurrently with the contraction and withholding of credit following the bankers' meeting of May 18, 1920, and the servient action of the Federal Reserve Board raising the discount rate, selling bonds and securities under the open-market operations, and the general policy agreed upon at the secret bankers' meeting to call loans and withhold credits.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON].

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, in the period allotted to me I am sure I cannot present any intelligent discussion, at least any comprehensive discussion, of the measure which we are considering this afternoon. However, as a Republican who has never hesitated to carry the banner of the party, even when to do so has cost votes, I want to take occasion to protest against the effort that has been made here today to create the impression that Republicans are necessarily opposed to this legislation. We are not committed to a policy of economic reaction. I dare make the statement that when the roll is called it will be found that a majority of the Members on the Republican side of the aisle will be voting for this bill. [Applause.] At any rate, I am sure that a majority of the Members on the Republican side coming from the Middle West will be found supporting this measure. The last election should be warning enough to those who are still willing to stake the prosperity of this country upon the "dollar that rings true on every counter in the world." It is because those elements of the party, which cannot see virtue in any change and which stubbornly insisted on the maintenance of an outworn economic creed, were too long permitted to control, that there are today altogether too many Members on the Democratic side of the House. It is not because they had faith in the Democratic Party that the voters gave it their support, but because they had lost patience with the stubborn immobility of those in power, who steadily refused to accept any change.

This bill will pass. I am confident of that. I am also confident that it will raise commodity prices, substitute a buying psychology for a selling psychology, invigorate business, lighten the debt burden, protect American industry against a flood of goods from cheap-money countries, and bring back prosperity. And when those things have happened—and they are happening now in anticipation of what we are about to do—what will be the fate of the Republican Party if the word goes out to the country that they were accomplished in the face of Republican opposition?

The true friends of the party are those who by their votes help the present administration effect economic recovery. By placing our party in a position to share in the credit for a great accomplishment we would prove to the country that we are not a party of obstruction, that we can be trusted with responsibility, that we are worthy of being called back in due time to national leadership. If, instead, we persist in a futile and wholly ineffectual opposition to a monetary reform which should have been undertaken 4 years ago, we must expect the permanent eclipse which is the fate of all political parties when they have ceased to be a positive and constructive force in the life of the Nation. This is a time when we can serve our party best by serving our country.

We have heard much today about "sound money." What makes a dollar sound? Is it its purchasing power? Was the dollar any sounder last March when it bought 3 bushels of wheat, than it was in 1919, when it bought only one third of a bushel? If so, should not the proponents of "sound money", if they would be logically consistent, advocate a dollar that would buy 10 bushels?

To state the case of our opponents is to expose its absurdity. The soundness of the dollar is not in a direct ratio to its purchasing power. The soundness of the dollar does not depend upon how much it will buy, but on whether it will buy approximately the same amount of commodities all the time. A dollar which it takes one third of a bushel of wheat to buy when I contracted a debt, but which it takes 3 bushels to buy when the debt becomes due, is not a sound dollar. It is not an honest dollar. It is as dishonest as a rubber yard tape or a collapsible bushel measure.

But, you may ask, Is not the variable dollar, the dollar redeemable in varying amounts of gold, an elastic yardstick? That contention has been made so often, and superficially it seems so true, that I suspect most people believe it. It is, however, based upon a misconception. If the ultimate purpose of a business transaction were to get a certain amount of gold, it might be true. But the purpose of selling an article or a commodity is not to get a certain amount of gold, but to get purchasing power with which to acquire other goods and commodities. Hence, that yardstick is best which varies, not according to the value of gold as a commodity, but which varies least in terms of the average price of all the goods and commodities that are bought and sold in commerce. Hence the least variable, and the most dependable, measure of values is not 23.22 grains of gold, but a price index which is the mean of all values. It is a self-evident mathematical truth, worthy of acceptance as a maxim, that the fluctuation of any one of 600 commodities with relation to the one commodity, gold, is more violent than the fluctuation of any one of those 600 commodities with the mean, or average, of the values of all.

The least variable, the most stable, and the only honest dollar, is therefore the price-index dollar; the dollar which is redeemed, not with any certain number of grains of gold, invariable as the laws of the Medes and the Persians, but in the number of grains of gold that shall from time to time be equivalent in value to the average price of the commodities handled in commerce. It is a cause of great regret to me that the present bill does not go far enough. It does not give us a money free from the disturbing influence of fluctuation inherent in any dollar of fixed gold content. But it recognizes the present disparity between the dollar which measures the value of our property, products, and services, and the dollar which measures our debts, and gives to the President power to remove that disparity. The passage of this bill would be only a half victory if it did not pave the way for future action. Recognition of the fact that there is nothing sacred about 23.22 grains of gold is a net gain. The removal of that superstition prepares us for the acceptance of a philosophy of money based on rational considerations and not on an outmoded tradition.

One of the chief hindrances to economic recovery is the debt burden. We, the American people, owe $200,000,000,000, which is probably more than the wealth of the people, individually owned, would bring if sold on the basis of prevailing values. We owe as much as we own! Such was not the case when these debts were contracted. Then the property charged with $200,000,000,000 in debts was probably worth about $400,000,000,000. An equity of $200,000,000,000 has become worth exactly nothing. Nevertheless, to most of us these equities have potential value upon which we hope to realize. So we continue to pay interest, which at an average rate of 5 percent, amounts to $10,000,000,000 a year. We pay taxes, which include interest on public debts, amounting to $15,000,000,000 more.

Roughly speaking, we expend $25,000,000,000 for interest and taxes before we begin to spend. Of course, some of the taxes go for salaries, which the public officials and employees who receive them spend, and much of the interest goes to mortgagees and bondholders who spend it, but a considerable part of the interest and tax money goes to those who do not spend it. So the interest burden represents a recurring withdrawal of several billion dollars a year from the people's spending power, and there is one of the basic reasons for the economic depression.

Unfortunately, the interest burden, instead of remaining constant, has been increasing. It required only 200 bushels of wheat to pay the interest on a $10,000 farm mortgage in 1920; it required 1,200 bushels in March 1933. Those who have had so much to say about an "elastic dollar" have probably not had the interest dollar in mind. The elastic interest dollar has been the means by which the American people have been robbed of their former standard of living, the prosperity to which the abundance of the Nation's physical resources and their own industry have entitled them.

We have been told in the course of the debate that inflation is debt repudiation. No inflation permitted under this act could make the dollar less potent than it was during the period when most of the debts now existing were incurred. When creditors get back as much buying power as they parted with they are not cheated. On the contrary, any system which permits the lender to collect more buying power than he parted with (interest not considered) is an aid to extortion, which should not be tolerated in a society in which justice and fair dealing are supposed to characterize business transactions.

It has been charged that this measure provides a partial cancellation of war debts. It is true that the Government is authorized to accept silver at 50 cents an ounce, but it is provided that the aggregate value of the silver accepted shall not exceed $200,000,000. This would be a very small concession on claims which amount to many billion dollars. Furthermore, the concession is apparent rather than real. Even if the United States were to accept full payment in silver, it would get back more buying power than it loaned its European associates. In a real sense, it was not gold we loaned the Allies; it was credit, with which they bought materials and goods needed for the prosecution of the war. If we get back the means of buying the equivalent in materials and goods, with reasonable interest, we shall have received just payment. One of the benefits to be derived from restoring the dollar to its former value is that it will enable us to make an equitable adjustment with Europe without doing injustice to the American taxpayer. By paying the holders of Government bonds in the kind of coin with which Europe can afford to pay, we place ourselves in a position to remove the chief brake upon restored international trade without making the taxpayer bear the burden. The holders of the bonds should not be heard to complain, for the dollars they will receive will still be more valuable than those with which they bought their bonds in 1918.

It has been argued that the uncertainty as to whether the President would use the power to devalue the dollar would prevent economic recovery. That, too, seems plausible; but a little reflection will show that it is not sound. The President would either devalue or not devalue. If he did not see fit to devalue, prices would remain stationary. If he saw fit to do so, they would rise. There would be nothing to induce the belief that any action taken would result in lower prices. Business men and their customers would protect themselves against price advances, not against price depression. The inevitable urge would be to buy, there would be no inducement to sell. The power to devalue, even if never used, would have an inflationary effect. If any proof were needed to back this assertion, the recent trend in the markets furnishes it.

Some of the opponents of the inflationary provisions of this bill have made learned constitutional arguments. They have attacked the delegation of what they have chosen to term legislative power to the President, with special reference to the provision that the President may fix the gold content of the dollar.

It is true that the Constitution gives to Congress the power "to coin money and regulate the value thereof." But the same section—section 8 of article I—also gives to Congress the power to lay and collect duties, and to regulate commerce among the several States. The power to lay and collect duties has been, within certain specified limitations, delegated to the President, acting on the advice of the Tariff Commission; and the power to regulate commerce among the States has been, within limitations, delegated to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Supreme Court has upheld both of these delegations of congressional power. The rule is that when the discretion within which the power delegated may be exercised is limited, there is no unconstitutional delegation of authority. The pending bill has provided such a limitation. It states that the President may not reduce the gold content of the dollar by more than one half.

Germany is the ogre that has been conjured forth by the defenders of the status quo to warn us of the terrible dangers which will befall us if we expand the currency. No one wants the kind of inflation Germany had. No nation with $400,000,000 of gold could have that kind of inflation. Certainly the issuance of $3,000,000,000 in additional currency would not bring it. Under the limitation of this bill, even if the President were to use all his power, the dollar could not become cheaper than the dollar of 1926. A reduction so limited would do injustice to no creditor, would confiscate no investment, would oppress no consumer. We shall not be lighting our cigars with any of the new currency!

Let me say in closing that the question before us today is not whether we shall have inflation or not. The possibility of avoiding inflation is long past. The question is whether we shall have controlled inflation, limited by law, or uncontrolled inflation, forced upon us by inexorable and uncontrollable economic forces.

For we are rapidly drifting into a position where the latter alternative will be inevitable. With the sources of income drying up, with the income tax bringing in thus far in 1933, $300,000,000 less than during the corresponding period of 1932, despite drastically increased rates and greatly lowered exemptions, with the surplus in the Treasury, over $600,000,000 when we came here 2 months ago, now less than $280,000,000; with these conditions not only continuing but being constantly aggravated as the deadly spiral of the economic cyclone completes its work of economic destruction, the time cannot be far off when the Government will have to print fiat money to meet running expenses. Then we shall have the identical conditions which brought Germany to her ruin.

Is not the other the better and wiser course? Take half of the gold out of the dollar, bring debts back to manageable proportions, increase commodity prices, restore the ability and incentive to buy, start the factory wheels moving, put men back to work, employ black ink instead of red in the accounting rooms, replace deficits with incomes, start the revenues flowing again into the coffers of the Government, and make this the happy, prosperous country it by right should be.

Instead of risking the dangers of uncontrolled inflation, the forerunner of bankruptcy and despair, let us undertake a reasonable and intelligent expansion of the currency and a reduction of the dollar to a value consonant with reason and good sense.

THE SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON] has expired.

MR. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

MR. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, we have here under consideration in an amendment to the farm relief bill a proposal to change the fundamental law regulating the Government's function in creating and issuing money, the most vital and controlling issue that has ever come before the Congress. It is my firm conviction that if this Congress will exercise the power conferred upon it by the Constitution to coin money and regulate the value thereof, and give this country a sound, workable, and adequate monetary system, business and industry will automatically restore commodity prices, and resulting profits accruing from business will start the flow of income-tax returns which will automatically balance the Budget, and the people of this country will enjoy a return of prosperity.

What we are seeking to do here is to increase the purchasing power of the people by increasing the value of commodities, which are the products of labor. We must not confuse the purchasing power of the monetary unit with the purchasing power of the individual. "Inflation" is not the word that I think gives the proper definition of what we are trying to do. We are rather trying to restore credit and confidence by supplying that element which we call cash.

We have been trained to do business on credit and credit has collapsed. Now, under the power of Congress to coin money and regulate the value thereof, I think we must restore the primary money by the addition of silver to the gold in our monetary system.

[Here the gavel fell.]

MR. BROWN of Kentucky. I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Idaho.

MR. WHITE. I have before me a chart taken from the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations prepared by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, which shows the relation of commodity prices to silver. Let me point out that from 1913 to 1930, when the most violent fluctuation this country ever saw in the price of silver occurred, that the price of wheat and commodities synchronized and followed in their minor fluctuations every movement of silver. This, to my mind, is conclusive evidence that silver controls the price of wheat. Never yet in this country have we had dear wheat and cheap silver. This Government through the operation of the Farm Board, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and other Government agencies has poured $4,000,000,000 into our depressed markets trying to raise commodity prices and break the relation which exists between the price of commodities and the price of silver.

MR. SPEAKER, I am convinced that the only solution to get us out of this depression is to remonetize and stabilize the price of silver. [Applause.]

MR. SPEAKER, I yield back the balance of my time.

MR. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

MR. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, in one part of my Iowa district martial law prevails this afternoon. The soldiers have come down there because sympathetic neighbors were expected to stand by in an effort to prevent the sheriff from selling the property of an Iowa farmer at chattel-mortgage sale. I have here a newspaper picture showing this thing. And one can see that the sheriff is being backed up by machine guns and by military display. The farmer must lose the property. On with the sale!

I deplore what has taken place out there, but, nevertheless, I want to say something about these farmers. They have been good men. They are good men. They have been good citizens, and they will be good citizens. They are hard-working folks. They want to abide by the law. They are not anarchists. They are God-fearing men. They work from light to night, and their wives and children work with them through the live-long day. By reason of untoward events over which they have had no control and for which they are in nowise to blame and without fault of their own they have been brought to the verge of ruin. By practicing the utmost industry these men are not able to sell their products at a price which will save them from bankruptcy. By practicing the utmost thrift and economy these men are not able to save their property from forced sale under the sheriff's hammer.

Insurance companies, banks, and individuals hold mortgages on the farms of this country and upon the farmers' chattel property aggregating as much as the entire monetary gold stock of the whole world. Under the present monetary set-up it is no more than simple truth to say that the farmers cannot pay these mortgage debts. Prices for farm products are so low that they do not justify shipment to market. Railroads are going into receiverships. The farmer is no longer a consumer of manufactured products. He is forced to live off of his farm. Everyone must be interested in his plight because everyone suffers with him and because this country will never recover its equilibrium until the farmer is restored to his fair share of prosperity and is given buying power. These farmers are conscious of their own diligence and industry and believe themselves without fault, but nevertheless they find themselves unable to pay their interest or their taxes or their debts. They have been made desperate by the economic conditions which have brought about their suffering and their despair. They have now come to realize that there is little hope for them or for their loved ones unless such conditions are speedily changed. And so the militia has come there to patrol the highways and farmsteads and to see to it that the despair and despondency which prevail among them do not lead to open violence and anarchy.

I cannot and do not excuse anarchy. I cannot and do not speak for any group or crowd of men that will so far forget themselves as to enter the halls of justice and, with force and violence, attack a competent and fearless judge. This is reprehensible. The honor and dignity of our State must be and will be preserved. Law and order must and will prevail. But, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that there comes a time when men, driven by long suffering and agony, will forget law and propriety. I regret that this is so. I regret that some of our people have been guilty of great wrong. I do not palliate or excuse their offense. I know that men will always fight for their homes and their loved ones. The primal instincts of self-preservation sometimes impel them to violence when they believe that their homes are to be devastated and that their loved ones are to be abjectly consigned to economic slavery. It is our duty here and now to so arrange it that the laws will protect the farmer and make it possible for him to reach a degree of prosperity within the compass of the law and not allow him to believe that he shall have any economic security outside of it. Our duty is plain.

For many years this storm has been brewing. During my own membership in this body I have stood on this floor many times and have pointed out the facts and have asked that affirmative relief be given to agriculture. I have said, and I repeat again, that we have been fiddling while Rome burns. Here now in this Congress we should be profoundly impressed with what has taken place in my State. While we deplore mob violence, and while we censure men who are guilty of high crimes against the peace and dignity of our people, and while we profoundly regret that mobs should ever seek to enter the halls of justice, nevertheless we must ourselves deepen our sense of responsibility. We must no longer hesitate. We must rescue agriculture. We must go forward with this bill because it is the only proposed legislation which is designed to remedy the manifest evils attending the farm situation. We are not allowed to amend the bill. We must take it as it is. We cannot reject it. That alternative is unthinkable.

Heretofore the counsel that has prevailed respecting agricultural relief has been the counsel of the old-fashioned-do-nothing crowd of physiocrats; they are the laissez-faire crowd which teaches the philosophy of noninterference, of "hands off", of "let alone." Now, it is thinkable that this philosophy might not be so bad in its effect upon agriculture if it were given universal application. If hands were kept off of every other industry, it is thinkable that agriculture would be in a position to take care of itself. I do not argue this, but I do say that laissez faire has not been the basis of our legislation respecting other matters and in other fields. For example, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is an instance of high demand for affirmative interference and affirmative action. It is not "let-alone" action. It is, in truth, the most stupendous example of socialist legislation that has ever been enacted by the Congress since the time that George Washington was inaugurated as President of these United States. I do not criticize that act, but think it is noteworthy to remark that some of the men who supported the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are the very men who believe that agriculture has no right to participate in favorable legislation of the same character, and that the laissez-faire principles should obtain as to agriculture but not as to finance, manufacture, commerce, trade, and many other forms of industry.

Since coming here I have heard much of the slogan "less Government in business." And yet I have seen the very men who repeat this slogan come here and demand legislation which puts the Government into various and sundry lines of business with which they, perchance, happen to have an interest. These men want Government regulations and help in banking. They want the Government to engage in finance and trade. They want subsidies and appropriations of money and demand that we shall embark upon many forms of industry. I do not speak against this here today, yet these men want the Government to keep its hands off of farm production and farm industry and farm finance. They are the men who want Government in business, provided the Government will help their business. But they want the Government to refuse help to every other man's business. But this slogan does not seem to be heard so much lately. It is not in good style just now. And this is because nobody seems to want to trust anybody but Uncle Sam, and therefore, your dear old uncle has had to come to the relief of nearly everybody and everything. Whatever the Government may have been doing for agriculture it is plain that there has been no adequate relief so far given that industry for it is now in bankruptcy and economic ruin. It can scarcely be denied that conditions in the farming areas of the country, whose people constitute one fourth of our population, are such as to imperil our national welfare.

But I want to talk about the monetary features of this bill because the chief discussion here this afternoon has been in reference to that subject. We hope and believe that the operation of the bill will expand currency and credit and restore trade, prices, and prosperity. Mr. Speaker, the dollar is now altogether too high priced. It takes entirely too much of labor and of the produce of the farmer in order to get one. When men talk about sound currency they have no right to refer to the present American dollar because, as applied to agriculture, it is an unfair dollar. When men talk about an honest dollar they cannot be talking about the present agriculture dollar, because that dollar is a dishonest one. When men speak with derision of rubber dollars, they must be referring to the present standard monetary bank dollar of trade and commerce, because it is the dollar that has been stretched far beyond any normal or righteous length. Rubber stretches. It stretches out into lengths that are not normal. That is just what the dollar has done with regard to the American farmer. It has been stretched to represent 10 bushels of corn instead of 1 bushel, which is its normal and honest length. Honest money is money that is fair alike to the creditor and also to the debtor. To establish a just relationship as between debtor and creditor, it is absolutely necessary that we have an honest measure of value, just as we have honest and fair measures of length and weight and capacity. When money doubles or trebles in value, the debtor is compelled to pay his debts twofold or threefold or else have his savings taken away from him through legal process. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Let me illustrate. I have in my hand a piece of old-time German currency which reads upon its face that it is for 500,000 marks. At one time a mark was worth 24 cents, so that this piece of money then represented about $120,000. A friend of mine gave it to me about 10 years ago. I was curious about it. I thanked him for it and asked him how much it was really worth. He replied, "If you were over in Germany tomorrow morning you could just about buy your breakfast with that piece of money." Think of it! What does this mean? Why it means that one who had been reasonably faithful and diligent and who had practiced economy and had intelligently carried on his business affairs, and had been successful and laid up a competence of $120,000 for his old age, would be compelled to go down into the evening shadows of life with no more than the price of a breakfast! It means that a widow who had an insurance policy for a hundred thousands dollars left behind to her by a frugal and loving husband would have after all nothing more than the price of a breakfast. Nobody can defend such a thing! It is wrong! You know that it is wrong! Therefore we hear much said by our opponents about German inflation as having been a wicked and unconscionable thing. But why do these men stop at this point? It is equally wicked; it is equally unconscionable; it is equally wrong for us to allow a condition to prevail whereby a farmer must pay tenfold in his labor and in his products in order to satisfy his debt. American deflation is equally wicked, just as German inflation was. What difference is there in the principle of the thing? Does any one believe that the farmer can go on under present economic conditions? You talk here about the sanctity of a contract. Is there any sanctity or honor in a contract which requires a man to pay 10 times the amount of his borrowings in order to satisfy his debts, besides paying high interest rates to money changers measured by the same 10-fold formula? How about recent legislation in various States to prevent the payment of the contracts of insurance companies and of the big banking institutions? Understand, I am not against this legislation. It was probably necessary.

If it is wrong to despoil the creditor class in Germany, it is equally wrong to despoil the debtor class in America, and that is exactly what you have been doing or have allowed to be done to the farmer during these past 12 years of your rubber and dishonest dollars. You have not given an honest dollar to these men and women upon the farms. And it was in point for the old farmer in Iowa under arrest by the militia to say that so long as they had cheap prices they ought to have money proportioned to such prices with which to pay their debts and buy their necessities.

The bill is not just what any one man would make it, but all legislation is a matter of compromise, and this bill goes in the right direction and makes for the redress of great wrongs. Twenty-three and twenty-two hundredths grains of gold are not sacrosanct. Men and men's wives and men's children are. And no sacrilegious hand should be allowed to be laid upon them to take from them unfairly their lives, their happiness, their welfare, their estates, or their homes. Republicans and Democrats alike will support this bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein excerpts from a statement of Dr. G. F. Warren, professor of agricultural economics at Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WHAT IS PRICE?

Once upon a time, a farmer found that he could get 23 hogs for 60 sheep. At a later time, he found that it required 120 sheep. Why the change? If there were time to question you individually, some of you would say that there were too many sheep at the second date. Others would say that there were too few hogs. Others would give the correct answer, that we do not know. There might have been too many sheep or a reduced demand for them; or there might have been too few hogs or a high demand for them. There are many other possibilities. There might have been a shortage of both sheep and hogs but a greater shortage of hogs; or there might have been a surplus of both sheep and hogs but a greater surplus of sheep. The only way to determine the cause of the changed relation is to compare sheep and hogs with many other things. Suppose we find that hogs exchange for twice the former amount of innumerable things. Who would then be so foolish as to attempt to explain the changed ratio as due to the supply of sheep? But if we change the 23 head of hogs to 23.22 grains of gold, and change the sheep to pounds of wheat, practically everyone says at once that there is an overproduction of wheat. If a bushel of wheat (60 pounds) exchanges for 23.32 grains of gold (otherwise named $1), and if at a later time it takes 2 bushels of wheat to get the dollar, we blissfully explain it as too much wheat.

There are four factors in price, not two as is commonly supposed. This error has been the cause of innumerable business failures and of much foolish legislation. The price of wheat is the ratio of the supply of wheat and demand for it to the supply of gold and the demand for it.

Our present measure of value is a given weight of a single commodity, the value of which changes with the supply of this commodity, and the demand for it in precisely the same way as the value of any other commodity changes.

The "money illusion" is as thoroughly dominant in this generation as was the illusion of a flat earth about which the sun revolved in the time of Galileo. It is almost as dangerous for an economist to challenge the money illusion as it was for Galileo to threaten the foundations of civilization by saying that the earth revolved.

RELATIONSHIP OF GOLD TO PRICES

For 75 years before the war world monetary stocks of gold divided by total production of other things equaled prices in England. During the war prices on a gold basis doubled. How did this occur? For the very simple reason that most of the world abandoned the gold standard and stopped bidding for gold. Gold, therefore, moved to the few places where it was freely purchased. The low demand reduced its value just as the demonetization of silver reduced its value.

When the various countries attempted to return to a gold basis the increased demand raised the value of gold. France returned to a gold basis June 25, 1928, and the gold panic was soon on. Now 31 countries have given up the effort to maintain a fixed price on gold. But they are still bidding for the world's gold supply. It is possible that they will definitely demonetize gold and stop bidding for it and make it cheap again, but this is not probable. The value of gold is determined by world supply and world demand, not by location.

To keep pace with business the world gold stocks must increase as rapidly as the production of other commodities, or about 3.15 percent per year. But the increased use of gold in industry is about as rapid as the growth of business. In order to increase the world monetary stocks by 3.15 percent per year it is necessary that the production be 5.6 percent of stocks, the additional amount being necessary for industrial uses. This would call for production of about 32,000,000 ounces this year. The actual production is about three fourths of this amount.

The present rate of gold production would result in a gradual decline in prices, even if there had been no war. But our major difficulty results from changes in the demand for gold.

During the many years when there was a low demand for gold our debt, tax, and business structure became fairly well adjusted to a commodity price level about 50 percent above pre-war. We are, therefore, in the position of having a world gold supply of only about two thirds the amount required to support the price level to which business is adjusted, provided the former gold-using countries continue to bid for gold. This situation results in such a frantic demand to get gold that even the gold supply which we have is used inefficiently.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HENNEY] such time as he desires.

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself to a subject that is not presently new but which has been engaging the attention of the farmers, laboring men, and business men of our country for the past 2 years. I have reference to the subject of expansion of our currency. I wish to go on record as just another voice crying in the wilderness on behalf of our belabored and beleaguered farmer and laboring man. I hold in my hand a rather voluminous piece of money; in fact, it is a foot and a half long by one half foot wide. It represents $2 in credit money. This gigantic piece of money is, to my mind, a signal indictment against the sufficiency of our circulating medium and a telling and explicit argument for the necessity of expansion of our currency. This is only one of thousands of different plans which has been and is being used in hundreds and hundreds of localities of the United States to supplement the money scarcity. This particular piece of currency is one of a series that is circulating in the city of Madison, located in the Second Congressional District of Wisconsin, which State I enjoy the honor of representing in this Congress. Reading the legend on the face of this note explains its particular plan more concisely than I can—

ANTIHOARDING VARIETY

This is a bona fide check printed up in jumbo size to carry 25 endorsements and to call public attention to the number of people benefited by money kept in circulation even for a few days.

Idle money helps no one. Money in circulation helps everybody. So, while this check may be cashed at any time at your bank, we suggest that instead you help keep it in circulation by passing it on within 24 hours to someone from whom you buy something or in payment on account.

Just endorse the check on the back when you pass it along and the twenty-fifth person who receives it should bank the check in the regular way or bring it to our place of business.

What does this mean, and why do business men resort to this procedure? It is proof positive that there is not enough currency in circulation and that business is forced to this type of money as a medium of exchange in lieu of the barter and trade principle. And while we are told that at the present time there is in excess of $8,000,000,000 of Treasury money outstanding, still the existence of such a medium of exchange as this is proof positive that we do not have enough currency in circulation. The situation is analogous to the adage, "Water, water, everywhere water, but not a drop to drink."

According to ex-Senator Owen, of Oklahoma, the records of the Treasury Department in February show that there was about $6,000,000,000 in currency outstanding, but it was not in actual circulation according to his figures. At that time he stated there was about one-half billion in foreign exchanges used for cash and travelers' checks and meeting obligations, or was lost. There was about one billion one hundred fifty million in the safes and tills of some business men who, because of bank closures in their localities or in order to avoid the check tax, had withdrawn their bank checking accounts and were paying wages and small accounts in cash. In other words, it was semihoarding. Over one billion six hundred million was being hoarded in sugar bowls, stockings, mattresses, old books, and so forth. Since that date undoubtedly a large proportion of this has been brought back to the banks which have opened and are considered sound, but it has been more than counterbalanced by money that is tied up in savings accounts in closed banks. Eight hundred and fifty million was in checking accounts but must be replenished, as it is checked out, so that this amount is really out of circulation. This left approximately two billion one hundred million in circulation, and these figures and conditions submitted by ex-Senator Owen have not materially changed and are practically the same today as they were at that time.

I submit that this is not enough money to carry on the normal flow of business in this country, and that is the reason why such a preposterous condition has resulted which brings into existence this huge piece of currency. This is fiat money in all that the term implies. Necessity may be the mother of invention, but malnutrition of finance is father of this illegitimate offspring. Whenever any proponent for expansion of currency raises his feeble voice in its behalf that old bugaboo is advanced that inflation is all right but if it gets out of control conditions paralleling those of Germany and France will result. In view of the fact that our gold reserve of $4,400,000,000 can on a 40-percent basis be safely expanded to $10,000,000,000 in currency, this is mere persiflage. The currency in this country can be, and has been, expanded and contracted many times in the past without the people even knowing that it had taken place. When President Wilson assumed office in 1913 there was about three and one quarter billion dollars in circulation and an orderly and systematic expansion was brought about at that time so that when he left office we had approximately six and one quarter billions in circulation. That was one of the most prosperous eras of our century. We were continually told that this was war prosperity, and we will accept that partially but not in its entirety. However, I submit that this expansion of the currency of 100 percent had its effect in bringing about the prosperity which we enjoyed at that time. But what did our opponents tell us then? We all remember during the Harding-Cox campaign that their slogan was, Reduce the high cost of living. And the cost of living was high, because beefsteak, pork chops, bread, cotton, woolen clothing, and all supplies in general that came from the farm were high, and in their platform of 1920 they stated, in substance, that this high cost of living was caused by the unnecessary and uncontrolled expansion of the currency, and they pledged themselves to reduce the high cost of living by deflating the currency at least 50 percent. Was this statement true then? Of course it was. This was their contention. They believed it and they proved it, for, beginning in March 1921, a systematic and orderly deflation of our currency was begun, and during the next 17 months this deflation took out of circulation slightly in excess of $2,000,000,000, so that in July 1922 the amount of money in circulation in the United States was about four billion two hundred million, and the high cost of living, beefsteak, pork chops, butter, milk, and other farm products had a real toboggan.

It is true that prices again reached the peak in 1928. This was largely because we had loaned to Europe fourteen billions of dollars with which they were able to and were magnanimous enough to buy our own goods from us with our own money and thereby help to maintain a purely artificial price level. This they did and everything was "hunky dory" until the balloon burst in 1929 and we found ourselves going downhill with four flat tires, no brakes, and a disabled steering wheel; and, Mr. Speaker, I submit that if inflation of our currency in 1914 was even partly responsible for our era of prosperity and if, as contended by candidate Harding and demonstrated by his policy as President, it was responsible for the reduction of the high cost of living and the reduction of the price of commodities, then certainly at this time we are justified in reversing the machinery and embarking on a controlled expansion of currency in some form whether it be by purchase and coinage of silver or by issue of Federal Reserve notes and putting them into circulation, by retiring six or seven billion dollars of tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds, which I strongly endorse, or whether we shall revalue the gold dollar. This is not so material as that we expand the currency by safe and carefully controlled methods, the same as were used by Presidents Wilson and Harding to control the expansion and deflation during their administrations.

I believe it can be stated without serious contradiction that farm prices will rise; interest rates, mortgages, and fixed charges will be cut in proportion to the amount of expansion; the buying power of the farmer will return; the wheels of industry will begin to hum; laboring men in that vast army of unemployed will return to work at better wages, and business and professional men in villages and cities will again be able to meet their bills. The velocity and free flow of money will be set up and as we well know, the velocity in flow of money varies directly as the amount of currency in circulation and also inversely as its value.

This was well illustrated in France where at the time of the World War and still later when the amount of paper currency in circulation was excessive and of course was uncontrolled and was not backed up by sufficient reserve in their treasury. Soldiers who were given their pay in the French currency would have a veritable pocketful of it, and they spent this currency freely because of its cheapness. In fact, the actual amount of money spent as compared with American dollars was in excess of what it would have been had they been using a higher priced currency. This bears out the contention that the velocity varies inversely as the value of the money, or in other words, the more the money the cheaper and easier it is to get and, therefore, the more freely it is spent. Business prosperity depends upon the velocity and flow of money to a greater extent than to the actual amount of money in existence but the amount of money which represents the reservoir or fountainhead of the stream of credit is after all the factor which controls the velocity of flow. No one thing could so stimulate prices and buying power throughout the whole United States and build up the psychological reaction of the business in this country as a carefully planned and orderly executed expansion of our currency. This was well borne out by the reaction of markets the day following the passage of the farm bill with the inflation amendment by the honored body at the other end of the Capitol, when prices on wheat, corn, hogs, cotton, and all farm products moved sharply upward. No other legislation will as quickly benefit the farmer, give him a purchasing power, and raise wages for the laborer and put the unemployed back to work as will the passage of this bill. I am militantly for it. Let us get some circulating fluid into this exsanguinated patient. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have swallowed a lot of convictions in order to vote for much emergency legislation our President felt necessary.

I have voted on the floor of the House for practically two thirds of this bill and sought constructively in our committee meetings and hearings to make the remedies reach back to the benefit of our farmers, so you can see I am willing to give our President a chance under most any farm bill, but when the "elder statesmen" project into a farm bill inflation amendment no. 85 I say I cannot go along, for it interferes with my old-fashioned United Presbyterian conscience.

No such monetary amendment belongs in a farm bill—politics placed it there and the farmers suffer and starve where politics thrive.

As to amendment no. 83, the "cost of production", or the "Johnny Simpson amendment", I want to make this observation: Johnny's amendment had no consideration by our Agriculture Committee and was rejected by the framers of this bill, the doctors of philosophy, professors multitudinous, editors galore; yes, even Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, and all who were sympathetic to the election of President Roosevelt wanted none of it but wanted it kept a secret from Johnny.

This amendment is one of about 50 authorizations freely voted the Secretary of Agriculture in this farm bill. Simpson's amendment was put in there either as a polite gesture to Johnny for helpfulness in the late presidential campaign, or because somebody fears Johnny, or somebody wants to fool Johnny's followers.

This Simpson-Einstein-Mordecai amendment no. 83 provides that the Secretary of Agriculture must make an estimate (on any farm commodity) based on this formula:

Estimate the percentage, including carry-over stocks, needed for domestic consumption, then determine the average domestic cost of production and a reasonable profit.

Johnny Simpson comes from out in our great Wheat Belt; yet after 12 years' of service on that Agriculture Committee and after hearing over 1,000 witnesses from the Wheat Belt Johnny hails from, on the various industry problems, on wheat alone, down to this day we could get no general agreement from all these witnesses as to the cost of production, so what can we expect from any Secretary of Agriculture. Only yesterday I talked with one of the leading champions of this cost-of-production amendment—after some discussion with me he reduced his estimates of cost of production from $1.56 to $1.01. This partisan claimed, at first, there were only 5 or 6 kinds and grades of wheat, and when I got through with him I made him admit there were over 20, while the truth is there are probably about 90 different kinds and grades of wheat. Such misinformation or ignorance should have no place in this debate.

The next job the Secretary has, after going through this simple formula of arriving at the cost of production, say, of wheat per bushel, so the Secretary can decide on something a thousand wheat producers could not agree on, is to proclaim this estimate price; it then becomes unlawful for any dealer to purchase from any producer the percentage for domestic consumption at less than the proclaimed cost of production. What is left over can be purchased at any old price.

This percentage problem is equal to the one "Amos 'n' Andy" had confront them when they bought a dairy cow and Andy claimed half the milk—but Amos or the Kingfish said the front end belonged to Andy.

The poor farmer will not even celebrate July 4 as Independence Day—that day is gone forever under this amendment. Communism alone can make it work, with Simpson substituting for Stalin.

Title III, section 8, article I, Constitution provides that Congress (not the President) has power to coin money and regulate the value thereof.

Under this inflation amendment no. 85 it is proposed to authorize the President to use three methods to increase the dollar value of commodities.

First. By increasing Federal Reserve credits by $3,000,000,000.

Second. By issuing up to $3,000,000,000 Treasury notes, not secured by gold but on credit of United States, to buy back Government securities.

Third. By devaluing gold content of dollar up to 50 percent. Fix ratio of silver to gold and provide for unlimited coinage of silver at that ratio.

The President is also authorized to accept silver at 50 cents per ounce up to $200,000,000 in payment of any foreign debt.

I hold that the "elder statesmen" got the tail before the horse with this inflation amendment no. 85.

The problem before the United States as I see it is—

There are 12,000,000 of our fellow citizens out of jobs; there are probably another 10,000,000 of our people very hard pressed to get along. The purpose of this bill is to increase the cost of living to one fifth our population who have either nothing or but very, very little.

On the other hand, we holler like hallelujah about surplus—surplus wheat, surplus cotton, surplus this, or surplus that—one half that problem of surplus arises because one fifth our people cannot buy, hence underconsumption—how can we solve this problem, then? It is the major problem in the United States, and this proposal of inflation does not answer it. Give them work means give them dollars, and dollars are equivalent to "purchasing power"; commodity prices will naturally rise; no artificial stimulants will be needed; the law of supply and demand will obtain; there will be no "hang overs" as there are sure to be under inflation.

Work is the major problem in local, State, and National Government; it is part of our job to help provide it.

Work for self-respecting America is the heroic program that should have the complete cooperation of Government, industry, and every patriotic American who can offer even 1 day's work to one of his countrymen.

Sound banking—sounder bankers help breathe confidence and faith; work breeds self-respect; self-respect means Americans will maintain American ideas and ideals.

The flag is our symbol and signal.

Symbol because wrapped up in its folds is the picture of those old farmers, with their trusty flintlocks—who made history at Lexington and Bunker Hill; a symbol of that 4th of July when the refrain of liberty rang out from Independence Hall; a symbol of victory when Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown; a symbol of the priceless heritage that is ours—bought with travail of soul, with heartthrobs of anguish, with the United States of America's choicest souls, who offered themselves, their all, as the purchase price to start and maintain a great experiment in government. Each of us has his part to play in maintaining that system of government with its three branches so nicely adjusted that even on the crumbling ruins of Old World governments some part of our government is built in their fundamental law. We have these three branches—legislative, executive, judicial.

Today we are met to decide whether a government so conceived and so dedicated can continue to exist.

In times of war our Constitution makes our President Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, but it takes a vote of the Congress to declare war.

Call this emergency an equally serious time compared with war—still the Congress must function, must vote, should never delegate, dodge, or sidetrack its powers and positive duties.

This supreme Constitution—bought at so great a price—provides that—

The Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

The language is clear, the intent unmistakable; he who runs may read.

Imagine a Congress from Washington, Adams, or Jefferson down through our history to Jackson or Lincoln, Cleveland, or Teddy Roosevelt, delegating its power, practically upsetting the theory and foundation of our form of government.

That flag today is a signal to me in all it stands for. It calls upon me for action; the farm problem is not a partisan issue; it can and must be settled under the kind of government we have. I cannot dodge my duty. I cannot be a party to delegating my part in representative government. A quarter of a million citizens sent me here to represent them under our Constitution, not to help weaken it.

I am a part of the Congress of the United States. Our country's Constitution says the Congress must decide—not the President—on standards of weights and measures. I shall keep the faith, stick by the Constitution, keep aloft the Stars and Stripes as my signal, representing the kind of a government I shall vote to maintain by voting against this bill with this inflation amendment. God of our fathers.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARPENTER].

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, we have heard quoted this afternoon the statement of Daniel Webster to the effect that "he who tampers with the currency robs labor of its bread", and which quotation was referred to by President Hoover in the campaign last fall. I should like, therefore, to direct to your attention this excerpt from a speech delivered by Daniel Webster in the United States Senate on the 22d of February 1834.

That is to say, in just such a country as the United States are I have supposed that it was admitted that there are particular and extraordinary advantages in a safe and well-regulated paper currency, because in such a country well-regulated bank paper not only supplies a convenient medium of payments and of exchange, but also, by the expansion of that medium in a reasonable and safe degree, the amount of circulation is kept more nearly commensurate with the constantly increasing amount of property, and an extended capital in the shape of credit comes to the aid of the enterprising and the industrious. It is precisely on this credit, "created by reasonable expansion of the currency" in a new country that men of small capital carry on their business. It is exactly by means of this that industry and enterprise are stimulated. If we were driven back to an exclusively metallic currency, the necessary and inevitable consequence would be that all trade would fall into the hands of large capitalists. This is so plain that no man of reflection can doubt it. I know not, therefore, in what words to express my astonishment when I hear it said that the present measures of government are intended for the good of the many instead of the few, for the benefit of the poor and against the rich; and when I hear it proposed at the same moment to do away with the whole system of credit and place all trade and commerce, therefore, in the hands of those who have adequate capital to carry them on without the use of any credit at all. This, sir, would be dividing society by a precise, distinct, and well-defined line into two classes: First, the small class who have competent capital for trade when trade is out of the question, and, secondly, the vastly numerous class of those whose living must become, in such a state of things, a mere manual occupation, without the use of capital or of any substitute for it.

I referred to this statement of Mr. Webster because I thought it would be illuminating for the House to know what he had said further on this subject and to know that he was really in favor of a "reasonable expansion of the currency." [Applause.]

As I have repeatedly stated, it is now generally recognized that we cannot have permanent prosperity in this country unless the farmer is prosperous—that prosperity, therefore, cannot be restored in this country until the farmer becomes prosperous. It must follow that the farmer cannot become prosperous until he receives an honest price for his products. The present price and the price he has been receiving for the past few years are not honest prices; they are dishonest and deflated prices, which conditions have been going on for so long that he has been reduced to almost abject poverty.

He has been unable to pay his taxes, his interest, his debts, or to pay anything that required cash. The price of farm products up to now has been so low that all the cash money he has seen the past few years are a few pennies. These are not idle words, but have been admitted and readmitted by all those who are familiar with the farmer's condition, stated and restated almost every day here on this floor in Congress, echoed and reechoed throughout the length and breadth of this country, until the courts of the land have stayed the sheriff in his foreclosure proceedings. Every State legislature has granted all the assistance it could, and Congress has passed a law intended to give the farmer a breathing spell for a few years. Incidentally practically every other business in this country is in the same condition as agriculture.

We have in this country the past months been confronted with one emergency after another which has exploded at our feet. We have met them with such actions as seem best, but unless we are able to stop this terrible deflation and increase the price of products all these former emergency measures will have been in vain. We must either have a cheaper dollar—that is, a dollar on a par with the price of the dollar when our debts were created—or all our debts will automatically cancel themselves, and next will go the credit of this Government. We cannot continually drain this credit without replenishing it. Give us a cheaper dollar and nine tenths of our trouble will be over. Taxes will not seem too high, interest and debts can be paid, the old homestead saved, people will have money to spend, jobs will be available, and we will again be able to appreciate our form of government of, for, and by the people and enjoy life as we should.

Those opposed to expansion warn us of the terrible things that will happen by reason thereof. But they could not be any worse than the storm we have been going through and what lies ahead when this deflated balloon hits the ground. As to what method should be followed, many leading economists differ; but the beauty of the bill up for the consideration of Congress, which has the stamp of approval of the President, is that it is bound to succeed, for it provides for all the principal methods of sound and controlled expansion and leaves the administering to the only man in whom the people of this country and the world have confidence—Franklin D. Roosevelt, the President of the United States.

Since the President has taken this country off the gold standard and declared for expansion of the currency, we have begun to see the rays of dawn that betokens a better day and the fulfillment of the new deal.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that I am for this bill with mental and conscientious reservations. I am not frightened, as are the opposition, by the so-called "inflation provisions" of this bill, nor by the talk that we are about to debase the currency. I am more concerned with not debasing American manhood and womanhood. We have today hundreds and thousands of men and women tramps on the highways and byways of this Nation. Once a proud people, they have become tramps because we have not enough money in actual circulation to do the money business. There is not enough money among the people to enable them to employ and utilize the energy of these men and women in necessary and useful work.

This Nation is bankrupt; every State in this Union is bankrupt; the people of the United States as a whole are bankrupt. The public and private debt in this Nation is about $200,000,000,000—the total property in the United States, even at the high values of 1919, was estimated as worth about $146,000,000,000 and is now worth about $70,000,000,000. How are you going to pay $200,000,000,000 with $70,000,000,000? It cannot be done, unless we first put more money into actual circulation—not by doubling it in the hands of a few international bankers and Wall Street racketeers but by putting it in circulation among the people of this Nation. Call that inflation or debasing of the currency, and make the most of it, it will nevertheless be a blessing to the people of our Nation and of the world.

I will ask my conservative friends and colleagues, What is money? What are its purposes and its functions? Money is not gold; it is not silver. Money as such has no intrinsic value; it is a unit of exchange, a measure of values, a common denominator with which we measure the comparative values of commodities; it is a yardstick with which we measure the comparative values of the things produced by the energy of a people. Money is made by law; demonetize gold today and remonetize silver, and gold would be worth less than silver. Of course, the international bankers want the single gold standard, because they can and have monopolized it, to the misery of millions and all but the destruction of this Nation.

The gold standard is the result of a superabundance of ignorance on the part of the former lawmakers of this Nation. Unconsciously and under pressure these lawmakers were gotten under the control and influence of the international bankers. It was the international bankers that originated the phrases "sound money", "flat money", "inflation", and "debasing the currency." These are the phrases behind which the international bankers and Wall Street, the scoundrels that have wrecked this Nation, have found refuge and perpetuated a monetary system that is a disgrace to an intelligent people.

We have heard a great deal on this floor about real money and bank money—credit money. It may be well for us to find out just what credit money—bank money—is as compared with real money. In plain words, credit money or bank money is just hot air—it is make-believe money that does not exist. Bank or credit money is a condition where the banks have on deposit, as they had on January 9, this year, some $42,000,000,000 and only $680,000,000 of actual money with which to pay the $42,000,000,000. The difference between the $42,000,000,000 on deposit and the $680,000,000 of actual money in the banks is credit money or bank money. In other words, bank money or credit money is imaginary money on which the banks draw interest. We talk of the necessity of bank money or credit money, because the bankers, who live upon interest on money that does not exist, have led us to believe that imaginary money is necessary or essential for our mutual welfare. What we need is enough actual money, in actual circulation, to do the Nation's business and less imaginary bank money or credit money.

The trouble with the people of this Nation is that we have had too much bank or credit money and not enough real money. We have had so much bank or credit money that for every dollar in the banks and trust companies of this Nation on January 9, this year, there were $62 standing out on deposit. How could the banks pay $62 with only $1? That is why we had the bank holiday. We have had so much bank or credit money that this Nation has $200,000,000,000 of public and private debts, when there is in actual circulation with which to pay this $200,000,000,000 less than $1,500,000,000. In arriving at this conclusion we are not concerned with the money outside of the United States Treasury that is in foreign countries or that has been lost or destroyed in the 156 years that we as a Nation have printed and coined money; nor yet are we concerned with the money hoarded and locked up by the international bankers, who no longer have confidence in their own banking system. The truth is we have had altogether too much bank or credit money and not enough real money with which to carry on the Nation's business.

The relief attempted to be granted to the farmers in the agricultural-adjustment part of the bill is based on an erroneous assumption of fact. It is assumed that there is an overproduction of agricultural products, when we all ought to know that the trouble is underconsumption—we ought to know that there can be no such thing as an overproduction of agricultural commodities as long as millions are hungry and in want. There seems to be a sort of lunacy which makes intelligent people talk of overproduction and surplus when, in fact, the so-called "surplus" is due to underconsumption. There are, however, hopeful signs that this disease has about dissipated itself, and that in the near future we will be able to approach the causes of this depression—want and starvation—in a rational manner.

This bill, as originally passed by this House, did not make the cost of production the basis of farm relief but fixed the price of agricultural commodities below the cost of production and made that price the maximum as well as the minimum. However, John A. Simpson, the national president of the farmers' union, persuaded the Senate to adopt an amendment giving to the Secretary of Agriculture the power, in his discretion, to give to the farmers the cost of production for that part of their commodities consumed or used within the United States. If the Secretary will use this power, then there is real merit in this part of the bill. I am not concerned so much with the constitutionality of what we do here, neither am I concerned with the power that we give to the Secretary of Agriculture, because the farmers will take care of the Secretary of Agriculture if he does not use this power in the right way, as has been stated here by my friend and colleague from Iowa, who has just told you what they did to a judge in his State.

Again, the agricultural credits provided for in this bill will not meet the hopes, demands, or needs of the farmers. It provides for \$2,000,000,000 tax-exempt, 4-percent interest-bearing bonds, the interest but not the principal to be guaranteed by the Government of the United States. These bonds are, as far as possible, to be exchanged for existing bonds and mortgages. The farmers are to pay from  $4\frac{1}{2}$  to 5 percent interest for the first 5 years and after that an additional sum for the amortization of the loan. The amount of the loans to the farmers is limited to 50 percent of the value of the land and 20 percent of permanent improvements. Very few farmers will be able to qualify under this limitation. In addition, the farmers who are able to qualify will have to buy stock to an amount equal to 5 percent of the amount of the loan. This part of the bill provides rather for relief to the mortgagees and the bondholders of the Federal land and joint-stock banks than to the farmers. It is not altogether a square deal or a new deal to the farmers. If liberally construed it may do some good.

The currency-expansion part of the bill gives to the President of the United States power to expand the currency by $3,000,000,000 by causing to be issued Federal Reserve notes or United States notes with which to purchase bonds or other obligations of the United States Government. But who holds the bonds and other obligations of the United States Government? The large banks; here we have no real currency expansion. We have another case of expanding the currency in the hands of the banks, but not in the hands of the people who need it.

This bill also provides that the President may reduce the gold content 50 percent in our dollar; he may double the value of gold—make two dollars out of one. Again we ask, Who has the gold? Our answer is, the international bankers, the Federal Reserve banks, and a few private individuals. The gold in the United States Treasury does not belong to the Government of the United States. Most of it is held in trust for the holders of the outstanding gold certificates and Federal Reserve and other notes. The Government is the actual owner of only about 142 million of the gold in the United States Treasury. Therefore, we conclude that this kind of expansion of the currency is simply expanding it in the hands of the bankers and money changers, and not in the hands of the people.

However, such expansion may do some good, but it is not the best kind or the most rational expansion. Real expansion would be to furnish money to the people of this Nation through the provisions of the Frazier bill and the Patman bill. Therefore, when I vote for this bill, it will be with mental and conscientious reservations, hoping and knowing that the President of this Nation will use it in the interest of the people of this Nation to the best of his ability. It is not the kind of bill that I had hoped we would give to the President so that he could abruptly end this depression, which, as I stated before, had no business to exist. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, it has been reiterated on this floor many times during the past few weeks that we have $4,000,000,000 of gold in this country, and this is sound money. A short while ago we passed a law making it a crime to use this money. We went even farther than this, and we put this precious metal in a class with bootleg whisky, entailing suitable penalties if you were even found in the possession of gold money. So if an officer now tapped your hip pocket and found a purse of gold, you would be up against the same proposition as if he had found a pint of bootleg whisky. [Laughter.]

For the past 70 years we have not only accepted from Wall Street the interpretation and definition of what is sound money but also the administration of the sound money system in this country, until tonight this country stands closer to the verge of revolution than it ever did in its entire history. No such money oligarchy as the octopus with its belly in Wall Street and its tentacles everywhere sucking the life-blood out of the American people ever cursed a nation. It is useless to talk of a new deal unless and until we have broken the strangle hold of this money power over the economic life of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I no longer have faith in the leadership of big business. I looked with apprehension on the mad orgy of speculation which resulted in the crash of October 1929. I hoped big business knew the limits of safety. They did not know. They squandered billions of our savings over all the world. They squandered other billions at home. They diverted the people's resources from honest investment into dishonest speculation. They used eight billions of the resources of the Federal Reserve banks in stock and bond exploitation. Events have proved that they were dishonest as well as blind. For a profit they bribed the creation of fictitious securities in foreign lands on which to squander the people's money, and then defrauded our Government of the taxes on their illegal gains. Compared with these men as a public enemy, Al Capone was merely the rowdiest boy in a noisy town. Yet these men absolutely control the financial life of this country. They blindly led us into this ruin and they are helpless to get us out. And yet we look to them and their system for guidance in the monetary affairs of this Nation. They are for the gold standard. They are for the sanctity of the currency. They are for sound money. They are the real Government.

Under this regime government in this country for the past 60 years has been a conspiracy between business and politics to plunder the people. If we could blunder out of this disaster with the money power intact and entrenched, it would be like fighting the World War and not winning it. It would be the crowning loss of the most disastrous era in the history of America.

When I read of a Senator of the United States standing before 500 big bankers and brokers of Wall Street and pleading with them to let this Nation live, I could not help thinking of 500 lampposts. I make this statement advisedly, and if it sounds radical I want you to bear in mind that I am voicing the bitter thought burning in the hearts tonight of tens of millions of desperate, distressed, despairing American people.

The real issue before this Congress and before the administration, the question into which all other questions may be resolved, is not these fine-spun technical and constitutional questions that able lawyers discuss here, but that question is whether, through the orderly processes of a national election and through the ordinary procedure of legislative enactment, we can rescue this country from this terrible condition and establish a new deal.

This is the real question. I hope the answer may be "yes", and this hope dictates every vote that I am casting for every one of these administration measures; but if the answer is not "yes", then all I have to say is that I hope I may linger on the scene until I see what the answer is, and I will do so with the assurance that it will be a genuine American answer. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to make these remarks but was stirred to them by things said in debate against this bill, and I, therefore, ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks in the RECORD, which I did intend to make.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, this brings us to the question, What price gold standard? In his great effort at Des Moines—and it impressed me as a great effort, an effort that alarmed the Democratic Party—Mr. Hoover graphically and dramatically painted the dangers threatening the Nation in the spring of 1932. He depicted the country as drifting toward an abyss, into which the whole national structure might topple. He even fixed the time ahead when the crash was to occur, and then, like the hero in the melodrama, he depicted himself as rushing out upon the stage of national action at the psychological moment and saving the Nation. He saved it by saving the gold standard.

Then he reviewed the saving of the gold standard from the vandal hands of the Democratic Party from 1896 down to the present time. But it all served only to raise in my mind the question, If the gold standard had to be saved many more times what would there be left in this country to save?

For 60 years this Nation has preserved and maintained the gold standard, and now the Nation is bankrupt. It is mortgaged for more than it would bring under the hammer. We slave in vain to pay the interest. The principal can never be paid. The fact may as well be looked in the face. The people of the United States can never pay, and every move we have made thus far only adds to the volume of the impossible burden. The pending inflation amendment throws the first ray of light over this gloomy picture.

Many causes have contributed to the present economic collapse now prostrating this country. The war debts, over-speculation, overcredit, overgovernment, prohibitive tariffs, the machine, and maybe to some extent overproduction.

But the depression has finally resolved itself into a money famine. Money is now the only thing having any value, and the people have no money. It is too valuable to invest in any other form of property. Like the Kohinoor diamond, it must be locked up in steel vaults.

The inflation amendment to the farm bill is the first legislation proposed since the depression began to afford not only emergency relief but to establish a monetary system to insure against recurrence of this disaster.

The Senate amendment embraces four distinct monetary propositions, and I shall note and briefly comment upon them in the order in which they appear in the amendment. The President is authorized, in his discretion—

First. To authorize the Federal Reserve banks to purchase in the open market, and hold, obligations of the United States in an aggregate sum not to exceed $3,000,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board, in the exercise of the power conferred upon them to prevent undue credit expansion, may very greatly limit or negative any appreciable inflation of the currency under this provision. If this provision shall produce the same lack of results in the way of expansion as have attended the billion-dollar expansion amendment to the home loan bill, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, and the emergency banking legislation of this session of Congress, I shall not be greatly disappointed. The worst condemnation of this provision is that every antiexpansionist is for it.

Second. The second provision in the amendment provides that if the first provision fails to produce the desired expansion of the currency, then the President is authorized to direct the issuance of United States Treasury notes under the Legal Tender Act of February 25, 1862, the Greenback Act, up to the amount of $3,000,000,000, for the retirement of that amount of United States obligations, not the mere holding of such obligations as in the first provision, and for the retirement of such notes at the rate of 4 percent annually, and declaring that said notes shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private.

This is genuine expansion of the currency. If the entire credit structure of the United States must rest upon approximately $4,000,000,000 worth of gold, there is sufficient even on this basis, the basis being 40 percent of gold to 60 percent of Government bonds, to easily sustain this expansion of $3,000,000,000. On the basis of $4,000,000,000 gold locked up in the vaults of the Treasury, we could have a circulating medium of $10,000,000,000 permanently in the hands of the people, whereas we now have something like half that amount of money in existence, but not in circulation.

Third. The third provision authorizes the President to reduce the content of the gold dollar to the extent of 50 percent and to coin silver at such ratio to gold as he may fix and to provide unlimited coinage of both metals at the fixed ratio. I wish that instead of reducing the content of the gold dollar, we were providing for the remonetization of silver at a ratio sustained by the relative ratios of production of these two great money metals of the world; and that ratio of production, and therefore of value, is not now and will not be to exceed 16 ounces of silver to 1 ounce of gold.

Fourth. The fourth provision in the amendment authorizes the President for a period of 6 months to accept silver in payment of foreign debts in an amount not to exceed $200,000,000, at a price not to exceed 50 cents an ounce. I will not go into the details of this provision. I accept it because it has been accepted by all the friends of silver in another body. It will do little, if anything, to stimulate domestic silver production because domestic silver cannot be produced at 50 cents an ounce. It may contribute something to the international rehabilitation of silver. It may contribute something toward betterment of financial and commercial relations with the other nations. It is a minor item in the inflation program. It is both last and least.

So long as we are going to adhere to a metallic standard of value, that standard needs a broader base than is afforded by one metal. Even the free coinage of both metals at a ratio of 16 to 1 would not in many years afford the volume of currency permissible under the inflation amendment to the farm bill, because the silver is not to be had, and it would be inflation based upon the two metals which have been the world's medium of exchange, with silver vastly predominating, since time immemorial.

I mentioned a while ago that the worst condemnation of the first provision of the inflation amendment, the provision authorizing the Federal Reserve banks to speculate in Government securities, was that it was the only provision of the amendment having the support of the deflationists. They are against all the other provisions, but have nothing to offer in place of them. I want to point out one of the features they are against which I have not heard mentioned thus far in the debate.

They are hidden beauties in this inflation amendment. They are treasures not discernible at first glance, pay dirt which has to be uncovered by the editorial pick. According to an editorial criticism I read this morning, one of the hidden treasures of this amendment is that gold bonds may not be payable absolutely or only in gold. I want to read two or three paragraphs of this remarkable editorial, entitled "Bonds Payable in Gold", and comment briefly on them.

I read:

When the Senate passed the inflation bill it left one vital question still in doubt. Are Government bonds, which are promises to pay their face value in gold dollars of specified weight and fineness, to be paid in greenback currency? A number of Senators brought this issue forward, but a motion to clarify the meaning of the Inflation Act was voted down. Hence the question is left to the House.

As the Senate passed the inflation measure it provides that $3,000,000,000 in greenbacks, supported only by the credit of the Government, may be issued and that they shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private.

Note particularly that these Treasury notes are "supported only by the credit of the Government." They are supported only by 120,000,000 honest, industrious, and patriotic people. They are supported only by $400,000,000,000 in fabricated wealth. They are supported only by 4,000,000,000,000 in natural resources. Surely the Israelites whom Moses found worshipping the golden calf were not more blind and idolatrous than the worshipers of the golden dollar.

I read on:

A Senate amendment would have made the proposed new currency legal tender for the settlement of all private debts, regardless of whether they contained clauses requiring payment in gold, but it would have required the Government to pay its bonds in dollars of the present gold value.

So it is all right for the Government to deprive the owner of a private debt of his pound of flesh and make him take a half pound, but the owner of a Government debt is to be placed in a privileged class and get what under this new legislation will amount to 2 pounds of flesh.

The owners of tax-exempt Government bonds ought to be satisfied that they have their money in the only investment now worth anything in this country, and not in farms and homes and factories. Further comment would be wasted on such a patently unjust discrimination in favor of hoarded tax-free wealth.

But the best of this editorial assaying is yet to come. I read again:

The Supreme Court does not appear to have passed directly on this question. Some of its opinions suggest that payment of the gold bonds as specified can be enforced. Others indicate that the broad power of Congress over money would render the gold clause in the bonds inoperative. What the Supreme Court might say on the issue at present is a matter of conjecture. But surely Congress ought not to leave such a vital matter of policy to a decision of the Supreme Court on the question of its constitutionality. It is to be hoped that the House will meet the issue honestly, leaving nothing to conjecture when this measure is sent to the President's desk for signature.

Suddenly the poor rubber-stamp adjunct of the Government set-up known as the "House of Representatives" achieves independence, dignity, and importance. The Senate deliberately decided to do the dishonest thing. The Supreme Court is not to be trusted. The fate of little Eva is in the hands of the House. The humble Representatives of a Nation of people who have no jobs, no bonds, and no money are to be the last refuge of the gold standard.

The Senate has already failed. The cause for the doubt about the Supreme Court is probably to be found in the Legal Tender cases. In the Legal Tender cases the Supreme Court decided that bonds of the United States payable in dollars were payable in whatever forms of currency the Government fiat declared to be dollars at the time of payment, in those cases in depreciated greenback dollars, although at the time the bonds were issued gold and silver were the only forms of currency.

It is true, as pointed out in the editorial, that the exact question at issue—to wit, bonds payable in gold of a fixed weight and fineness, as gold contracts now read—was not an issue and was not decided in the Legal Tender cases. But the Supreme Court may be a growing organism. It may be in step with the times and responsive to the needs for a new deal. So the question is, What will the House do for the poor gold-bond holders of America?

My answer is that the poor bondholders of America will have to take potluck with the rest of the people who have to pay these $20,000,000,000 of bonds and three quarters of a billion dollars annual interest on them. No favorites can be played in a new deal.

Only one question has been raised in debate about the inflation amendment which gives me any trouble. The question to which I refer is how this new money shall be put in circulation and in the hands of the people. It is pointed out by the opponents of this legislation that only $200,000,000 were issued by the national banks of the country under the billion-dollar expansion amendment to the home loan bill passed by the last Congress, and that only 40 millions have been issued under the emergency banking legislation passed by this Congress, although the Federal Reserve banks were authorized under it to issue money based even on promissory notes, and that perhaps the greater part or all these comparatively small issues have been locked up in the banks to strengthen their cash reserves, and thus resulting in no inflation of the circulating medium.

It has also been pointed out that of the two billion and odd dollars put out by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, more than three fourths of it has gone into the banks to pay corporate debts and remains there, and that nothing put out by the Federal Reserve System through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has added materially to the volume of money in circulation. Nothing seems to make money circulate. The opponents of this amendment suggest nothing.

The only method I can see whereby money can be put in circulation and in the hands of the people to stimulate employment and buying power and start an upward spiral is an enormous national public-works program, and I do not mean by that $2,000,000,000. It should be $5,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000, and it should be paid for not by additions to the already crushing bond load of the country but by non-interest-bearing notes of the United States, receivable for all debts, public and private. It is said that a national construction program is to be, and, as I see it, must be, a part of the completed program. If the great expansion of the currency and a great national public-works program do not turn the tide, we will know then that it is beyond the power of government to turn it. Out of all the welter of proposals, of remedies flooding the Congress, these two propositions shape up clearly in my mind.

I am not worrying about what the President will do with the monetary power conferred upon him, although I realize that in passing this measure Congress has shot its bolt and is through. If I may use the expression in this connection, I have come to the conclusion that the Presidential bite is much worse than its bark. The President tells you with a smile that this is not going to hurt a bit; but when he hits, it is a knockout. The program is being put over, a program which involves a material reorganization of the Federal Government and a material reorganization of the entire economic structure of the country. No such program has been attempted in American history, because never before has this country been confronted with such an emergency.

It is more important now that we should put over the program and do the things that the masses of the people want done than that all these things should prove sound after they are done. It is in our hands to restore confidence in government, in its responsiveness to the will of the people, and that is what we want in this country, more even than confidence in banks or bankers.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, you have heard reference here today to all the ancient philosophers from the Chinese, Meneus, to Solon, the codifier of the laws of Greece, on down to Captain Kidd, and probably Martin Luther. However, I am afraid a great deal has been said that has not been crystalized into the thought that is in the minds of the people back home.

I have not heard here what I had hoped to hear, particularly from my side of the House. It is known everywhere that I am and all my life have been a stalwart Republican. I so expressed myself on the floor of this House many years ago. I am a Republican and expect to continue Republican, but there are times when leadership ought to define something to take the place of a bill like this alleged iniquitous measure that you are about to put through, and which I am going to help enact. I am going to help put it through because we have nothing better, and I am not afraid of the result of its administration.

You may believe because I am from Pennsylvania that we only think of gold and talk in terms of the gold standard, because my State furnishes a large part of the income tax.

If you will let your minds go back to 1907, you will recall very clearly that the country was wrecked and ruined because we did not have enough currency, and we passed the Vreeland bill for $500,000,000, but, as you know, it was too late to get it distributed. Then we passed the Aldrich bill. Today we have something else, but for the same purpose. The only phase of the measure that seems to be in controversy relates to what is termed "inflation." We do not know what they called paper money during the Revolutionary War, but it seems Robert Morris got through with it, as did Abraham Lincoln during and after the Civil War. There was depreciation, but there was reason for that. Following the Revolutionary War we were poor and possessed limited resources. At the end of the Civil War both North and South were exhausted, with the best men produced throughout modern civilization, North and South, a sacrifice. We had spent over $4,000,000,000 and owed practically every nation in the world, and yet in 14 years after the close of the Civil War specie payment was resumed.

Since then the Nation has increased a hundred times in wealth, has half the gold of the world, and all the world is indebted to us. Therefore, whatever this Government issues in the shape of money, it is strong enough to redeem it. I would as soon see the "inflation" applied by paying the soldiers the balance of their bonus, and it may be the President intends doing it that way.

My reason for voting for the measure is to help restore prosperous industrial conditions, with work for labor and prices for the farmer, thus ending the unhappy economic conditions which stare us all in the face, with no promise of relief from any other source.

Finally, this whole matter resolves itself into a question of trusting this vast power into the hands of the President and his advisors. I know the President and have faith that he is honest and able and will not be "hooked" by any crooked European diplomacy; the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. William H. Woodin, is a Pennsylvanian and from early life has been an outstanding leader as a great manufacturer and financier. He can be relied upon, because he is honest and able. Secretary of State Cordell Hull, who spent much of his life in the House and the Senate and whom most of us know intimately, has the right kind of experience, and with Mr. Woodin will render great service to the President. And there are other men of ability and trustworthiness in the Cabinet, but these three men I do not hesitate to pin my faith to and trust for results that will quickly bring the Nation back to the highway of prosperity, with a "controlled inflation" doing no harm but returning a blessing to every manufacturer, worker, farmer, and all men who carry mortgages or indebtedness.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for me to understand how my colleagues can fail to support this bill. I believe it is one of the most constructive measures the President has recommended. It is common information that about the only thing that is scarce in America is money. We have a surplus of almost everything, and yet under our system of finance we find ourselves utterly without a medium of exchange adequate to carry on trade and industry.

My friends, the only way to bring about reestablishment of trade and industry in our Nation is to put sufficient money in circulation throughout the country to reestablish credit.

I believe that the next constructive measure which should be enacted by Congress is the making of deposits in banks secure. You may call it deposits insurance or you may call it a deposit-guarantee law. With this currency-expansion measure and the bank-deposits guarantee measure enacted the people will have confidence in their banks, confidence in the financial system, and it will quicken trade and industry. These two measures, if enacted, will reestablish confidence in the minds of the American people and our other difficulties, in a way, will take care of themselves. We have commanded our citizens, under penalty of law, to put their gold and currency back in the banks. Therefore we should enact legislation which would make bank deposits just as safe as Postal Savings deposits. I favor the amendment before us for expansion of the currency, and regret that I have not time to further discuss it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield one half minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I expect to vote for this amendment and for the agricultural bill when amended, with the hope that it may do much good for the American people through its passage. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, first of all let me express my appreciation for the patience of all the Members who have remained here 7 hours today during this debate. Seven continuous hours of debate is naturally fatiguing, and I am reluctant to trespass on your time at 7 o'clock in the evening. I am as reluctant to say anything as was Jim Brown who was apprehended for stealing chickens, in spite of the fact that the chicken coop was locked and barred and guarded by a bulldog. They apprehended Jim in due time and took him before the judge. The judge expressed some curiosity about the purloining of chickens under such difficulties, and said, "Jim, tell me how you got those chickens out of the coop." Jim would not say a word, but the judge imperturbed him to answer. Jim remained silent. Finally he said, "Judge, I'll tell you. If you want to indulge in any rascality, you better stick to the bench where you are familiar." [Laughter.]

Perhaps I ought to stick to subjects with which I am familiar, and I confess my lack of familiarity with inflation. However, I want to leave this thought with which to wind up the debate on the minority side. I suppose this matter of inflation ought to be clear to everyone by this time, after 7 hours of debate, and yet I must confess that I am confused and unconvinced that this measure will do what it is designed to do.

First let us consider the effect of inflation on the consumer, particularly the man who is out of work. Out in Illinois I have a little bakery. I have watched the wheat market. Flour has advanced a dollar a barrel in the last week, along with shortening and yeast and all the ingredients of bread. These commodities have all advanced, because the market is responsive to the inflationary sentiment of the country. If prices of ingredients continue upward, I suppose I must go to the people who are now buying bread at 5 cents a pound from our bakery and say, "I am sorry, but because of inflation it is now necessary to raise the price to two loaves for 15 cents." If 1929 commodity levels are restored, bread may go to 10 cents per pound. How are you going to get away with an answer like that when you still have twelve to thirteen million jobless people in this country? Does it not appear that inflation instead of being an aid to distressed, unemployed people, simply aggravates their distress and misery? This bill does not do anything for them. It does not create a single job. It does not solve the unemployment problem. It does not go to the root of our present acute problem of the jobless army.

You say to me that inflation will make business, develop industrial activity, and thereby create jobs, and that it will make money available to those who need it. Let us see about that.

Yesterday morning there sat in my office the operating vice president of a corporation that has several large plants. He seemed quite discouraged. I said to him:

Why so low in spirit this morning?

His answer was this:

Briefly, we are selling manufactured goods from our accumulated inventory. We have four or five million in cash on hand, and we're not turning a wheel. We have a real problem on our hands, and inflation will not help nor make jobs, because it's not money we need but customers with purchasing power.

Imagine being up against that kind of a problem when you are in business on a large scale and sincerely anxious to restore men to their old jobs in your factory. He, as operating vice president, can see no hope in this bill so far as jobs are concerned, so where does it affect the man without employment who is in dire need of help?

So far as the average citizen is concerned, if he needs and wants money he must go to the bank to get it, and to do so he still needs good collateral. Since most of them have exhausted their collateral long ago, where is the benefit of making two dollars grow where one grew before if the average citizen cannot avail himself of it?

When this session adjourns and I return home and find that the swing of prices is still upward, there will be nothing else to do except to put up prices in line with commodity prices. What a distasteful thing this would be. What a terrible answer to men who are unemployed, to women with gaunt faces, to children suffering from malnutrition and want. Yet what alternative is there under inflation?

Business men are in the nature of things constrained to raise prices as the general price level of commodities rises, because the inspiration for such action is here in this inflationary bill. Tell me where the benefit is in the bill as a matter of hard and practical reality? By this time we ought to be clear on this point; yet here we have had 7 hours of debate, and I am just as much in the air and in doubt about the result of this thing as I was when we started, because a convincing case has not been made on the floor today. [Applause.]

(By unanimous consent Mr. DIRKSEN was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. Speaker, this extension of remarks is not a speech. It was not delivered on the floor of the House, and I say that because I do not wish to have the impression go out to my people in Illinois that this was an impassioned speech delivered in the Chamber, for, as a matter of fact, it is simply an elaborated statement prepared by me in my office as a supplement to the remarks which I did make on the inflation amendment to the Agricultural Relief Act on the floor of the House.

It was my privilege to conclude the debate on that measure for the minority side, but unfortunately there were only 4½ minutes available and the statement which I made in that brief time was manifestly not conclusive and could not in the nature of things be very comprehensive. I am therefore making this statement as a supplement to those remarks, so that my conclusions on the inflation bill might become a matter of record.

Much was said during the general debate about the further usurpation of legislative power by the President through the authority vested in him by the terms of the inflation amendment. Much has been said in the press about a dictatorship and about the supine abdication by Congress of its constitutional prerogatives. Even so ardent a supporter of the President as William Randolph Hearst now inveighs against the President for this seeming usurpation of power. All this railing at Congress for abdicating its power and at the President for usurping such power comes with poor grace. Most of the gentlemen who are now holding up their hands in horror at the prospect of a National Legislature shorn of its legislative power on the most momentous matters failed to utter a word or lift a hand against the notorious economy bill where this usurpation of power began. This bill denies to a veteran the right of judicial review of his case. It denies to a veteran the right to have his case reopened when once disallowed by the Bureau, even though new evidence has been uncovered that might alter the equities of the case. In many other respects this economy bill is drastic and sweeping in its provisions, and yet so many of the distinguished gentlemen who now make a great hue and cry against various pieces of legislation before Congress on the ground that they constitute a violation of the Constitution and an invasion of legislative rights, voted for the economy bill and justified that vote on the broad ground that they were supporting the President.

To argue against usurpation now comes with poor grace. The damage has been done. It started with the economy bill, and the time for lamentation is past. I am happy to reflect that I voted against that bill because every argument in the House on the surrender of constitutional power confirms the propriety of that vote.

In that bill there was approved a general pay reduction of 15 percent for all Federal employees and a drastic scaling down of veterans' benefits. Now we come along with an inflation bill designed to raise prices. From the President's inaugural address I learn that he would immediately address himself to a restoration of purchasing power of the people and to providing jobs for the jobless. I would welcome information as to how the cutting down of wages and the raising of prices will restore purchasing power. To me it seems a further impairment of purchasing power. Anticipating the passage of the inflation bill, prices have moved upstairs and wages have gone into the cellar. How, then, can you expect, through the instrumentality of an inflation bill, to get both wages and prices on the first floor, so that the two will bear something of a normal relationship to each other.

What will inflation do for the 13,000,000 people out of work? Do they derive any benefit from the fact that the stock exchanges are enjoying an orgy of speculation? Does it help them to know that there are 5,000,000- and 6,000,000- and 7,000,000-share days and that the ticker is an hour behind the floor quotations? Many of them—yes, millions of them—are now securing public relief. Inflation will not enlarge the allowance they are now receiving from relief agencies and organizations, but it will skyrocket the prices which they must pay, even for the ordinary necessities of life, so that after awhile the allowances which they now receive will only buy two thirds or perhaps half as much as it did before. The result is a greater aggravation of their distress and their misery, more hunger, more malnutrition, more agony. Let any man point out to me if he can what the mass of jobless can expect from inflation except more grief and more worry.

It is hoped that inflation will make available to business and industry money which they may need to begin or to enlarge operations. As I see it, that is not industry's problem right now. What business is looking for just now is customers with the money to buy its products, and no man has yet set forth any kind of a convincing case to show that industry will benefit by inflation or that it will create a single job.

My interest is in jobs for our unemployed. The program to provide jobs should have headed the procession of legislative proposals messaged to Congress by the President. Instead it comes at the tail end. You can create money with a printing press, but you cannot create wealth with such a piece of machinery. Wealth will be created only by the brain and brawn of the millions who have been idle, lo, these many years, and inflation contains no single promise that they will be restored to work.

To be sure, inflation will raise the price of wheat and corn and aid the farmer, and for that I am sincerely happy; but will the farmer be much better off under this particular type of inflation if the benefit derived is offset by proportionately higher prices for everything that he must buy?

I am not categorically opposed to the principle of inflation at this time, but I am opposed to an inflationary measure that fails to spread its benefits to the great mass of people who are in distress. The Senate amendment which provided for the payment of the soldiers' bonus should have been retained in this measure, for then some of the benefits of inflation would have found their way to all corners of the land and would quickly have been placed in circulation, and thus showered some benefit upon every form of business in the land.

No matter how you approach the question of inflation, it cannot be justified unless it serves to restore purchasing power to the millions of distressed consumers, and this it fails to do.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I was very glad to hear my old friend, former Governor CHRISTIANSON, of Minnesota, state that he expected to support this bill. I know he is thinking of the same thing that I am. About 10 or 12 years ago I went into Minnesota, in the towns of Worthington and Winnebago and Chrystal Lake, and sold hogs for from $300 to $500 apiece. What are they bringing today, Governor?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Three dollars apiece.

Mr. TRUAX. I say to you on the minority side, you may talk about your constitutionality, you may talk about the germaneness of this or that to the bill, but we talk about constitutionality while men are planting revolution in the greatest agricultural State in the world—the State of Iowa. I ask any of you, Were you in their position today, about to be dispossessed from all that you have ever earned, all that you had ever owned, to send your family to the poorhouse or to charity, what would you do? Would you lie down idly or would you pull that judge off the bench as those Iowa farmers did? Is it possible that we shall never open our eyes in this Congress? We talk about constitutionality and about this being germane. Louis XV we heard about this afternoon. When told that his people were starving for lack of bread, he said, "Let them eat grass."

A few hours later his severed head was paraded through the streets by the mob, with grass sticking out of his mouth. A few days ago distressed school teachers in the city of Chicago went to the great bank of Charlie Dawes, a former Vice President of the United States, a man who was loaned $90,000,000 by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They pleaded with him, they talked with him, and what was his answer? He said, "Go to hell." That was his answer. Talk about the money lenders! You may as well do as Shakespeare said:

You may as well go stand upon the beach,
And bid the main flood bate his usual height;
You may as well use question with the wolf,
Why he has made the ewe bleat for the lamb;
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make no noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven;
You may as well do anything most hard,
As seek to soften that (than which what's harder?)
His damnable Shylock's heart.

I say to you that the people of this country and the farmers, unless you give them relief, will take the law into their own hands and they will obtain relief from the crucifixion and plunder of the money lenders of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the pending bill in spite of the fact that I do not think the provision in the bill relating to the inflation of the currency is by any means the best method of handling the situation. I am firmly convinced that the theories advocated by Professor Fisher, of Yale University, and the plan which he has perfected for controlling currency more nearly meets the needs of our people than the inflation feature of this present bill. But since we are not able to vote for a bill based upon the theory of Professor Fisher, and since I believe that this inflation program will tend to accomplish to some degree what a bill formulated upon his theory would, to the last degree I am going to support and vote for this bill.

The time will come when the monetary structure, at least in the payment of domestic debts, will be patterned after and based upon the Fisher theory. Perhaps it is too far advanced for our present day, but sooner or later the men in control of our Government will recognize the fact that of all the speculations which transpire in our country the worst speculation is in the American dollar.

Last July an article appeared in the American Magazine section of the Hearst newspapers, either written by Mr. Robertson, chairman of the board of the Westinghouse Electric Co., or written by someone as a result of an interview with him, in which he set forth facts which were the last word in analyzing the economic condition of the American people. He indicated that in 1929 the estimated wealth of the United States approximated 350 billions of dollars; that the estimated income annually was 90 billions of dollars; that the estimated cost of government was something in the neighborhood of 20 percent of the estimated income. He pointed out that in 1932 the estimated wealth had depreciated in dollars to approximately one half that of 1929; that the estimated income had likewise depreciated to approximately one half of the income of 1929; and that the expenses of government had remained at a fixed figure. While he did not say so, it was apparent that the depreciation in income and wealth was caused by the appreciation in the value of the dollar, and that by reason of that fact the people of the United States, on income of 1932 and assets of 1932 at the dollar value of 1932, actually owed more money than their assets were worth, and that by reason of the fact that when their debts were contracted in 1929 or prior thereto the purchasing power of the dollar was only approximately 50 percent of what it was in 1932, conversely if the purchasing power of the dollar increased the property value of our people decreased in inverse proportion to the appreciation of the purchasing power of the dollar.

The tragic thing in all depressions is that the depression strikes hardest, as a rule, at 95 percent of the people who can least afford to be stricken, and likewise when we go out of the depression into a period of prosperity, and, after all, these terms are relative, those who benefit the most are the 5 percent of the people who need it the least. There is a reason for that which becomes readily apparent if we examine the facts.

The average member of American society who desires to borrow money does so over a term of years, whereas big business, great corporations, high and mighty financiers, if they borrow at all or if they loan, do so only on short-term credit. What is the result? No more concrete example could be found to illustrate the point I desire to make than to say that any man who borrowed money in 1929 and is obliged to repay it in 1932 or 1933 is actually repaying twice what he borrowed. But big business, whether borrowing or loaning, repays and re-loans on such short terms that the fluctuation in the value or purchasing power of the dollar does not concern him because of the short-term credit under which he conducts his business.

This is the ready explanation for the failure of many of the midwestern banks during the last 3½ years. They took in deposits of cheap dollars, loaned out cheap dollars on security that was well worth the amount of the loan when calculated in cheap dollars. But on the maturity dates of the loans, 3 or 4 years hence, the security was worth far less than the amount of the cheap-dollar loans made on it in terms of high-priced dollars, and the net result was that the banks could not liquidate their loans, the depositors who had deposited cheap dollars demanded an equal amount of high-priced dollars, and bank after bank was obliged to close its doors.

How different it would have been and how different it will be some day when we use money as a means of exchange rather than a medium of speculation, because then we will always be trading in, borrowing and loaning, not numbers of dollars but the purchasing power represented by any given number of dollars.

To illustrate my point: Suppose that in 1929 I were in need of a suit of clothing. I met one of my good friends who was more fortunate than I, told him of my plight, and he said he would buy me a suit; we went into a store, I picked out a suit, put it on, and he paid for it. He probably would have paid $75 for the suit. Supposing that instead of telling him at that time that I would pay him back $75, I promised in the near future to buy him a suit of clothing of identical quality, workmanship, and so forth, as soon as I were able. I then found that I could not repay him until 1932, and in that year I did for him exactly what he did for me—went to the same store and procured for him a suit of clothing identical in all respects as to material, workmanship, and so forth, to the one which he had procured for me, only I paid $30 instead of $75. Allowing a fair return or forbearance by way of interest for his being deprived of the use of his money, have not I, in fact, actually repaid everything that I secured from my friend? Or, let the conditions be reversed: If, in 1932, I secured the suit from my friend and he paid $30 for it, and it is 1935 before I am able to make return, during which time the purchasing power of the dollar has depreciated 50 percent, we know that in such a situation the value in dollars of the clothing I am to return to him will have appreciated at least 50 percent. Is it fair that I should pay him $30 in 1935 when the best he could hope to do would perhaps be to buy a coat and vest, or maybe only a coat, of a suit of clothes similar to that which he procured for me? This is a concrete example of that which has happened to the American people, and likewise that is what has happened in every panic from the day of the first one to this day.

Congress has power under the Constitution to control the value of money, that power being given in the section of the Constitution which reads as follows:

Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

It is significant that in this one clause, the first part relating to money and the second to weights and measures, that in the one instance the framers of the Constitution have used the word "regulate" with respect to money and the word "fix" with respect to weights and measures. It is obvious they intended that there should not be a fixed monetary standard so inflexible and so unchanging that would permit the tremendous amount of speculation that has taken place. And how ridiculous it is that of all the things we need the least, money is the one thing to which we attempt to give an arbitrary value by law.

Under our system a man with $5,000,000 acquired in a period of prosperity can, by judicious investment, in time of panic increase his fortune 2 or 3 times. On the other hand, the man who has acquired a considerable sum of money in a period of depression and keeps it in coin of the realm may easily see it dwindle to one half the value of that which it had at the time of its acquisition.

That is the one reason I am supporting this bill. The President may not exercise the powers given him. He probably will not have to, for the money changers, living in daily fear of having their monetary wealth depreciated to a point that it may be worth only 50 percent of its present value, will be very eager, indeed, to put it into circulation with an agreement from someone to repay in kind.

Just an observation or two as to one or two remarks which have been made by previous speakers. It is most interesting to me and, in fact, quite humorous to hear the very able gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] tell you ladies and gentlemen of the House today that even the pendency of this measure before this body has so affected business that no manufacturer will today buy any raw materials because of fear as to what will happen in the event of the passage of this bill. I imagine the gentleman could not so do, but I am quite sure it would be very enlightening if he could tell us how much raw materials the manufacturers, to which he refers, purchased in the last 2 years of the administration of President Hoover, and that at a time when there was no inflation bill before Congress or even thought of. I am sure that his statement, if he could give us one, would make the argument which he has offered appear most absurd.

Another gentleman on the Republican side, in a most forceful argument, said that this bill was not properly before the House, since it was tacked as an amendment to the agriculture bill in the Senate and made the point, on constitutional grounds, that this bill should have originated in the House. He went so far as to say that by reason of the fact that this bill should have originated in the House and did not, he was fearful that it would not be sustained by the Supreme Court, and he concluded his remarks by saying that there was a day when the Constitution meant something in this House but apparently it meant nothing now.

I am sure the gentleman knows his Constitution better than do I, but there are several provisions of the Constitution which I believe the Members of this House are adhering to strictly in voting upon this bill now, without regard to the constitutional question raised by the gentlemen, because the question he raised pales into insignificance as compared to our constitutional duties under one or two other sections thereof. The first clause in the grant of powers to Congress imposes on this body the duty of providing for the general welfare of the United States. In fact, that suggestion was of such importance to the framers of the Constitution that it was included, in identical words, in the preamble to the Constitution. Therefore, having in mind that of all the legislation that has come before this body during this session this is of paramount importance to the general welfare of the people of the United States, no man dare say that we have forgotten our constitutional oaths, even though we concede for the sake of argument that the gentleman be right in his contention that the inflation portion of this bill should have originated in the House. I would say to the gentleman that to quibble over the place from whence this bill should originate through some constitutional provision, in view of the injunction of the Constitution upon us to provide for the general welfare of the people of the United States, while men, women, and children are on the verge of starvation and many actually are starving and destitute, seems to me to be more of a violation of the Constitution than the course that is being pursued here in attempting to enact this bill into law.

Other constitutional grounds have been urged against the inflation section of this bill. Some have said that the Supreme Court of the United States will not sustain the delegation of power given to the President herein. I am not fearful of that. I am inclined to believe that in the last 10 years the Supreme Court has come to recognize the fact that the decisions of that Court must not be based on hidebound precedent which has outlived its usefulness, but must flee from precedents to facts and changing conditions, and must therefore keep its decisions up to date and in conformity with the needs of the people in the time in which we live. We are given power to regulate the value of money; we are enjoined with the duty of providing for the general welfare; and under the omnibus clause of the Constitution wherein Congress is granted the power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers delegated; I am sure that under these three provisions of that great document none need have fear that the Supreme Court will overturn the act of this Congress in the passage of this bill.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, 4 minutes, to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WEST].

Mr. WEST of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, during the course of this debate a great deal has been said about the devastating and distressing consequences of monetary inflation in Germany and other European countries in the period following the World War. All that has been said in regard to this uncontrolled inflation of currency is true. Indeed, the picture could even have been painted blacker than it has been.

One night in Berlin during the period of this money crisis in Germany I had what amounted to a hundred thousand dollars' worth of German marks in my hand and did not have enough money to buy an evening meal. A friend of mine in Germany had an insurance policy coming due at the time of this crisis which was worth more than $25,000 in marks and yet he did not have enough purchasing power in that inflated currency to buy an ordinary hat. In another instance a friend of mine held a mortgage worth 20,000 marks, which is normally worth about $5,000. When he wanted to collect the money on that mortgage he found it would cost him more for a postage stamp than the money itself would be worth when he received it. That was when postage stamps in Germany sold for 30,000 marks apiece. During the period of this crisis a friend of mine in Germany sent a letter to me which required more than $4,000 worth of postage stamps to bring it to this country.

When Germany resorted to the system of uncontrolled currency inflation the most direful consequences resulted. Commodity prices and the general level of values in all lines reached the most fantastic heights until finally the entire monetary system of the country was ruined.

But let us not forget that the Germany of the period immediately following the World War is not the United States of America today. With her huge external debt, involving the payment of reparations, a tremendous deficit in the operating expenses of her Government, and the lack of any substantial supply of gold, it was inevitable that the devastating effects of uncontrolled inflation ruined the money system of the country. In our country today we have a tremendous supply of gold, more than 4 billions out of the 11 billions of the world's gold supply. An embargo upon the exportation of this gold to foreign countries has recently been declared. Both internationally and domestically our country is off the gold standard. Furthermore, through the courageous action of our President the Budget of our country has been balanced and the credit of the Government is not only sound, but unimpaired. With these safeguards existing in our country it is entirely possible for us to adopt a policy of controlled expansion of the currency without the slightest danger to the money system of the country.

It must not be forgotten that there is bad inflation, like that employed in Germany, and good inflation, according to sound monetary principles, as those proposed in the measure before us. Accordingly, this proposal can be adopted without any fear of the disastrous results that accompanied inflation in European countries but with every assurance that its use will be an aid in our efforts to restore normal economic activity and improve business conditions.

Throughout this debate today there has also been considerable discussion with respect to the constitutionality of this proposal. My learned colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK], to whose discussions of constitutional law I always listen with great admiration and whose judgment in matters pertaining to constitutional law I respect, has in his very lucid exposition made it appear that this measure is of doubtful or questionable constitutionality. It is indeed true that Congress cannot delegate the legislative function to any other department of the Government. This is widely recognized as fundamental principle of American constitutional law. This does not mean, however, that the powers which Congress has a right to exercise cannot be embodied in an act authorizing an administrative agency to put them into effect, in accordance with law, upon the determination of certain facts or conditions. In the case of Wayman against Southard, in 1825, Chief Justice Marshall said:

It will not be contended that Congress can delegate to the courts or to any other tribunal powers which are strictly or exclusively legislative. But Congress may certainly delegate to others powers which the Legislature may rightfully exercise itself.

In American constitutional law it is entirely clear that the establishment of principles or rules of legal conduct is the essential function of Congress. It is equally clear that this power itself cannot be delegated. But the power to put rules into effect and apply principles, once these are established by Congress, to facts or conditions as they may arise can be vested by Congress in some other governmental agency or department or executive official notwithstanding the constitutional prohibition against the delegation of legislative power.

In the Tariff Act of 1890 there was embodied a delegation of authority which was considered by some as an unwarranted surrender of the constitutional power of Congress. By this act, in order to secure certain reciprocal trade agreements with countries producing certain specified commodities, it was declared that the free importation of such goods therein provided for should be suspended whenever the President was satisfied that the exporting countries were imposing duties upon American products which were reciprocally unequal and unreasonable.

When it was determined that these particular circumstances existed, it was provided that certain duties specified should be imposed upon the goods that were named in the act. This provision was attacked on the ground that it was a delegation of legislative authority to the President, but the Supreme Court in the case of Field against Clark refused to accept this view. In this opinion the Court declared:

* * * Legislative power was exercised when Congress declared that the suspension should take effect upon a named contingency. What the President was required to do was simply in execution of the act of Congress. It was not the making of law. He was the mere agent of the law-making department to ascertain and declare the event upon which its expressed will was to take effect. It was a part of the law itself as it left the hands of Congress that the provisions, full and complete in themselves, permitting the free introduction of certain commodities from particular countries, should be suspended, in a given contingency, and that in case of such suspension certain duties should be imposed.

In this notable case the whole subject of legislative delegation of power to an administrative officer was thoroughly examined and significantly upheld. In accordance with the principle established in this opinion, it is constitutional for Congress to enact legislation with a provision either that its operation shall go into effect or be suspended upon the existence of specified conditions which are to be ascertained by an administrative agency. As the Court said in the case of Field against Clark, quoting from a decision of the Ohio Supreme Court in the case of C. W. & Z. Railroad Co. against Commissioners:

The true distinction * * * is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first cannot be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made.

Instead of being of questionable constitutionality, the provisions of this act are so plainly in accord with established principles of American constitutional law respecting the delegation of power that there is no doubt in my mind about the constitutionality of this act. As a matter of fact the Supreme Court has never declared a specific delegation of legislative power to an administrative official unconstitutional when the limits and conditions of such delegation of authority were especially designated. The wise founders of our Government in the establishment of our Constitution made provision for the national emergencies that might confront us. The Supreme Court of this country in the great opinions interpreting its meaning has clearly established the fact that our Constitution can be adapted to the various crises in our country's history. As the great Chief Justice Marshall said in the notable case of McCulloch against Maryland:

We must never forget that it is a constitution we are expounding. * * * This is a constitution intended to endure for ages to come and, consequently, to be adapted to crises of human affairs. To have prescribed the means by which the Government should in all future time execute its powers, would have been to change entirely the character of the instrument and give it the proprieties of a legal code * * * Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited but consist with the letter and the spirit of the Constitution are constitutional.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. West] has expired.

All time has expired.

Under the resolution the previous question is considered as ordered.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, the following general conclusions relate to the general-welfare clause and farm relief:

GENERAL CONCLUSIONS

I. The Convention history of the welfare clause (sec. 8, art. 1) shows it to have been intended as a residuary legislative power.

II. The limitation on its application is indicated in the Virginia Plan as giving Congress the power to legislate in "all those cases to which the separate State is incompetent." This welfare power came as a postscript introduced several weeks after the adoption of the particular powers by the Convention. The particular powers were taken, "corrected, and enlarged" from the Articles of Confederation.

III. The residuary welfare power was found necessary to supply a gap in the sum of the legislative powers of the State and Nation under the Articles of Confederation, the gap embracing those subjects involving interstate causation and effects which were not embraced in the concrete subjects named in the particular powers.

IV. The control of production to balance with the demand, and thus conserve and protect commerce in agriculture and mining, calls for a legislative authority which can deal with interstate causes and effects where the "separate State is incompetent to act."

V. The doubt which has arisen over the interpretation of this clause lies, I have discovered, in a mistranscription of the first two clauses in section 8 of article 1. This mistranscription is obvious and is proven by the original manuscript of the Constitution, preserved by General Washington as President of the Convention.

VI. Taking the particular powers and the general-welfare power together, Congress possesses complete power to legislate on subjects of interstate character, subject, however, to any expressed prohibitions carried in the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, during the discussion of the farming section of this bill on its initiation in this House the right of the Congress under the Constitution to pass such a bill was challenged. I am referring to the remarks of the Honorable JAMES M. BECK, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's ability as well as his forensic background gave uncommon significance to the doubts he expressed. Meanwhile, it is recognized the national exigencies demand the application of remedies if they can be found. Can it be that in the face of these exigencies the fathers in forming the Constitution have left us helpless by denial of all authority to act? I was loath to impute such impotency to our institutions, I confess. I had no thought that the makers of the Constitution had intended to create a gap in the American legislative power; but was convinced that in assigning to the States their share, and to the Nation its share, they fully intended the sum total of their legislative powers should be equal to the country's needs; and should equal the total formerly possessed by the Colonial legislature plus that of the parent British Parliament. Could there be a gap in the legislative power, legislative impotency to act in the interstate community, a situation in which neither the State nor the Nation can act to protect us? Had the fathers designed such a vacuum in our institutions? These were illustrious men, these makers of the Constitution. They displayed much wisdom in their work. Before we pass such a verdict on their work, let us examine it. Let us examine it well.

Mr. Speaker, I shall discuss this document, the Constitution, as a statesman's document. I do not think the right or power of a nation to legislate should be determinable solely in a forum of litigants upon the arguments of their interested advocates. The atmosphere, the setting, even though tempered by the presence of an impartial attorney sitting as a judge, are inadequate to elicit the full meaning of such a document. It was as a statesman's document that it entered the Convention; that it was discussed and developed in the Convention. It was as a statesman's document that it emerged from the Convention. And it was as a statesman's document that it was designed to empower statesmen and lawmakers, in the words of Washington, to legislate for "our prosperity, felicity, safety, perhaps our national existence."

THE VIRGINIA PLAN AND THE WELFARE CLAUSE

Let me trace, in a running fashion, the history of this much misunderstood welfare power.

General Washington, Governor Randolph, Madison, and other distinguished associates, reaching Philadelphia some time before the other delegates to the Convention, prepared a plan for a constitution and a national organization of government. Its preamble read: "Resolved that the Articles of Confederation ought to be so corrected and enlarged as to accomplish the objects proposed by their institution; namely, common defense, security of liberty, and general welfare."

The plan, since known as the "Virginia plan", was a comprehensive one. It embraced full legislative, executive, and judicial organizations. But I shall restrict myself to a discussion of the legislative phase alone.

In defining the legislative power the plan provided that Congress shall—

(1) Enjoy the legislative rights vested in Congress by the Confederation.

(2) Moreover to legislate in all cases to which the separate States are incompetent.

(3) Or in which the harmony of the United States might be interrupted by the exercise of individual legislation.

Later, June 18, the Hamilton plan was presented. Its legislative grant to Congress read—Power to pass all laws whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker, I am adding to my remarks a catalog of the legislative powers contained in the Articles of Confederation. An inspection of these powers when supplemented by the power proposed in the Virginia plan, "to legislate in all cases to which the separate States are incompetent", will show a design to vest in State and National legislatures, taken together, law-making powers equal to the sum total of such powers possessed by the Colonies and Parliament taken together. Otherwise a vacuum, a gap in government, in respect to important subjects of an intercolonial or interstate character, would exist. The quoted clause of the Virginia plan was designed to fill this gap where the "separate State was incompetent" under the Confederation.

In their deliberations on the legislative powers the members proceeded as if the Virginia plan was the agenda of the convention. Since constitutions and laws are both designed to promote the public welfare it may be said that the clause quoted from the Virginia plan was designed to convey an interstate or a general welfare legislative power. To the mind it read:

Congress shall have power to legislate for the public welfare "in all cases to which the separate States are incompetent."

The members began with an enumeration of the particular powers found in the Articles of Confederation. They proposed that this residuary power in interstate matters should be added to them. We shall see that what they finally did was to "correct and enlarge" those particular powers and add a few others, including this power proposed in the Virginia plan, now known as the "general-welfare clause".

WHY WAS THE VIRGINIA PLAN PROPOSED?

To prevent national anarchy Washington declared—

We are descending into the vale of confusion and darkness. The Confederation appears to me to be little more than a shadow and Congress a nugatory body. To me it is a solecism in politics * * * that we should confederate as a nation and yet be afraid to give the rulers of the nation who are the creatures of our own making * * * sufficient powers to order and direct the affairs of the same.

In a letter to Carter he wrote that it was his decided opinion that there is no alternative between the adoption of it (the Constitution) and anarchy.

We note that Washington spoke of the Union as a nation. This feeling began with the Revolution. Patrick Henry at that time declared: "I am not a Virginian. I am an American."

Mr. Speaker, the Colonies did, indeed, comprise a national community and experienced the institutional needs of a national community. Before the Revolution these intercolonial relations and needs were matters for the King and Parliament of Great Britain, which had jurisdiction over all and possessed the full organs of government to effectuate such jurisdiction. The Union under the Confederation lacked powers. It had no executive organization or officers to speak of; no power of taxation to raise revenue.

Their conditions are hard to realize in our day. Mr. Lawson has referred to them in his exhaustive work on the general-welfare clause. I quote:

Dark as was the foreign outlook for America, her domestic situation was worse. Mutual jealousy and antagonism dictated the policy of the States toward each other. Commercial rivalries and unfriendly imposts irritated the feeling of all. They quarreled over their lands, over payment of their debts, and over the apportionment of expense. Massachusetts and New York disputed territory whose inhabitants conceded it to neither. Connecticut and Pennsylvania were at the point of war over Wyoming Valley. The larger States were threatened with violent dismemberment, and the incoherent confederacy became accustomed to the thought of partition into two or three.

The most intolerable part of the situation, however, arose from the inefficiency of the State governments and their failure to afford the ordinary security essential to life and property. Steadily their authority declined and their respectability waned until anarchy threatened the existence of all. Mobs formed frequently and unchecked in nearly every locality. In New Hampshire they closed the courts. They broke into open rebellion in Massachusetts; and when finally dispersed by the militia, selected their leaders to the legislature, where they made the laws which exempted themselves from punishment. In Rhode Island the people succumbed to the fiat-money craze and compelled creditors to accept payment in worthless currency. Pennsylvania forgot its peaceful Quaker traditions and became accustomed to language of violence and scenes of outrage. New Jersey debtors nailed up courthouses. Virginia debtors set fire to them. North Carolina mobs broke up trials. Blood was shed in 1786 over the proposed division of North Carolina; and Sevier, first Governor of the seceding part of the State, was arrested for treason. Electioneering violence and internal ferocious disturbances were common.

It was no mere rivalry between politicians for places of power and profit, which disturbed the peace of the States, and no ordinary party alignment. It was the leveling principle of communism striking at every private property right and at the institutions by which alone private rights and individual security could be maintained. All government was threatened with dissolution.

Certainly Washington's restraint was not failing him when he spoke of "anarchy" and of "descending into the vale of confusion and darkness."

CONVENTION ACTIONS ON WELFARE CLAUSE

Mr. Speaker, let us follow chronologically the stream of thought and action of the Convention through the 3½ months of its history as to the Virginia proposal to accomplish the "common defense * * * and general welfare."

May 29

The introduction of the Virginia plan proposing that Congress have power—to legislate in all cases to which the separate States are incompetent, or in which the harmony of the United States may be interrupted by the exercise of individual legislation. (3 D.H.C. 16.)

July 17

Sherman moved to limit the above proposal in the Virginia plan so as—not to interfere with the government of the individual States in any of the matters of the internal police which respect the governments of such States only, and with which the general welfare of the United States is not concerned. (1 D.H.C. 96.) Rejected.

July 17

Passage of Bedford's resolution, adopting an amended Virginia proposal—

(1) That the National Legislature ought to possess the legislative rights vested in Congress by the Confederation;

(2) and moreover to legislate in all cases for the general interest of the United States;

(3) and also in those to which the States are separately incompetent;

(4) or in which the harmony of the United States may be interrupted by the exercise of individual legislation. (1 D.H.C. 96.)

July 26

In the 2 months of its session the Convention had at length agreed upon 23 resolutions defining the structure and functions of the proposed government. On this date it adopted a motion that these resolutions "for the establishment of a national government be referred to a Committee of Five (Rutledge, Randolph, Gorham, Ellsworth, and Wilson) to prepare and report a constitution conformable thereto." Among these 23 resolutions was the following:

VI. Resolved, That the National Legislature ought to possess the legislative rights vested in Congress by the Confederation, and moreover to legislate in all cases for the general interest of the United States, and also in those to which the States are separately incompetent, or in which the harmony of the United States may be interrupted by the exercise of individual legislation. (Elliot's Debates, vol. 1, 221; 3 D.H.C. 413-414.)

August 6

Report by the above committee of a printed plan of constitution consisting of 23 articles, including the "corrected and enlarged" particular powers taken from the Articles of Confederation, to which was added the commerce clause and the following clause on taxation:

The Legislature of the United States shall have the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises;

The general-welfare subject was not included in this first draft of the Constitution.

August 22

The same Committee of Five (Rutledge) made a supplementary report recommending the following:

(1) And to provide as may become necessary from time to time for the well managing and securing the common property and general interest and welfare of the United States, (2) in such manner as shall not interfere with the governments of individual States in matters which respect only their internal police, or for which their individual authorities may be competent. (1 D.H.C. 144.)

August 31

Committee on Unfinished Portions:

The Convention had acted clause by clause but some parts had been postponed, others substituted, and others had neither been accepted nor rejected. Among the latter was the above "welfare clause" of August 22 proposed by the Committee of Five, also a resolution as to Revolutionary debts adopted by the Convention. On August 31, all these unfinished parts were referred to a Committee of Eleven on unfinished portions consisting of a member from each State.

September 4

Report of Committee of Eleven on unfinished portions:

The Legislature shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States. (Elliot's Debates, p. 283.)

Observe the semicolon after the word "excises."

September 4

Brearily, as Chairman of the Committee of Eleven, read the above clause to the Convention and gave it to the secretary to read a second time. On the same day, without being debated or remarked upon, the clause was adopted "nem. con." (Elliot's Debates, p. 284.)

September 12

The Committee on Style and Revision reported a second draft of Constitution "as revised and arranged"; and members were "furnished with printed copies thereof." (1 D.H.C. 194.)

The printed Convention copy reads:

The Congress * * * shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States. (Journal, p. 356; Elliot's Debates, p. 300.)

Observe again the semicolon after the word "excises."

Thus, the proposal to promote the public welfare in the Virginia plan, giving Congress power to legislate:

In all cases to which the separate States are incompetent—

Becomes a power to—provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

It is submitted that this expresses the same purpose found in the Virginia plan and in all the intermediate actions of the Convention on the subject. It is an affirmative expression of the sense of the Virginia clause.

EVOLUTION AND FINAL FORM OF WELFARE POWER

Mr. Speaker, the Convention is considering the broad subject of the public welfare. The State powers to secure the local welfare already exist. What shall be done to provide for the public welfare when it lies outside of State powers? The Virginia plan says give Congress power to—legislate in all cases to which the separate States are incompetent.

Adopting the Bedford motion, the Convention said give Congress power to—legislate in all cases for the general interests of the United States, and also in those to which the States are separately incompetent.

The report of the Rutledge committee on August 22 said give Congress power to—provide * * * for the common property and general interest and welfare of the United States, * * *

The Brearly committee said give Congress power—to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States;

Does not a common thought run through all these? And is it not that Congress may legislate to meet those "general" (interstate) problems involving the public welfare which may arise in a field beyond the jurisdiction of the separate State. This is the view of our institutions held by the most renowned of American judges, Marshall, who said:

The genius and character of the whole Government seem to be that its action is to be applied to all the external concerns of the Nation and to those internal concerns which affect the States generally, but not to those which are completely within a particular State, which do not affect the other States, * * *. (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheaton, 316.)

ANALYSIS OF CLAUSE

Mr. Speaker, paragraph 1 of section 8 contains three distinct subjects, speaking historically as well as generically: (1) The power to lay taxes, (2) the power to pay debts (including especially Revolutionary debts), (3) the power to provide for the common defense and the general welfare. They are combined by the "Committee on Style and Arrangement" in a single paragraph. But in fact each of these three subjects arose and were disposed of as independent and as unrelated subjects; and received separate discussion and separate treatment in the Convention, whose proceedings I shall refer to as briefly as the detail will permit.

THE POWER TO TAX

The tax clause appears by itself in the first draft of the Constitution of August 6, 1787, as follows:

The * * * shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises. (Elliot, p. 226, 3 D.H.C. 449.)

It terminates with a semicolon and was followed in that draft by the commerce clause, which also terminates with a semicolon like the other power clauses.

The taxation clause was adopted in the above state on August 7 (Elliot, p. 231); and so the paragraph stood on August 22, "debts" and "welfare" subjects not yet in the Constitution; when on this date the Committee of Five reported as to debts as follows (Elliot, p. 256):

(1) That at the end of the first clause there be added the following words: "for payment of the debts and necessary expenses of the United States * * * provided that no law for raising any branch of revenue except what may be specially provided for the payment of interest on debts or loans shall be continued in force for more than — years";—

Here we have the first allocation of the "debts" subject; leaving the paragraph on taxation to read:

Congress shall have power to levy and collect * * * excises for payment of the debts and necessary expenses of the United States * * *;

The report of the Committee of Five then continued as to commerce and interstate welfare:

(2) that the commerce clause include trade with Indians: and that at the end of the 16th clause of the second section of the seventh article, the following words be added:

(3) And to provide as may become necessary from time to time for the well managing and security of the common property and general interest and welfare of the United States in such manner as shall not interfere with the governments of individual States in matters which respect only their internal police or for which their individual authorities may be competent. [Italics supplied.]

Here the "welfare" clause receives on August 22 its first allocation in the Constitution, viz, to the sixteenth clause (now seventeenth) which as thus amended would read:

(3) To make all laws that shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested, by this Constitution, in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof, and to provide as may become necessary from time to time for the well managing and security of the common property and general interest and welfare of the United States in such manner as shall not interfere with the governments of individual States in matters which respect only their internal police or for which their individual authorities may be competent. [Italics supplied.]

And so, Mr. Speaker, the taxation, debts, and welfare subjects stood when on September 12 Dr. Johnson from the Committee on Style and Arrangement reported the second printed draft of the Constitution which disposed of all three of them as follows:

The Congress shall have power to levy and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and the general welfare. (3 D.H.C., p. 724.)

Thus the two different items, (1) relating to "debts" and (3) relating to "welfare", separately allocated by the previous report of the Committee of Five are at last boiled down by the report of the Committee on Style and Arrangement, without change of meaning, to a sentence of 14 words and are placed to follow a semicolon at the end of the taxing clause in the first paragraph. The remaining part of the present paragraph, namely, "but all taxes shall be uniform throughout the United States"; was first proposed and adopted on September 14, 1 day before the adoption of the Constitution as amended; and was also an independent subject separately treated.

Mr. Speaker, it is plain enough that this first paragraph of section 8 represented three different subjects, three separate conclusions and actions of the Convention. To read them as a single thought, as you might read one of the Ten Commandments, is to do violence to the conceptions of the Fathers and to our institutions as well. The proceedings show that the taxing power, as usual, was a subject of bitter controversy, while the discussion of the payment of the debts and depreciated paper of the Revolution excited such utterances as "bloodsuckers who had speculated on the distress of others." Of these three powers only that power relating to the "general welfare" secured from the Convention oft-repeated, constant, and uniform support.

MISTRANSSCRIPTION BY ENROLLING CLERK OF COMMA FOR SEMICOLON

Mr. Speaker, we are not yet done with the history of the "welfare" clause in the Convention. It had to meet an unanticipated accident as so often happens with public-welfare objectives. The Convention's printed draft of the Constitution of September 12, together with the additions and revisions written thereon, was turned over to a copyist for copying in handwriting on parchment for enrollment. He made a mistake. He inserted a comma instead of the semicolon after the word "excises" ending the taxation clause. And now may I continue with this incident by quoting from a dialog with the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate:

Mr. LEWIS. My investigation shows that the comma, following the word "excises" in the engrossment form, was an error; that the original document shows it to be in fact a semicolon. It was a semicolon throughout the whole proceedings and as adopted by the Convention, and only became a comma by a mistranscription.

tion of the copyist who was given the proceedings to copy on parchment.

The CHAIRMAN. What comma? After what word?

Mr. LEWIS. After the word "excises."

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. LEWIS. That was and is a semicolon in all the proceedings of the Convention, and this statement is susceptible of complete proof.

As adopted in the Convention the clause read:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States;"

The semicolon is there.

Now, this [indicating] is a photostat page of the section as it erroneously appears in the engrossed parchment copy of the Constitution.

SEC. 8: Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States; (semicolon).

Observe that the semicolon has disappeared. The copyist, to whom the Constitution as actually adopted in the Convention was referred for copying, has here substituted a comma for a semicolon after "excises."

This is proved by a photostat copy I now hold in my hand of the Convention Constitution as preserved by General Washington himself with his notations. In this original copy of the Constitution we find the semicolon. It reads:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

It is the printed copy of September 12th with the semicolon plainly apparent.

In the Washington copy we find an evidence again of his thoughtful care and illimitable industry, in the full recopying of one of the paragraphs in his own hand.

The question presented is, Shall we take the document of General Washington or of the copyist whose written scroll was most certainly not read by the members signing? The Journal of the Convention not only shows the semicolon but also shows all the changes made in the September printed draft of General Washington. It shows no change as to the semicolon. It also shows (Elliot, p. 317) that the engrossed Constitution was "read" to the Convention; rather than read by its members, before signing. Reading clerks certainly do not pronounce punctuation signs or distinguish commas from semicolons to their auditors.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask: Does the change of the punctuation now, making a semicolon of the comma, change the meaning of the sentence?

Mr. LEWIS. When the paragraph is read as in the correct Washington copy you have a power to lay taxes. It ends with a semicolon, like all the other specific powers. Following it you have a power to pay debts and to provide for the common defense and general welfare, also followed by a semicolon.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. LEWIS. As you read those clauses in section 8 you find that every legislative power clause follows a semicolon attached to the preceding clause.

The CHAIRMAN. But if we take it as it is now printed, a comma, does it follow that the power, for instance, to pay debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare is not equally as great with the power to lay and collect taxes?

Mr. LEWIS. We hear the contention that we cannot use the tax to effectuate "general welfare" objectives. If the clause is disconnected from the tax clause by the semicolon, it is clear then it becomes an independent power under which the lawmaker might proceed by the prescription of justiciable rights and duties, in proper cases as we do, say, under the postal clause.

Mr. Speaker, taken as separate subjects the whole paragraph reads substantively:

Congress shall have power: (1) to levy taxes; (2) to pay debts; (3) to provide for the common defense and the general welfare.

With the semicolon Congress may "provide for the general welfare" not merely through the levying of a tax but by other logical and legitimate methods, e.g., the prescription of justiciable rights and duties generally. It is true that such a power is applicable to but a limited part of the field of legislative subject matter. But when applicable it possesses characteristics and properties like the postal clause, enabling the lawmaker to fully control the subject matter with a view to remedying the evil involved. The breakdown of the principle of competition in farming and coal mining which calls for a limitation of the production of such products, the equal right of competent men to work and to a share of the Nation's employment, all subjects which the separate State is organically unable to encompass, are examples of interstate subjects, the evils of which may run into catastrophes if an equal interstate power to treat them be denied. The commerce clause, extended to its utmost, may only reach production of those articles designed to enter into interstate commerce. But to save the farm and coal-mining industries, their prices must be rationalized; and this objective requires that the totals of their products, which determine prices, must be controlled. Legislative power to effect such control exists in all the leading countries, most of which have taken some action. Such a legislative power unquestionably existed in the sum total of the legislative powers of the colony and parliament taken together. It was to conserve this necessary legislative power that the welfare provision of the Virginia plan and the general-welfare clause was designed.

INTERPRETATION OF COMMA

Mr. Speaker, with the comma substituted for the semicolon the question of the meaning to be given the comma arises. Does it mean "and", its most frequent use? It is so used twice in this very paragraph, and in four other instances in this section. If so read the "welfare" clause represents a distinct power like the tax clause, that is, the meaning of the clause conforms with its history and is the same as with the semicolon.

The presence of the alien comma forced the contractionist who disliked the false power he set up to introduce an interpolation. Story was driven to interpolate the words "in order." In view of the proved intent of the makers of the Constitution that the clause should carry a power, rather than interpolate, would it not be more reasonable to give the meaning "and" to the comma, its common meaning? Then it would read:

Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises (and) to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

Reading the paragraph without the semicolon after the word "excises" (and Jefferson probably never saw it with the semicolon) Thomas Jefferson thought:

They cannot lay taxes for anything they please but only for the common defense and general welfare. * * * They cannot do anything they please for the general welfare but can only lay taxes for that purpose.

And then maintained:

For in the phrase "to lay taxes, to pay the debts and (to) provide for the general welfare" it is a mere question of syntax whether the two last infinitives are governed by the first or are distinct and coordinate powers.

With only the familiar but erroneous print before him it became a question of syntax, of the interrelation of three infinitives. Not having been a member of the Convention, he did not know the truth about the clause. The Journal was not published until 1819, 32 years after the convention; Madison's notes not until 1840, a half century after. With the actual clause before us, the clause as consciously developed and adopted by the Convention, we can raise no such question of syntax or of governing infinitives. There are two, not three infinitives, and they introduced the coordinate powers, "to pay debts, and (to) provide * * * for the general welfare." The debt- and welfare-clause is grammatically separated from the preceding sentence on taxation by a semicolon in the same manner as all the following 17 power clauses are separated from it. And now may I resume my dialog with the Judiciary Committee of the Senate?

Senator WALSH of Montana. If I understand the question of the chairman right, the idea in his mind is that it is equally as well when you put a comma there, it is equally as well set apart from what goes before, as though there was a semicolon there, and if the clause "to provide for the payment of debts and general welfare" is a modification of what precedes, you should not have either a comma or a semicolon.

Mr. LEWIS. Exactly so. If the comma be read to mean "and", as the history of the subject requires, then a distinct legislative power is carried. The erroneous comma is meaningless as a modifier unless you interpolate some phrase like "in order" a meaning which the comma is never used to express.

INTERPOLATION BY CONTRACTIONIST

The CHAIRMAN. The contention is this, as I understand it, that where you have a comma there it is the same as though it read like this:

Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises "in order" to pay the debts.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes. That is the contention that is made by the contractionist.

The CHAIRMAN. "And provide for the common defense and general welfare."

If that were true, then the authority to pay debts, provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States would be limited to the powers given in the first part of the sentence, to wit, to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises. Is that the contention?

Mr. LEWIS. That is the contention and the purpose of the interpolation of the contractionists who would destroy this clause as a power.

Senator WALSH of Montana. As I understand you, Mr. Lewis, you contend it should be construed as though Congress had power to lay and collect taxes, imposts and excises, that Congress shall have the power to pay the debts of the United States, that Congress shall have the power to provide for the common defense and the general welfare of the United States?

The other contention is that Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, imposts and excises "in order" to pay the debts and provide for—

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me to get the last construction you would have to take the comma out. What is the use of the comma?

Story, himself a contractionist, resorted to an interpolation for the purpose of contracting the clause. He, too, was in ignorance of the erroneous comma which had replaced the semicolon. I quote from him:

The reading therefor which will be maintained in these commentaries * * *

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises in order to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." that is for the purpose of paying the public debts and providing for the common defense and general welfare.

INTERPOLATION BY DESTRUCTIONIST

Even this interpolation of Story leaves the "welfare" idea still standing as a legislative objective for which Congress can lay taxes as well as appropriate. The destructionists will have none of his milk-and-water contraction. They argue (Henry St. George Tucker) that as:

It is recognized by all authorities that the taxing power of a government, without special limit or specification, extends only to the execution of the functions or powers of that government.

Hence, as the debts, defense, and welfare clause does not carry legislative powers but is only a preamble introductory to the particular powers, the clause should be regarded as surplusage, merely.

The contractionist would give some meaning to the words "provide for the general welfare." The destructionist would eliminate all meaning. To do so, like the contractionist, he must get rid of the comma by interpolation of the words, "in order." His interpolations cannot stop there; for the idea, "general welfare", still remains as an available objective under the taxing clause to raise corresponding "implied legislative power." Now, how can this power also be removed? Only by interpolation of such additional words as, "in manner following, viz." The clause then would read:

Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, imposts, and excises (in order) to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and the general welfare (in manner following, viz):

To borrow money, etc.

To regulate commerce, etc.

To establish * * * rules of naturalization.

To etc., etc., etc.

A double set of interpolations into the Constitution in order to read out a now most essential power.

But how shall they justify interpolating the words, "in manner following, viz"? By contending that the expression "common defense and general welfare" performs the office of a mere "introductory" or preamble to the powers which follow. What would be the use of the specifications which follow, they ask, when all these powers could be derived from the plenary power "to provide for the common defense and general welfare"? In truth it is clear that as specialized these powers could not be derived from this clause which is residuary only and not truly plenary like the Hamilton proposal, viz, "Congress shall have power to pass all laws whatsoever." But I shall examine this question later.

If all these interpolations and arguments be granted, then what? The effect is to reduce the meaning of the present paragraph to the meaning which it possessed, August 6, in the first draft of the Constitution, when it contained no expressions as to debts, defense, or welfare, and when it read as follows:

Congress "shall have the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises;

"To regulate commerce, etc.

"Etc., etc."

For, if the words, "common defense and general welfare", operate only as "introductory", that is, as a videlicet to the specialized powers, then they add nothing to and take nothing from the taxing clause as it stood on August 6. Taxation, by essential and unavoidable implication, of course, is designed to pay debts and expenditures; so the word "debt" added nothing to the text of August 6 on taxation. In fine, the clause by these interpolations and emendations comes to mean that Congress "may lay taxes to defray the expenses which may be incurred in exercising the specialized powers which follow." I protest that this is not an interpretation of the clause but an elimination of the clause. To what an absurdity it reduces the work of the Convention, which spent much time between August 6 and September 12 in formulating this clause.

THE INTERPOLATORS DISAGREE

Judge Story, in his Commentaries, volume I, section 913, notices this very point about the second interpolation which the destructionist demands. I quote him:

It is not said to "provide for the common defense and general welfare, in manner following, viz," which would be the natural expression to indicate such an intention. But it stands entirely disconnected from every subsequent clause, both in sense and punctuation; and is no more a part of them than they are of the power to lay taxes.

The contractionist, Story, must use one interpolation ("in order"); the destructionist must supplement it with a second interpolation ("in manner following, viz"), and "all for the lack of a horseshoe nail", the semicolon which the copyist left out of the enrolled copy of the Constitution. I repeat, it is improbable to the last degree that Story ever saw a correct copy of the clause as adopted. Now, without any semicolon to stand in the way, Story got rid of the expression "common defense and general welfare" by using them as mere words of limitation on the taxing power, but he could only do so by introducing an interpolation. He was willing to do this to get rid of the expression as a grant of an independent power. In order to justify himself, he makes the following misleading statement, than which I am constrained to say there has never been a more mistaken statement in all the works of reputable juris-consults. He says (sec. 909):

If the clause is construed to be an independent and substantive grant of power, it not only renders wholly unimportant and unnecessary the subsequent enumeration of specific powers but it plainly extends far beyond them and creates a general authority in Congress to pass all laws which they may deem for the common defense and general welfare. Under such circumstances the Constitution would practically create an unlimited national government.

"An unlimited national government" is what Hamilton proposed with a grant of power to Congress "to pass all laws whatsoever." This is "stump" talk, wholly unworthy of the commentator.

It contains two vital misstatements:

First, that if the welfare clause be a power then the specific or concrete powers are unnecessary and unimportant.

Second, that an unlimited national government would result. I shall discuss them in order.

WELFARE CLAUSE NOT A PREAMBLE TO PARTICULAR POWERS

Mr. Speaker, why this enumeration, long detailed enumeration of 17 particular legislative powers if all such powers are found in an alleged plenary clause, "to provide for the common defense and general welfare"?

I shall amplify the question, giving its argument as well, in the language of Story (sec. 910):

(1) For what purpose could the enumeration of particular powers be inserted if these and all others were meant to be included in the preceding general power?

Answer: The "general welfare" clause was not intended as a substitute for the particular powers. It did not come first. The particular powers were reported and adopted weeks before. It came last. There was no such clause in the first draft of the Constitution presenting the "particular powers", as they were reported to the Convention on August 6, 4 weeks before the "welfare clause." The draft of the welfare clause was not brought in until September 4, and then only as the result of several actions of the convention demanding it or its equivalent. There were the Madison and Pinckney resolutions, of August 18, the report of the Committee of Five (Rutledge) of August 22, the Convention action of August 23. The Journal and proceedings leave no doubt on this point. The "enumerated particular" powers came first, not last. They were nearly all "corrected and enlarged" revisions of like powers in the Articles of Confederation, to which the welfare power was to be added under the Virginia plan. And after 4 weeks came the "welfare clause", certainly not as a preamble to the "particular powers" but as a further enumerated power, and because the "enumerated particulars" were considered insufficient. It came as a residuary grant of power applicable to other Federal subjects, not mentioned among the concrete subjects enumerated, as the country's well-being might, from time to time, demand—

And now I shall examine Story's argument:

Nothing is more natural or common than first to use a general phrase and then to qualify it by a recital of particulars.

But it has been shown that the "general phrase" in this case was not used first but came into the Constitution 4 weeks after the report and adoption of the particulars. It was in fact a postscript to the other powers, and (about) the last to be adopted. In its first appearance, August 22, in the Rutledge report it was assigned not to the first paragraph, containing the power of taxation, but "at the end of the sixteenth clause." The chronology of the clause and its history in the Convention discountenance the "introductory" or preamble function, which degrades it into a euphemistic tail to the taxation power. And as to the "enumeration of particulars", the admittedly insufficient Articles of Confederation clearly shows their place of origin. There are few new subjects added by the particular powers to the articles outside of taxation and control of commerce. What the convention did was to put teeth into these old powers. I append them to my remarks for comparison.

WHY THEN THE PARTICULAR POWERS?

And now I shall consider the general question, viz, "For what purpose the particulars?" Says Story:

But an idea of an enumeration of particulars which neither explain nor qualify the general meaning, and can have no other effect than to confound and mislead, is an absurdity, which no one ought to charge on the enlightened authors of the Constitution. It would be to charge them either with premeditated folly or premeditated fraud.

How could the "enumeration of particulars" be called upon to "explain or qualify" the general meaning of something then unborn. We have seen that the welfare clause was 4 weeks younger than the "particular powers." That is it came as a postscript to the particular powers and was first allocated to follow them all at the end of the section.

Again, he asks—

For what purpose these particular powers, if they are included in the defense and welfare clause?

Mr. Speaker, the answer is that there were natural, even peremptory reasons. Of current subjects of legislation they had experience, and this experience indicated particular ways in which they wished such current problems to be handled. They wished to limit the discretion of Congress in dealing with them; or they wished to place limitations on the States. In order to state these limitations such subjects had to be particularized.

No one will deny that the words "common defense" carry the military powers. Acting under this clause alone the military powers could be exerted by Congress without any of the qualifications prescribed. But the Convention designed otherwise. Congress should be given the military power, but withal Congress must exert it in a particular way. To state the qualification it was necessary to specify the military subject, for example, Congress shall have power—

To raise and support armies.

However—

But no [such] appropriation * * * shall be for a longer term than 2 years.

Again, Congress shall have power—

To provide and maintain a Navy.

But—

No State shall without the consent of Congress * * * keep troops or ships of war in time of peace.

Observe that the National Congress could provide troops and Navy at any time. But the States were to be disarmed, except that during war they might arm for the aid of the Nation or in self-defense. It is doubtful whether Congress under the power to act for the "common defense" alone could have constitutionally imposed such peace-time disarmament upon the States. Hence, the special treatment and qualifications in reference to the "common defense" power.

Again, the power to provide for the "general welfare" certainly would include legislative authority to regulate interstate and foreign commerce. Acting under this clause Congress could have regulated interstate commerce without any qualification. The Convention concluded Congress should exert the power, but should exert it subject to particular limitations. So we find this power particularized and the limitations stated. Thus:

Congress shall have power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce.

But in doing so it—

Shall give no preference to the ports of one State over those of another, etc.

Shall pass no law prohibiting immigration or emigration before 1808.

Shall lay no tax or duty * * * on articles exported from any State.

No State shall * * * lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports.

Again, Congress may—

Coin money [and] regulate the value thereof.

But—

No State shall coin money, emit bills of credit, or make anything but gold or silver coin a tender in payment of debts.

Under this alleged plenary clause Congress could have issued money whether paper or coin. The sad experience with the continental paper money doubtless induced the restriction. But the States must also be restrained, and so the direct prohibition on them against the issue of any kind of money. Experience has shown that had the States retained this power, a successful national currency would have been impossible.

Under the general-welfare clause, taken alone, Congress might have imposed duties on exports, as it does on imports. The Convention did not desire this. Again the States must logically be restrained from levying duties on imports and exports. If the limitation on Congress as to exports were not imposed, its power might be abused; if the restraint on the States as to imports and exports were lacking, the power of Congress over interstate commerce might be frustrated.

WHAT ABOUT FUTURE PROBLEMS?

Mr. Speaker, considering the then known concrete subjects, we see how natural it was to place limitations or qualifications on the national or the State lawmaker, or even upon both. This would be natural enough as to existing social or property subjects of which they had had experience. They knew these subjects. Their experience would suggest the qualifications.

But what of subjects yet unborn, subjects unforeseeable, problems inevitable in the life of a Nation which they planned to live through the centuries? Of these they could only know that they must arise. What particular limitations, if any were desirable, on the power of Congress with respect to them, they could not divine. What of these? Should statesmen ignore them? Here are a few of the many such with which Congress has already found it necessary to deal: Antilottery legislation, the narcotic evil, phosphorous poisoning, contagious diseases, pests, food adulteration.

Of the evils which are afflicting us now they could have had no prescience; for our industrial system was then unborn. The break-down, in farming and mining, of the regulating principle of competition, the monopoly control of local services through general holding companies which mock State laws, the need of blue-sky laws to protect honesty property—could they foresee just what limitations they should place on the legislative power which should have to deal with the above problems, or with industrial break-downs, present unemployment, agriculture, or mining stabilization? They could not foresee what the desirable limitations might be; and so rather than leave a gap in the legislative power and leave a nation helpless under its constitution they conferred the power, subject to those general prohibitions provided elsewhere in the instrument. This is not a new thought I am presenting—I quote from the Federalist (no. 34):

Constitutions of government are not to be framed upon a calculation of existing exigencies; but on a combination of these with the probable exigencies of ages, according to the natural and tried course of human affairs. There ought to be a capacity to provide for future contingencies as they may happen, * * *

Now, then, to summarize, why are these particular powers specified and others not? The answer is that as to what the Convention could see them moving on the face of the earth it could be specific and wisely qualify the power; but the Convention also had wisdom enough to realize there would be many subjects arising in the future whose nature they could not foresee, as to which they could not be specific, and qualify. For these, to save us from anarchy, they gave the general-welfare power, where the State is organically incompetent to act.

LIMITATIONS; "GENERAL" MEANS "INTERSTATE" IN CONSTITUTION

Mr. Speaker, first let me say that the word "general" in this clause is misinterpreted by the noncritical to mean that under it the Government might do anything. When used in connection with our Government the word "general" has a special meaning. It is a word of limitation and means "not local"—not intrastate, in character.

Implicit in all State or national laws is the idea of the "public welfare" or the "public good." It is easy for a superficial reader to confuse such expressions with the expression "general welfare."

No interpretation of this clause can be intelligent which neglects this special and limited meaning attached to the word "general" when used in connection with the National Government. It is this oversight which accounts for the interpolations of both the contractionist and the destructionist—reacting in terror at the thought that a power to provide for the general welfare meant that Congress could do anything in general, and so would swallow up the powers of the States, they were driven to the interpolations already referred to.

What is meant by the word "general" and "local" is illustrated in the distinctions between interstate and intrastate commerce. The word "interstate" did not come into use until 1845; hence, the use of the word "general." The subject is local in character when its operating cause begins in the State and its controlling effects close within the State as in the case of commerce that moves wholly within State lines. It is "general" in character when its operating cause beginning in one State exerts controlling effects in another State. There is a common-sense agreement as to this among the Fathers. Said Marshall, who sat in the ratifying Convention of Virginia:

LXXVII—175

The Government's "action is to be applied * * * to those internal concerns which affect the States generally, but not to those which are completely within a particular State, which do not affect the other States."

Wilson, a member of the Constitutional Convention:

Whatever object of government is confined in its operation and effect within the bounds of a particular State should be considered as belonging to the government of that State; whatever object of government extends in its operation or effect beyond the bounds of a particular State should be considered as belonging to the Government of the United States.

Jefferson wrote:

The capital and leading object of the Constitution was to leave with the States:

- (1) All authorities which respected their own citizens only.
- (2) To the United States those (authorities) which respected; (a) citizens of foreign (States); (b) or other States.

Certainly they unite on the principle. The State is to act on subjects wholly within its legislative control, the Nation on subjects beyond such control; and no gap was contemplated as beyond the control of either State or national authority.

I have no thought that the clause conveys a power to do all the things that might be thought generally desirable. Congress could not under the welfare clause in my view enact a uniform divorce law for the United States; or legislate as to the law of bills and notes, deeds, mortgages, the whole field of private property. The States can attend to these subjects; they are organically competent in that field. Congress, on the other hand, unless this welfare clause is applicable, would have no power to say that there should be a national language in our country.

Let us go back to the Virginia plan, the mother of the welfare clause.

A statement of "cases in which the separate States are incompetent" certainly does not include cases in which State legislation is merely less desirable. Nor does power to legislate for "the general welfare" imply national power to act in any case of the public welfare. Implicit in the clause is the word "public" it is true. But the clause contemplates two kinds of public welfare, the local and the general, the intrastate and the interstate; in one of which the State is competent, in the other only the General Government. Granted a reasonable observance of this distinction by the national lawmaker, and how could it then be asserted that the exercise of the welfare power must swallow up the State power? Certainly as to the field of interstate welfare the State possesses no power. How then can it be robbed of its power or be swallowed up? But should the field then be left as a vacuum, a gap in government? The Virginia plan was meant to fill this gap, not only as to commerce but as to other fields of interstate causes and effects where the separate States are organically incompetent to act.

If in any act passed the evil to be overcome or the welfare objective to be achieved were in fact only intrastate in their causes and effects, could not the courts declare that fact, as in the Child Labor cases, and refuse to give their support to the act?

Does this national community have a problem before it that concerns the general welfare with which the separate State is incompetent to deal? Then only could it be dealt with under the Virginia plan. Now, in what cases of the public welfare is the separate State organically incompetent? Obviously in those cases which require control of the relations of citizens in more than one State, or of a subject whose controlling relations involve control of the citizens of several States. The control of commerce among the States must have been one, for it was a specified cause in the call for the Convention. Yet it was not specified in the Virginia plan. They must have intended that it should come under the "power to legislate in those cases in which the separate States are incompetent" along with other interstate subjects.

This interstate-welfare power was not in fact a new power. The British Parliament possessed it over our intercolonial relations and could and would have exercised it upon occasion of necessity.

The Convention recognized that just as there was an intrastate commerce and there was an interstate commerce, so also there was an intrastate and an interstate welfare. In the case of commerce, commensurate powers were admittedly left with the States and granted the National Government. A like division of powers is suggested by the Virginia plan for other subjects of the public welfare. Why should the word "general" in the welfare clause be given a different interpretation from the words "among the States" in the commerce clause?

In interstate commerce we see commercial causes and effects which involve persons in more than one State which the States are incompetent to control. In the public general welfare do we not also find causes operating in one State with essential controlling effects in other States, which the separate State is incompetent to control.

Why should a national control restricted to such interstate welfare destroy the State any more than such control of commerce among the States? In this argument I contend for no greater legislative authority. What validity then can be accorded to the statement of Story that:

Under [the welfare clause] the Constitution would practically create an unlimited National Government.

This very essential welfare clause, has been the victim of class antagonism from the beginning. Naturally there will exist in any generation some strong interests which should prefer that the governing authority should have no power it could exert over them. Before the Civil War were some among the slave-owning class who, with other interests, sought to prevent the adoption of the Constitution, and who, far from denying the effectiveness of the welfare clause, argued:

Have they not the power to provide for the general welfare?
 * * * May they not pronounce all slaves free, and will they not be warranted by that power?

Having lost the battle to Washington, whom the majority followed in adopting the Constitution, these interests, changed tactics and started the doctrine that the clause meant nothing at all, that is, nothing not carried in the particular powers. The slavery interest has gone, but other class interests have sprung up in other parts which also prefer to "be let alone."

ILLUSTRATIONS OF APPLICATION

Mr. Speaker, in my view, then, the word "general" in the clause was intended to carry the same limitation as in the Virginia clause, viz, that the power was restricted:

"All cases to which the separate States are incompetent."

This is only to employ the principle affirmed by Wilson, Jefferson, and Marshall.

Let me make some applications. I will take some subjects which are already before the public, say first, the subject of uniform laws on marriage and divorce. With regard to this subject while it certainly involves the public welfare, can it be said that it is a case in which State legislation is incompetent? The marriage laws involve primarily two persons living together within the same State. The causes and effects of such marriage relation commonly are similarly confined within the boundaries of such State.

Another illustration is the child-labor subject. Can it be said that the State legislature is incompetent to consider and act on the welfare of the child? We must trust it to act humanely and wisely; the State Commonwealth must accept its moral responsibility. Unless it could be shown that a great disparity in the employment-age requirement and consequent costs of manufacture resulted, could it be argued that substantial interstate causes and effects were involved?

Now let me make some applications of a positive character, the subject of wheat, for example. The price of wheat is determined at Liverpool, by a complex of production-and-consumption factors world-wide in character. But the price of wheat, if it became chronically inadequate, may wreck a primary and paramount industry of the United States. The causes and effects are obviously interstate in character even within our own country, and beyond all susceptibility of control by State legislation. Control moreover which contemplates restricting the production within the United States and restricting its importations from other countries can be encompassed over such an area only by national authority. Here is a clear case involving the public welfare and in which the State legislature is organically incompetent to act.

A second illustration is found in the coal industry where control of production to balance consumption is indicated as the method of relief. But some twenty-six States are producing coal and are marketing it beyond State boundaries. Who would suggest that a State legislature is competent to act remedially with reference to the coal industry in the United States? Oil is a like example.

A third illustration is equally in point. Society has come to recognize that its most important asset is the employment asset, and that the worker is entitled, in justice, to an equitable share of such employment. But the manufacturing industries, like farming and mining, operate beyond State boundaries and involve such conditions of interstate cause and effect that the legislation of a single State could only work with destructive results. Here again you have a subject where the separate State is not competent to act.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, to be more graphic, let us suppose that we were in a court which had to act on these various subjects. A court can only act through its processes and as far as its processes may reach. Its process may not reach beyond the physical boundaries of its jurisdiction; and so it can act only through process on the person or by proceeding in rem. With respect to child labor, within a State, with respect to the marital relations within the State, the processes of the State court would be effectual. Extend the subject now to cases where the parties interested are scattered through a number of States; and do we not have a case where the State courts are incompetent to act; a case in which if justice is to be done, resort must be given to a tribunal possessing processes which will reach the parties interested over the interstate boundary involved? The makers of the Constitution did not fail to provide for such interstate courts. They left no gap here. Why, then, a gap in the legislative power to provide rules for the courts to apply in this vast field of interstate welfare?

Mr. Speaker, our distinguished colleague, Mr. BECK of Pennsylvania, specifically objected to the "lack of power to deal with agriculture as such, except insofar as its productions go into interstate commerce." He declared that "no one had the audacity to suggest in the Constitutional Convention * * * that there should be a Federal power in respect to" manufacturers or agriculture. Well, I quote in answer. Washington, who presided throughout the Convention, in his very first message to Congress, declared:

The advancement of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures by all proper means will not, I trust, need recommendation;

Both houses made answer, as was the custom in those days. The Senate said:

Agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, forming the basis of the wealth and strength of our Confederate Republic, must be the frequent subject of our deliberation, and shall be advanced by all proper means in our power.

And the House of Representatives declared:

We concur with you in the sentiment that agriculture, commerce, and manufactures are entitled to legislative protection, and that the promotion of science and literature will contribute to the security of a free Government; in the progress of our deliberations we shall not lose sight of objects so worthy of our regards.

Hamilton, a member of the convention, may be quoted directly in answer. In Hamilton's famous report of 1791 on manufacturers we find the following statement which has become classic. Speaking of the phrase, "common defense and general welfare", he said:

The phrase is as comprehensive as any that could have been used. * * * And there seems to be no room for a doubt that whatever concerns the general interests of learning, of agriculture, of manufacturers, and of commerce, are within the sphere of the national councils, as far as regards an application of money.

The only qualification of the generality of the phrase in question which seems to be admissible is this: That the object to which an appropriation of money is to be made must be general, and not local; its operation extending in fact or by possibility, throughout the Union, and not being confined to a particular spot.

Governor Randolph I shall quote in another connection—many other members of the Convention could be quoted in answer. Our most recent commentator on the Constitution, Professor Willoughby (Willoughby on the Constitution of the United States, vol. 1, second edition, p. 104), in the light of over a century's experience since the Hamilton declaration, states:

It scarcely needs be pointed out that a considerable number of the administrative services now carried on by the National Government and maintained by Federal appropriations, depend for their constitutionality wholly upon the power of Congress to authorize the expenditure of public moneys for the promotion of the general welfare of the United States. Among such services which are to a very slight, if any, extent concerned with matters directly connected with the exercise of powers specifically or by implication vested in the Federal Government, may be mentioned the Public Health Service, the Bureau of Education, the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Mines, the Department of Agriculture, with its many bureaus, the Bureau of Fisheries, the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Children's Bureau, the Women's Bureau, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Gallery of Art, the Bureau of American Ethnology, the Astrophysical Observatory, and many of the special services in various of the other administrative departments of the Federal Government.

The drawback is a familiar instrument of Government control in industry which has not been successfully attacked. I discuss it more fully in exhibit C, which I am adding to my remarks.

OPINION AT THE TIME

Mr. Speaker, the enemies who opposed the adoption of the Constitution, whatever their real objections, did not deny that the welfare clause contained a legislative power. It carried so much power, they averred, that the States would be swallowed up. I am quoting from the exhaustive work of Lawson on the General Welfare Clause.

Patrick Henry (p. 187), who opposed:

Have they not the power to provide for the general welfare? May they not think that these call for the abolition of slavery? May they not pronounce all slaves free, and will they not be warranted by that power?

Gerry, of Massachusetts (p. 181), as one of the dozen reasons which constrained him not to sign the Constitution, said that it gave Congress power—to make what laws they may please to call necessary and proper.

Luther Martin, of Maryland, who also refused to sign, declared (p. 185) that the Constitution gave power to Congress to—make what laws they please.

Samuel Adams in the Massachusetts Convention (p. 186) characterized it as a—power * * * to extend to every subject of legislation.

Richard Henry Lee (p. 186) writes:

To judge of what may be the general welfare * * * a power coextensive with every possible object of human legislation.

Mason, of Virginia (p. 187), who nevertheless refused to sign, writing to Jefferson, said:

That Congress should have power to provide for the general welfare I grant. But I wish a clause * * * with regard to all powers not granted that they be retained by the States * * *.

Grayson (p. 187) in Virginia Convention:

They had indefinite power to provide for the general welfare * * *. He thought therefore that there ought to be a bill of rights.

Randolph, of Virginia (p. 188), answering Patrick Henry:

If you mean to have a general government at all, ought it not to be empowered to raise money to pay the debts and advance the prosperity of the United States in the manner that Congress shall think the most eligible?

Williams in the New York Convention (pp. 188-189):

The power is in express words given "to provide for the common defense and the general welfare." It is evident that [Congress] may pass any law which they may think proper.

Lansing in the New York Convention (p. 189) objected to the—concurrent jurisdiction under control of the General Government.

Smith in the New York Convention (p. 189) declared that—there was no limit to the discretion of the [Congress].

Jay, also in the New York Convention (p. 190), who did not object to the power, wrote Washington:

Some of the most unpopular and strong parts of it appeared to me to be the most unexceptionable.

The reasonable meaning of the clause was expressed by Wilson, in the Convention of Pennsylvania, who said:

Whatever object of government is confined in its operation and effect within the bounds of a particular State should be considered as belonging to the government of that State; whatever object of government extends in its operation or effect beyond the bounds of a particular State should be considered as belonging to the Government of the United States.

A significant contemporary circumstance is that, in the face of this opposition to the "unlimited" power imputed to this clause, the Constitution was ratified with the clause included.

Even more significant is the fact that while a number of States in their ratification contended that the Union should be restricted in securing its revenue to "requisition on the States", as under the Articles of Confederation, not one took exception to the general-welfare clause in their resolutions.

What I fear is something that has happened before. There was a time in the history of this Republic when our highest court (and I am referring to the Dred Scott decision) declared that there was no power under the flag of the United States that could deal with the slavery question. We know what happened. That decision made a problem already aggravated a vulnus immedicable. That decision put a sword in every man's hand. Are our lawmakers today entirely sure that we are not facing problems as serious and threatening in character? If we do not have this national welfare power to enact farm legislation; to meet disemployment subjects; to rescue the coal and oil industries, in the same disastrous state; if, where the State is incompetent to act, Congress, too, is made incompetent to act by a destructive interpretation of this welfare clause, then we are the subjects of a vacuum in the American law-making power which may be charged with similar disaster.

The references to "Elliot" are to volume I of Elliot's Debates on the Federal Constitution which reproduces the Official Journal of the Convention, first printed by order of Congress in 1819. The references "D.H.C." are to Documentary History of the Constitution.

EXHIBIT A

IN RE LEGISLATIVE POWERS UNDER ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION	IN RE LEGISLATIVE POWERS UNDER CONSTITUTION
1. Congress not to grant any title of nobility.	No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States.
2. Congress given exclusive power to direct land and naval forces in service of the United States.	Congress to raise and support armies.
3. Congress to have power to build and equip a navy.	Congress to provide and maintain a navy.
4. Congress to agree on number of land forces and to make requisitions from each State for its quota, etc.	Congress to raise and support armies, but no appropriation to be for more than 2 years.
5. Congress to appoint all officers of land and naval forces, and commissioning of officers serving the United States.	States to appoint officers and train militia according to discipline prescribed by Congress.
6. Congress to determine peace and war, etc.	Congress to declare war.
7. Congress to make rules regulating land and naval forces.	Congress to make rules to govern land and naval forces.
8. Congress to establish rules in all cases of capture on land and water and approbation of prizes taken.	Congress to make rules concerning captures on land and water.
9. Congress to grant letters of mark and reprisal in times of peace.	Congress to grant letters of mark and reprisal. No State to grant.
10. Each State to keep a disciplined militia and supplies, etc.	Congress to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, etc.

IN RE LEGISLATIVE POWERS UNDER ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION—
continued

11. Congress to publish Journal monthly, except secret matter.

12. May adjourn to any time within the year and to any place, but not longer than 6 months.

13. Congress shall never engage in war, enter into treaties, coin money, etc., etc., unless nine States assent.

14. Congress may establish courts to try piracy and felonies on the high seas, and to determine appeals in all cases of captures.

15. Congress shall be last resort on appeal in all disputes between two or more States (providing method of considering appeals).

16. Freedom of speech in Congress not to be impeached, etc. Members to be protected from arrest, etc., except for treason, felony, breach of the peace.

17. No person holding office, etc., under United States to accept any present, emolument, office, or title from any king, etc.

18. Congress to receive ambassadors; to enter into treaties and alliances. To name three persons from each State to a list from which interstate court judges shall be drawn.

19. Congress to ascertain sums of money necessary for the service of the United States. Congress to appropriate same "for defraying the public expenses."

20. Congress to borrow money or emit bills of credit, reporting same to the citizenship half yearly, of charges of war.

21. Congress to regulate the trade and management of affairs with the Indians, except that within any State.

22. Congress to regulate the alloy and value of coinage authorized by United States or the States.

23. Congress to have power to fix standards of weights and measures.

23. (a) To establish post offices.

24. Confederation court, mode and procedure, and powers of.

25. Inhabitants of each of the States, etc., entitled to all the privileges and emoluments of free citizens in the several States; freedom of ingress and egress privileges of trade, etc.

26. Officers of land forces raised by States, beneath rank of colonel, to be appointed by State legislatures.

27. No treaty to restrain any State from imposing imposts and duties on foreigners, etc., or from prohibiting the exportation or importation of any goods or commodities.

28. Extradition of criminals between States provided for. Full fact and credit to be given by each State to the records, acts, etc., of other States.

29. No State to send or receive ambassadors.

30. States may not enter into treaties between themselves without consent of Congress.

31. No State to grant title of nobility.

32. No vessel of war to be kept during peace by any State, or body of forces, except as approved by Congress.

IN RE LEGISLATIVE POWERS UNDER CONSTITUTION—continued

Each House shall keep a journal and publish same, except secret matter.

Neither House to adjourn more than 3 days without consent of the other.

No State to enter into any treaty, etc., or grant letters of mark and reprisal.

Congress to punish offenses against the law of nations and crimes on the high seas.

Congress to establish inferior Federal courts. To define appellate jurisdiction, Supreme Court.

Freedom of speech in Congress not to be impeached. Privilege from arrest except for treason, felony, and breach of the peace.

No person holding any office for profit or trust to accept any present or title, etc., without the consent of Congress.

President to appoint and receive ambassadors. No State shall enter into any treaty, etc. To define appellate jurisdiction of Supreme Court.

Congress to have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises.

To borrow money on the credit of the United States.

To regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

To coin money and to regulate the value thereof.

To fix a standard of weights and measures.

To establish post offices and post roads.

Appellate jurisdiction Supreme Court subject to exceptions and regulations of Congress.

Citizens of each State entitled to privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining militia, etc.

No State without consent of Congress to lay any imposts or duties on exports, etc. No State to lay any duty of tonnage. No preference to be given by regulation of commerce or revenue to ports of any one State.

Extradition of criminals found in another State. Full faith and credit to be given by each State to records, etc.

President to appoint and receive ambassadors.

No State without consent of Congress to enter into any agreement or compact with another State or foreign power.

No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States.

No State without consent of Congress to keep troops or ships in time of peace.

IN RE LEGISLATIVE POWERS UNDER ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION—
continued

33. No State to engage in war without the consent of Congress, unless actually invaded, etc.

34. No State to lay any imposts or duties which may interfere with any stipulations in treaties of the United States.

It will be noted that the Articles of Confederation make no provision as to patents, bankruptcies, naturalization, or immigration. And, of course, the articles carried no power of direct taxation or authority to regulate commerce between the States. The order of succession of the items above follows the order found in the Articles of Confederation.

In a hearing before a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee on February 3, 1933, on Senate bill 5267, the following discussion of the "debts" subject took place between Senator Walsh of Montana and myself which may be of interest:

EXHIBIT B

PAY THE DEBTS

Senator WALSH of Montana. I was going to ask you—may I have the attention of the committee—just why should the Convention make a specific provision authorizing Congress to pay the debts of the United States?

Mr. LEWIS. Debts were a very troublesome political subject at the time. Here were a lot of private debts between British and American citizens that had been outlawed by the war but revived by treaty of peace. The State courts were refusing to enforce them. But under the Constitution the Federal courts could. This was a fertile source of antagonism.

These revived debts figured in this debt clause, perhaps not with courthouse logic, but effectively with a lot of debtors who for a dozen years had seemed to be freed from such debts. Here too was the depreciated continental money itself, that had sunk in value almost beyond human recognition. The subject of public debt was a matter of bitter controversy in the Convention. One of the members—I have forgotten his name for the moment—used the expression "bloodthirsty men who had fattened on the distress and misery of others."

Senator WALSH of Montana. Mr. LEWIS, suppose these are all separate. Suppose the correct construction is that Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; that Congress shall have power to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States. Suppose that is correct. Why should the Constitution grant power to Congress to pay the debts of the United States? Now, you spoke about debts being a matter of consequence at that time, but that is taken care of in my estimation by article VI, which provides that all debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation. Of course Congress has not any power to pay private debts. It would have to have a special grant for that, but this takes care of all debts of the United States, and it is only the debts of the United States that are taken care of in this section 8. This does not take care of any debts except the debts of the United States, and that is taken care of in the first clause of article VI, so that does not, in the construction of the language there to pay the debts of the United States—does not that practically refute the contention that it should read "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; Congress shall have power to pay the debts of the United States"? Why on earth should they put in there an independent provision that the Congress shall have power to pay the debts of the United States, when it afterward provides that all these obligations shall be just obligations against the United States.

Mr. LEWIS. The historical explanation will probably be found in the Rutledge report. It carried separate paragraphs on the subject of debts and the subject of general welfare. They were verbose; 14 words in the Constitution take the place of 41 words in the Rutledge report which treated them as two different subjects. One was a special matter outlined in item 1, for taking care of the debts of the United States and paying its expenses from time to time. Another portion was item 3, dealing with this welfare power. The actual report made here, in which the clause now appears, was an answer in the form of a revision of 2 out of 3 different subjects in the Rutledge report.

Postscript: The distinguished and greatly lamented Senator was in error in stating that "debts of the United States [are] taken care of in the first clause of article VI." This article reads as follows:

"All debts contracted and engagements entered into, before the adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation."

Mr. LEWIS. There would, of course, without mention be an implied power to pay debts; in the draft of the Constitution of August 6 it was left to implication. But why leave it to implication alone? Members did not seem satisfied to do so. On August 18 the draft of August 6 being silent, Madison proposed among many others the following powers:

"To secure the payment of the public debt.

"To secure all creditors under the new Constitution from a violation of the public faith when pledged by the authority of the [Congress]." (Elliot Debates, p. 247-248.)

On August 22 Mr. Rutledge of the committee reported the following recommendations:

"(1) That at the end of the first clause (i.e., the tax clause, sec. 8) there be added the following words 'for payment of the debts and necessary expenses of the United States * * * provided that no law for raising any branch of revenue except what may be specially provided for the payment of interest on debts or loans shall be continued in force for more than — years.'" (Elliot Debates, p. 256.)

It is evident that there was a purpose to specify an obligation on Congress to pay its debts. It had not been paying them. Moreover, the debt duty was completely disassociated in the Rutledge report from the power to provide for the general welfare; they were treated as distinct and independent subjects, and were distributed by the report of the committee to different places in the Constitution. So much for the report of the committee. On August 23 the taxing clause in the draft of the Constitution of August 6, by a unanimous vote of the convention, was amended so as to read:

"The [Congress] shall fulfill the engagements and discharge the debts of the United States and shall have the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises." (Elliot Debates, p. 260; 1 D.H.C., p. 150.)

Later, on August 25, Randolph proposed the following:

"And debts contracted and engagements entered into, by or under the authority of Congress, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation." (Elliot Debates, p. 264.)

The Randolph motion was adopted; and was the parent of the first paragraph of article V, as modified later. In fine, the Convention for the first time on August 23 voted that Congress must pay its debts as incurred, and similarly on August 25 that it must respect the debts contracted under the Confederation. These decisions, as revised, found their places respectively in section 8 of article I and the first paragraph of article VI.

It does not seem possible, in the light of the distinct and separate histories attached to these three subjects, taxation, debts, and general welfare so thrown together by different acts and at different times in the history of the Convention to regard them as representing but a single thought. Even if the draftsman had neglected to insert the semicolon after the word "excises" history would have done so.

EXHIBIT C

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF DRAWEACK

That Congress can levy such a tax is quite certain. There have been innumerable instances of acts of Congress designed to protect and assist industry by the imposition of taxes on production and commerce so graduated or differentiated as to effect this object. These instances began with the organization of the Government, and had long preceded it. The question which is alone suggested is as to whether Congress, having levied a tax, can grant a drawback.

The drawback of 99 percent, or in fact a bounty of that amount now granted domestic manufacturers, of the customs duty paid by them on importations of the raw material entering into their manufactures, is a full precedent. This discrimination or bounty in their favor, designed to encourage American industries—that is, "provide for the general welfare"—is not contested as a violation of the Constitution.

The practice of the bounty and drawback goes back to the very foundations of the American Government. Hamilton favored "pecuniary bounties" as a most efficacious means of encouraging manufactures.

If any doubt as to the validity of such legislation has existed, it is answered by the recent decision of the Supreme Court sustaining the flexible provision of the tariff law under which the United States Tariff Commission and the President are empowered to lower or raise tariff rates for "protective purposes."

Bounties to the fishing industry appeared in the very first tariff acts. (See sec. 4, act of 1789, on p. 15, Tariff Acts, 1790 to 1909; also U.S. v. Nickerson, 17 How. 204.) The bounty to fishing was long continued. The drawback system is but another illustration of the bounty. The drawback, an old method in the practice of protection, is found in the act of 1789 and continues to this day. (See Dictionary of Tariff Information, p. 272, as to its use in the different countries.)

The McKinley Tariff Act of October 1, 1890 (par. 231) provided for bounties on sugar "grown" and "produced" within the United States. Some $30,000,000 were paid sugar producers "within the United States" under the bounty provided by the McKinley Act, which remained in operation about 4 years. The validity of the sugar bounty in that act was not passed on by the Supreme Court before its repeal. But that Court did sustain a later act of March 2, 1895, granting a bounty to producers of sugar under the McKinley Act who had complied with its provisions but who had not been paid their bounties at the time the McKinley Act expired.

TAXES MAY BE IMPOSED TO ENCOURAGE DOMESTIC INDUSTRY

By an odd turn in our judicial history, even those doubts about the constitutionality of a protective tariff, which were raised by Daniel Webster, were not disposed of by the Supreme Court until its October term in 1928. In passing on the constitutionality of the flexible provisions of the Tariff Act of 1922, by which the President, in conjunction with the Tariff Commission, is empowered to reduce or increase certain tariff rates, the Supreme Court said:

"It is contended that the only power of Congress in the levying of customs duties is to create revenue and that it is unconstitutional to frame the customs duties with any other view than that of revenue raising. * * * It is enough to point out that the second act adopted by the Congress of the United States July 4, 1789 (ch. 2, 1 Stat. 24), contained the following recital:

"SECTION 1. Whereas it is necessary for the support of government, for the discharge of the debts of the United States, and the encouragement and protection of manufactures, that duties be laid on goods, wares, and merchandises imported."

"In this First Congress sat many members of the Constitutional Convention of 1787. This Court has repeatedly laid down the principle that a contemporaneous legislative exposition of the Constitution when the founders of our Government and framers of our Constitution were actively participating in public affairs long acquiesced in, fixes the construction to be given its provisions.

"J. W. Hampton, Jr., & Co. v. the United States, decided April 9, 1928 (276 U.S. 394)."

The act of 1789, referred to by the Court, not only carries a "bounty" by name to the fishing industry in section 4 but a discriminating drawback in section 5 under the name of a "discount" to American-built ships of 10 percent of the duties on merchandise carried by them. (Tariff Acts, 1789 to 1909, p. 15.)

THE 10-PERCENT TAX ON STATE-BANK CIRCULATION

An important illustration of the power of Congress to discriminate in the imposition of an excise tax is found in the tax of 10 percent imposed on the circulation of private State banks. The tax was not imposed on the similar circulation of the equally private national banks, although the circulation of neither the State nor the national banks was legal tender, but resembled each other perfectly in their exchange characteristics. The Court sustained this discriminatory tax in the celebrated case of Veazie Bank v. Fenno (8 Wall. 533).

OTHER INSTANCES OF LEGISLATIVE DISCRIMINATION

The history of the levy of taxes and the imposition of duties is replete with instances of legislative "welfare" discriminations. Until recently taxes imposed on corporation net incomes were remitted on net incomes derived from foreign sources. In the case of inheritance taxes and income taxes, the rates of the tax are obviously discriminatory. There is a discrimination of 20 percent in our tariff in favor of Cuba. Accident-compensation laws exempt employers whose employees number less than a prescribed number. In fact, it may be said that revenue legislation is not likely to be intelligent or just, which does not discriminate in order to recognize some special "general welfare" considerations in its applications.

Other references to relevant decisions by the courts are as follows:

Oleomargarine case: McCray v. United States (195 U.S. p. 27); Kelly v. Lewellyn (274 Fed. Rep. 108).

Discriminating not unconstitutional: American Sugar Refining Co. v. Louisiana (179 U.S. 89; 45 L.Ed. 102); Williams v. Fears (179 U.S. 270; 45 L.Ed. 186).

(See generally Cooley's Constitutional Lim., p. 825-N-3, 8th ed., 221 U.S. 660; 65 L.Ed. 899.)

Phosphorus matches, Willoughby on the Constitution of the United States (2d ed., vol. 2, p. 674).

Narcotic drugs, Willoughby on the Constitution of the United States (2d ed., vol. 2, p. 674).

Cotton futures, Willoughby on the Constitution of the United States (2d ed., vol. 2, p. 679).

Opium, Willoughby on the Constitution of the United States (2d ed., vol. 2, p. 679).

One cannot read the phosphorus, narcotic, or opium acts and the decisions of the courts in relation thereto without the conviction that Congress may legislate to accomplish certain national "welfare" objectives not specifically named in the Constitution. One naturally expects this, since Congress is authorized by the Constitution "to lay and collect taxes * * * to provide for the general welfare." In the narcotic acts we find a full-fledged prohibition law not distinguishable in its features from the Volstead Act.

Under both the Volstead and the Narcotic Acts the privilege of sale is restricted to a particular class of persons, and the sale itself is permissible only on a doctor's prescription. The decisions of the Supreme Court justify the statement that the welfare clause in the past has always proved sufficient authority for legislation when the "welfare" objective represented a paramount necessity and when the desirability of the legislative restraint was generally admitted and the means employed were not unreasonable.

For a full discussion of the meaning of the "welfare clause" reference is given to the statements of James F. Lawson, Esq., dated February 2, 3, 1933, before the Senate Judiciary Committee on Senate bill 5480. It is believed that these studies will leave the student in little, if any, doubt that the clause in section 8, article I, known as the "general welfare clause", was intended to give Congress a real power.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

PRESIDENT'S DAY

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address made by me before the joint services of 11 congregations on the occasion of the observance of President's Day, April 30, 1933, at the Adas Israel Synagogue, Washington, D.C., at services held in observance of President's Day.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My dear friends, throughout the whole Nation today men and women of all creeds are gathered for a common purpose. Jew and Christian have united to offer special prayers for our President.

The thought behind this observance is to my mind noble in the highest sense of the word. During these days of economic and social distress when starvation and mental torture dominate the world, leadership must be reassured. That reassurance must come from the people themselves.

How significant it is that Jews everywhere were quick to respond to the call for this prayer. The answer is not hard to find. The observance today centers about a venerating appreciation of courage, truth, and freedom, qualities which our President has displayed admirably since he took office.

Jews especially have been quick to appreciate the daring of this leader, realizing that through him we, as a Nation, will speedily attain the living ideals of justice, freedom, and truth.

These three concepts of justice, freedom, and truth are inborn with the traditions of Judaism. The passion of the prophets was justice for the forgotten and the disinherited. The passion for liberty is instinctive with the Jew.

Persecution, which has stalked its tragic way through the pages of Jewish history, has made the Jew keenly sympathetic with the downtrodden and suffering. The passion for liberty, instinctive with the Jew, has earmarked our history from time immemorial. With what a sense of triumph we celebrate the Feast of Passover, in commemoration of our freedom from the bondage of Egypt. With what a glow of victory do we kindle the lights during the Feast of Chanuka, remembering the Maccabean champions of Jewish liberty. With what a sense of reverence in a few weeks, as Jewry has done for thousands of years, will we observe the Feast of Shevuoth, when the law was handed us to preserve for generations yet unborn.

"Pray for the prosperity of the government and for the peace of the land!" was the injunction of the prophet Jeremiah. This morning, as we ask the kindly guidance of the Almighty for the leader of the American people, we unconsciously follow the dictates of Jeremiah and pray, indeed, for the prosperity and peace not only of this land but of the world!

As a people we have ever lent ourselves to the concepts of liberalism and always have championed the cause of peace. The first court was a Jewish court. The laws of the nations of the world are based upon and derived from the laws of the Torah. The aim of Judaism has ever been to realize the ideals of justice, freedom, and truth through the instrumentality of law.

It is impossible to mention justice and freedom without at the same time shuddering because these concepts, so fundamental to civilization, are being violated in Germany today. It is perhaps sorry consolation at this moment to say that no nation can long endure which discriminates against racial, economic, and social differences. Yet history has repeatedly shown this to be a fact. Justice, truth, and freedom must prevail. Whatever is hurtful and destructive to any group, whatever is hurtful and destructive to the Jews, is equally hurtful and destructive to mankind at large.

And yet it is perhaps natural that crime as heinous as the violation of justice should be an outcome of chaos such as the world has witnessed during the past 19 years, with nations warring, mankind disregarded, lands destroyed. How long was it to endure? Were the Jews of Germany destined to be the final straw that broke the camel's back? So that at last an entire world, horrified and aghast that such atrocities could be committed in peace time, frightened at the dissension and mistrust that exists between nations, is making ready to send its emissaries to counsel one with another. This in order to restore some semblance of economic peace to the world. And surely, my friends, when economic peace has been given back to us social peace must follow.

With what pride do we, as Americans, point to the fact that the one who called together the World Economic Conference, which is to take place in June, was the man whom a mighty Nation elected to lead it out of the mire, our own President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Already the wheels toward economic peace have started to turn. Those were important conferences that were held here in Washington last week. They were the first steps toward that ultimate goal, peace among nations, trust among nations, liberty for all.

I anticipate eagerly the activities of the coming world conference. Of one thing I am assured—the crime perpetrated against our brethren in Germany, a crime so insidious as to strike terror into the hearts of all men, will be denounced in such terms that a chastened Germany, nay, a repentant Germany, will quickly try to atone for the wrong she has done not only to the Jews but to herself.

America cannot take a back seat in dealing with the barbarities of Hitlerism. Did she not go to Leviticus when she inscribed on her liberty bell, "Ye shall proclaim liberty throughout the land and to all the inhabitants thereof"?

Jewry is especially happy to observe President's Day. Prayer on behalf of leadership is in keeping with our ideals. We have always recognized the value of great leadership, and have always demonstrated such recognition by our willingness to cooperate.

To my mind, President Roosevelt represents a new kind of leadership—a leadership such as we in the past knew, a man who places his seat of leadership among the people instead of merely at the head of the people. He thus becomes not merely a representative of the particular party which carried him to office but rather a servant of the people.

Our president has surprised the world in his ability to understand and recognize situations and in the measures he has offered to bring about relief. He has shown such bigness and courage and vision that he has gathered unto himself the cooperation of all regardless of faith or political affiliation. Nor has his leadership been confined to any group. American Jewry has just cause to be proud of the recognition our President has given it in the appointments he has made of Jews to high office, demonstrating thus the tradition and ideals of Judaism, that recognition and justice be meted to all alike.

The entire world is standing on a threshold. The door, so long closed, is now open. Through it America, leading her sister nations, will pass along the road to lasting prosperity, tolerance, and real peace, led by a man who is inspired with the ideals of justice, peace, and truth.

CURRENCY INFLATION

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech delivered by my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], over the Columbia network on Saturday evening, on the expansion of the currency.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech by my colleague Mr. PATMAN:

RADIO ADDRESS OF HON. WRIGHT PATMAN, OF TEXAS, APRIL 29, 1933

In connection with the subject "currency inflation", I desire to confine my remarks to restoring the honest dollar. Before I conclude, I expect to comment on a statement made by the Honorable Ogden Mills last night and also to say a word to veterans who are encouraging a march on Washington. We are not asking for an undue inflation of currency and prices. We are asking for a reflation of the circulating medium. It cannot be accomplished by an increase in the amount of currency alone; the velocity or turn-over must also be increased; this can best be accomplished by placing money and credits at the disposal of people who will use them—put them in circulation. We have a currency famine. Are we savages that we should sink to barter? If one person in a city is furnished $10,000, the circulating medium in that city is increased very little, but if 1,000 people are furnished $10 each, most of it will go immediately into the channels of trade and everybody in the city will be benefited. In 1929, money and bank deposits were turning over about 25 times a year. Now, the velocity is slowed down to about 10 times a year. Although Treasury reports show that we have at this time about a billion dollars more money in circulation than we had in 1929, there is only about one third of the business being transacted because the outstanding money, presumed to be in circulation, is not in circulation at all; it is hoarded and concentrated in the hands of people who are spending only a small portion of it to satisfy their desires. If there was distribution as there was in 1929, velocity would be restored. Money is the blood of business.

In asking for reflation of the currency, we are asking that the honest dollar be restored.

Remember this: No country has ever got out of a depression without some kind of expansion of the currency.

DISHONEST DOLLARS

The dollar that is now collected on a debt contracted between 1917 and 1929 is a dishonest dollar. It is worth from 50 percent to 400 percent more than it was worth then. It is an economic fact that deflation cheats the man in debt just as much as undue inflation cheats the creditor. We are not asking to cheat the creditors, but we are asking to give the debtor a square deal by restoring the value of the dollar to its 1928-29 purchasing power.

REFLATION, REPUDIATION, OR REVOLUTION

The three R's used to be referred to as "reading, 'riting, and 'rithmetic." Now they refer to reflation, repudiation, or revolution. We may as well face the facts. The country is facing reflation of the currency, repudiation of debts by bankruptcy, scaling down, or otherwise, or some sort of a revolution.

The cotton and wheat farmers voted bonds against their property for building schoolhouses, highways, and making other improvements when wheat was worth $1 a bushel and cotton 20 cents a pound. Deflation has caused the price of wheat to decrease to 25 cents a bushel and cotton to 5 cents a pound, thereby forcing these farmers to pay the equivalent of $4 for every dollar borrowed; instead of paying 6-percent interest on the bonds they are now paying the equivalent of 24-percent interest, based on the present price of farm products. The farmers' debts, interest, taxes, and other fixed charges are four times harder to pay than when the debts were contracted. The wage earner who has had his wages reduced 50 percent is now paying the equivalent of $2 for every dollar he borrowed. Also, by reason of the reduction in wages he has suffered, cost of his taxes, rent, electricity, gas, water, and other fixed charges have doubled. Based upon and by reason of the increased value of money, debts owed by the American people, aggregating $200,000,000,000 in 1929, have mounted to the equivalent of more than $400,000,000,000 in 1932. Do not be deceived; these debts can never be paid under present conditions.

GOOD WAGES AND GOOD PRICES

We must have good wages and good prices. One is not possible without the other. It will be better for a creditor to accept the honest dollar, one that will not purchase so much in a few commodities, than not to be able to collect any dollar at all. Most creditors are also debtors. The same dollar they collect, they can use to liquidate a dollar of their own debts. The honest dollar will permit people to pay their debts with approximately the same amount of labor, securities, or products as were necessary when the debts were contracted.

POOR PEOPLE ARE THE MARKET

The farmers, wage earners, and people who work for salaries are purchasers of 80 percent of all goods and services. They still have the consuming power but do not have the buying power on account of low prices of certain commodities, which has resulted in unemployment and reduced wages. If these classes are helped, the country is helped. As the price of gold increases, the price of commodities and everything else decreases, except certain fixed charges. Gold is not scarce; we have a reserve of $4,500,000,000, which is sufficient coverage to authorize the issuance of more than $4,000,000,000 of additional money without decreasing our gold reserve below 40 percent; gold is high because of the scarcity of paper money. The price level may be raised by putting more money in circulation. A higher price level will restore buying power.

MONEY REDEEMABLE IN SERVICES

In addition to the gold reserve, which we have but do not need to support an issue of domestic currency, of four or five billion dollars, any currency that is issued may be redeemable in services rendered by the United States Government which will keep it constantly moving. There is no thought of issuing any kind of money different from the money that is now in daily use. There will be a demand for it, and it may be redeemed in services at the post office or other Government service-rendering institutions, or it may be used to pay taxes, including income, inheritance, gasoline, check, electricity, tobacco, cosmetics, theater, beer, and other miscellaneous taxes, or it may be used by the banks, insurance companies, and the railroad companies to pay the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It will be lawful money.

GERMAN INFLATION AND CONTINENTAL CURRENCY

We are constantly reminded that currency expansion is dangerous and much is said about this "not-worth-a-continental" money, the Civil War greenbacks, and the German inflation.

Continental currency of "not-worth-a-continental" fame was no good because it was only redeemable in what was found in the hat after it was passed around. The Government had no power at that time to levy taxes to redeem it.

Civil War greenbacks had no gold coverage; they were issued solely on the credit of the Nation. When the Confederate General Early and his troops were about to take Washington City and the Government was about to fall, the security behind the paper money was less valuable, and the greenbacks went down to 35 cents on the dollar. At the same time there was a corner of gold. When the war was over, the credit of the Nation restored, a gold reserve set aside, and the money made good for payments of all debts, they went back to 100 cents on the dollar. We now have $346,000,000 of them outstanding, and I should like to know who would refuse to take one.

Germany issued money without a gold reserve and without reference to national wealth, national income, or ability to redeem. It was issued in huge quantities for the deliberate purpose of destroying their currency in order that the poor people may take the cheap money and pay all their debts, which they did.

HON. OGDEN MILLS

Currency issued by our Government is just as good as a Government bond. The only difference is the bond bears interest and the currency does not. Each represents a Government obligation. The bankers can purchase Government bonds, deposit them with the Government, and obtain new money in return. They loan the money to the people receiving interest for it, and at the same time they receive interest on the Government bonds deposited to secure the money. They cannot be expected to favor a direct issue of money by the Government. That would deprive them of a big bonus.

Mr. Ogden Mills, former Secretary of the Treasury, in a speech at Indianapolis, Ind., last night while explaining the difference between Government bonds and currency, stated: "Bonds do not furnish a basis for an expansion of bank credit more than 10 times their face value; currency does."

Further, he said: "If there is no difference between a Government bond and unsecured paper currency, why not retire the entire Government debt in paper currency and save the interest?"

I have no right to speak for the Democratic Party, but I will express my personal opinion of that statement.

The entire national debt of $21,000,000,000 can be retired with new currency—a circulating Government obligation—and the Government be saved $725,000,000 a year in interest charges. Undue inflation may be prevented by raising the reserve requirements of banks from 10 to 25 or 33½ percent. This simple change will remove every objection urged by Mr. Mills to currency expansion.

Higher reserve requirements will make the banks safe, a guaranty of deposits unnecessary, and give a few powerful bankers less authority to inflate and deflate at will. I do not recommend that this change in Government policy be made quickly; it should be made gradually.

INFLATION

Money is high because it is scarce. If the amount of money is increased, it will become cheaper. As money goes down in price, cotton, wheat, other raw materials, real estate, and common stocks increase in price. The honest dollar will still buy just as much railroad freight and passenger service, electricity, telephone, gas, water, and all commodities and services that are now selling at a fixed price. The honest dollar can also be used to pay, dollar for dollar, all debts, taxes, and interest. Inflation will help the farmer because of a sharp rise in his crop prices; he will not have to pay so much in terms of wheat and cotton to settle his obligations, and his buying power will be increased. Labor will be helped by an increase in total employment. Wages go up more slowly than the cost of living, but labor as a class tends to benefit in that local pay rolls are increased. Business men will be helped because sales will increase in dollars faster than costs; profit margins will expand; inventories rise in value; expansion be encouraged. The Government will be helped because of bigger tax collections as business improves. The general welfare of the people will be promoted because the buying power of the masses will be restored.

Who will get hurt? No one really, because the present dollar is not an honest dollar. However, the creditor class—bankers, bondholders, mortgage holders—claim they will be hurt, because the dollars they will collect in interest and on the principal will not buy so much cotton, wheat, and other raw materials as the present dollar. It will be better for a creditor to accept the honest dollar, one that will not purchase so much in a few commodities than not to be able to collect any dollar at all. It is better to cheapen the dollar than it is to cheapen the people. It is better for the wage earner to receive a dollar that will not purchase so much in certain commodities than not to be able to get a job that would enable him to earn a dollar.

DEFLATION IS ALSO BAD

Reactionary Members of Congress and international bankers are claiming that the adoption of the President's expansion program will put prices through the roof. They overlook the fact that there has been a deflation of several times as much in money and credits as now proposed in the form of expansion. They are against any sort of expansion; they want the panic to run its course. If it does, a few creditors will own all the property; all the debtors will be destroyed. Inflation carried to its limit will wipe out all debts; money would be so cheap that all debts would be quickly paid. There is a middle ground. Neither the creditors nor the debtors should be destroyed, but the honest dollar should be restored so people can pay their debts.

People do not lose their homes during inflation; they lose them during deflation. No one is advocating or desiring the wild inflation experienced in Germany. However, with all of its evils, the people of Germany during inflation paid their debts and saved their homes and other property, although it amounted to repudiation of debts.

WHAT IS WORSE THAN DEFLATION?

Deflation has brought poverty, starvation, bankruptcy, unemployment, and suicide to our people in the best country on earth, in a land of plenty. Reflation will restore the country.

The people who build our country in time of peace and save it in time of war are suffering the most by reason of this panic. They will receive the most benefit from reflation. Therefore let us live and let live by restoring the honest dollar.

The country does not owe anyone a living but it does owe everyone an opportunity to make a living.

IDLE DOLLARS

More idle box cars placed on the railroad tracks will not increase car loadings, neither will more idle dollars placed in the large banks, that are not functioning in the interest of producers or borrowers, help the people. It is highly essential that money reach the pockets of the masses of the people in every city and community. They cannot borrow money; they do not have the security to offer, and besides the banks are continuing to hoard and declining to make loans. We should send money to the banks by the people instead of sending money to the people by the banks.

MARCH ON WASHINGTON

I am receiving letters daily from veterans who want to know what I think about a march on Washington. I am opposed to such a proposal. No one can accuse me of being unfriendly to veterans. I have, for 3 years, urged the payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; was given considerable credit for causing the 50 percent payment to be made on these certificates, and still believe and never miss an opportunity to urge my views that the payment of the remainder will help the country more than any other plan for distribution of money that has been proposed. I spoke against and voted against the so-called "economy bill."

Such a march would not help the veterans; it would harm their cause. I want to appeal to all veterans to discourage such an undertaking. Benefits and good results for themselves and their dependents cannot be obtained in that manner. I plead with them not to participate in or encourage a march on Washington.

SUPPORT ADMINISTRATION'S EXPANSION PROGRAM

Regardless of the economy bill and the so-called "bonus", it is in the interest of all the people, including the veterans, that the currency be expanded in order that this panic may be broken so that the unemployed can get jobs and so the people can pay their debts and earn a livelihood. The veterans have done more than any other class to arouse the people on the question of currency expansion; they have exposed the manner in which a few powerful bankers have controlled the monetary system of our country. Out of their efforts in this direction, much and lasting good will come to the country. Let us finish the job by causing legislation to be passed restoring the honest dollar.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HAMILTON, for today, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROWN of Michigan, for the week of May 1, that he may attend to his duties as a member of the State Board of Law Examiners.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 25 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 3, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

34. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 18, 1933, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustrations, on a preliminary examination and survey of and review of report on Connecticut River between Hartford, Conn., and Springfield and Holyoke, Mass., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved July 3, 1930 (H.Doc. No. 27); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

35. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 15, 1933, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustrations, on a preliminary examination and survey of Black Rock Channel and Tonawanda Harbor, N.Y., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved July 3, 1930 (H.Doc. No. 28); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

36. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 19, 1933, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustrations, on a preliminary examination and survey of Pawtucket (Seekonk) River, R.I., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved July 3, 1930 (H.Doc. No. 29); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

37. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 25, 1933, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination and survey of Craig Harbor, Alaska, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved July 3, 1930; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

38. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 24, 1933, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Intracoastal Waterway from the mouth of Columbia River to Puget Sound, Wash., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved July 3, 1930; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

39. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 29, 1933, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of waterway from Coloma, Ill., to the Mississippi River at Moline Pool, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved July 3, 1930; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

40. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 25, 1933, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Mystic River, Mass., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved July 3, 1930; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

41. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 29, 1933, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Nagai Island, Alaska, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved July 3, 1930; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. WOODRUM: Committee on Appropriations. H.R. 5389. A bill making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 61). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUCHANAN: Committee on Appropriations. H.R. 5390. A bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 62). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. O'CONNOR: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 128. Resolution providing for the consideration of H.R. 5389, a bill making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 63). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. McSWAIN: Committee on Military Affairs. H.R. 2834. A bill to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon graduates of the Naval, the Military, and the Coast Guard Academies; without amendment (Rept. No. 64). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. COFFIN: Committee on Military Affairs. H.R. 3050. A bill for the relief of William H. Stroud; without amendment (Rept. No. 65). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WOODRUM: A bill (H.R. 5389) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. BUCHANAN: A bill (H.R. 5390) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. PRALL: A bill (H.R. 5391) to amend section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, with respect to rediscount powers of Federal Reserve banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SANDERS: A bill (H.R. 5392) to amend sections 4884 and 4886 of the Revised Statutes as amended by Public Act No. 245, Seventy-first Congress, entitled "An act to provide for plant patents"; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. LUNDEEN: A bill (H.R. 5393) to repeal the Economy Act approved March 20, 1933, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. BRUNNER: A bill (H.R. 5394) authorizing Charles V. Bossert, his heirs and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the East River between Bronx and Whitestone Landing; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SUTPHIN: A bill (H.R. 5395) relating to pensions with respect to officers and enlisted men on board the Akron at the time of its destruction and their widows and dependent relatives; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BIERMANN: A bill (H.R. 5396) to discontinue the prosecution of the project for a 9-foot channel depth in the upper Mississippi River, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CHAVEZ: A bill (H.R. 5397) to authorize the exchange of the use of certain Government land within the Carlsbad Caverns National Park for certain privately owned land therein; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. COLDEN: A bill (H.R. 5398) extending the provisions of the act of January 15, 1909 (ch. 22, 35 Stat. 586); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H.R. 5399) to regulate interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. O'CONNOR: Resolution (H.Res. 128) providing for the consideration of H.R. 5389, a bill making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire: Joint Resolution (H.J.Res. 170) consenting that certain States may sue the United States, and providing for trial on the merits in any suit brought hereunder by a State to recover direct taxes alleged to have been illegally collected by the United States during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1866, 1867, and 1868, and vesting the right in each State to sue in its own name; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: Concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 17) giving preference to veterans who are disabled and unemployed; to the Committee on Labor.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, memorializing Congress to provide relief for the oil industry, the farmers, the unemployed, business, and the people in general by providing an adequate tariff or tax on oil that will place the domestic oil industry on a competitive basis with imported oil as shown by reports of the Tariff Commission; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island, memorializing Congress to request the President not to cut the pensions or compensation of any veteran of any war or the allowance to their widows and orphans where the disability of the veteran is traceable to service or presumptively service-connected; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to enact the Black bill into law; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress relative to the ratification of the treaty between the United States and Canada for the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway and appropriation of money by Congress for the completion of said project; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress relative to a reduction in the expenditures for prohibition enforcement; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to pass an act permitting cities, counties, and States to deposit their bonds with the Federal Government in exchange for currency; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, memorializing Congress to amend Senate bill no. 5251 in the sense of expressly extending to Puerto Rico the benefits of such proposed legislation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress relative to an increase in the currency of the United States through calling in all Liberty and Victory bonds; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, memorializing Congress to enact into law Senate bill no. 3074, introduced in the Seventy-second Congress; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLACK: A bill (H.R. 5400) for the relief of Thomas F. Olsen; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5401) for the relief of certain officers and employees of the Foreign Service of the United States who, while in the course of their respective duties, suffered losses of personal property by reason of catastrophes of nature and other causes; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5402) for the relief of Capt. L. P. Worral, Finance Department, United States Army; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5403) for the relief of Korber Realty, Inc.; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5404) for the relief of White Bros. & Co., a partnership composed of John W. White, Jr., Will J. White, A. P. White, and Madison White; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5405) for the relief of Nicola Valerio; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5406) for the relief of Charles E. Molster, disbursing clerk, Department of Commerce, and Dr. Louis H. Bauer, a former employee; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5407) for the relief of Ransome Cooyate; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5408) to provide for the reimbursement of personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps for personal property lost, damaged, or destroyed as a result of the earthquake which occurred at Managua, Nicaragua, on March 31, 1931; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5409) for the relief of Lawrence S. Copeland; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5410) for the relief of John J. Galvin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5411) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects lost, damaged, or destroyed by fire at the Naval Training Station, Hampton Roads, Va., on February 21, 1927; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5412) for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of an individual claim approved by the War Department; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5413) to authorize settlement, allowance, and payment of certain claims; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5414) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects lost, damaged, or destroyed by fire at the Naval Radio Station, Eureka, Calif., on January 17, 1930; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5415) for the relief of Giuglio Zarella; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5416) for the relief of Joseph Ricco; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5417) to reimburse Dominic Fracapane for injuries sustained in an accident with a Government-owned motor truck; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COFFIN: A bill (H.R. 5418) for the relief of Lawrence J. Kessinger; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5419) for the relief of Robert Rayl; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FIESINGER: A bill (H.R. 5420) granting a pension to Elizabeth Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H.R. 5421) granting a pension to Mary C. Simon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GAMBRILL: A bill (H.R. 5422) for the relief of Bertha W. Lamphear; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McREYNOLDS: A bill (H.R. 5423) for the relief of Jack C. Allen; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MULDOWNY: A bill (H.R. 5424) for the relief of Harry Gordon; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5425) for the relief of John A. Downey; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H.R. 5426) granting a pension to James Oscar Donnelly; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5427) granting a pension to Ernest Elmer Edwards; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANK: A bill (H.R. 5428) for the relief of Thomas L. Essex; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TABER: A bill (H.R. 5429) granting a pension to Louise C. Jones; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VINSON of Georgia: A bill (H.R. 5430) granting a pension to Lonie Pearson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VINSON of Kentucky: A bill (H.R. 5431) granting pension to Louie B. Reibold and Louis Reibold, Jr.; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5432) granting a pension to Pharis Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5433) granting an increase of pension to William O. Scott; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5434) granting a pension to Jesse Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5435) granting pension to Addie Hall; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5436) granting an increase of pension to William Hays; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5437) granting an increase of pension to Lona B. Porter; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5438) granting a pension to Robert Noble; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5439) granting an increase of pension to Willie Williams; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5440) granting a pension to Earl F. Alexander; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5441) granting a pension to Fannie Shields; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5442) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $10,000 to Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Wate Stewart; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5443) for the relief of John Henry Tackett; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5444) for the relief of Loraine K. Scott; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5445) for the relief of Robert Fraley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5446) extending the time for the consideration of application for retirement of John W. Stephenson under the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5447) for the relief of John Barnett; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5448) for the relief of Marion Ray; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5449) for the relief of William Adkins; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5450) for the relief of Charles D. Waldeck; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5451) for the relief of Floyd Carpenter; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5452) granting a pension to Nancy Jane Branham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5453) granting a pension to Minnie Allen Lacy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5454) granting a pension to Sarah Cordelia Adkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5455) granting a pension to Dora McCallister; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5456) granting a pension to Alameda Jarrell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5457) granting a pension to Edgar F. Bradley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5458) granting a pension to Josephene Johns; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5459) granting a pension to Ned Johnston; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5460) granting a pension to Carrie Stidham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5461) granting a pension to Mayme Heilman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5462) granting a pension to Thomas Johnston; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5463) granting a pension to Mima Turner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5464) granting a pension to Lewis Stamper; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5465) granting a pension to Mima White; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5466) granting a pension to Sallie Deaton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5467) granting a pension to Dicey Terry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5468) granting a pension to Ollie Hamilton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5469) granting a pension to Cynthia Ramey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5470) granting a pension to Thomas McGuire; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5471) granting a pension to Sallie A. Mann; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5472) granting a pension to Louise Workman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5473) granting a pension to Cordie Brandenburg; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILCOX: A bill (H.R. 5474) for the relief of Emma Retzer; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5475) for the relief of Harry Flanery; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of the rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

841. By Mr. CRAVENS: Petition of the State legislative representative, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Little Rock, Ark., approving Senate bill 158 and House bill 4876; to the Committee on Labor.

842. Also, petition of A. W. Sharp, general manager Fort Smith plant, Long-Bell Lumber Co., Fort Smith, Ark., relative to Senate bill 158 and House bill 4557; to the Committee on Labor.

843. By Mr. CORNING: Petition of the Paper Makers' Felt Association, protesting against the passage of the 30-hour week bill; to the Committee on Labor.

844. By Mr. DINGELL: Memorial of Common Council of the city of Detroit, Mich., requesting the President to maintain the National Guard and Naval Reserve and the efficiency thereof by continuing the appropriations heretofore made for said organizations; to the Committee on Appropriations.

845. By Mr. GOODWIN: Resolution of the Catskill Post, No. 110, American Legion, Catskill, Greene County, N.Y., unanimously pledging its support to the President of the United States, and unalterably opposing any public demonstration by any veterans' organization or group of veterans that would hinder or work harm to the President in his efforts to place the Nation on a sound economic basis, and will do their part to prevent such demonstration, and so forth; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

846. Also, petition of the First National Bank & Trust Co., Roscoe; National Bank of Liberty, Liberty; Tanners National Bank of Catskill; First National Bank & Trust Co., Saugerties; Farmers & Merchants Bank, Cobleskill; Livingston Manor National Bank, Livingston Manor; Catskill National Bank & Trust Co., Catskill; and Otsego-Schohaire Bankers Association, Middleburgh, located in the Twenty-seventh Congressional District of New York State, desiring to register their belief that publicity which has been given to loans made to banks by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has proved harmful to the banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

847. By Mr. GRANFIELD: Memorial of Massachusetts House of Representatives, urging reasonable tariff protection for the fishing industry in the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

848. Also, petition of Waltham (Mass.) Post, No. 156, the American Legion, protesting against further cuts in veterans' appropriations which would eliminate all Veterans' Bureau regional offices; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

849. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Telegram from Texas Theater Owners, Roy L. Walker, president, opposing Sirovich resolution to investigate motion-picture business; to the Committee on Rules.

850. Also, petition of C. W. Byrd, cashier, C. F. Borg, superintendent Corsicana Grader & Machine Co., Corsicana, Tex., opposing House bill 4557 and Senate bill 158; to the Committee on Labor.

851. By Mr. LESINSKI: Petition of Central Cooperative Wholesalers, Superior, Wis., advocating 5-day workweek, 6 hours per day; to the Committee on Labor.

852. Also, petition of Common Council of the City of Detroit, urging continuance of appropriations for the maintenance of the National Guard and Naval Reserve forces; to the Committee on Appropriations.

853. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Central Trades and Labor Council of Greater New York and vicinity, urging reconsideration of reduction of salaries of Federal employees; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

854. Also, petition of Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, Brooklyn, N.Y., opposing House bill 4681, introduced by Mr. DISNEY; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

855. Also, petition of Vick Chemical Co., manufacturing chemists, New York City, opposing House Joint Resolution No. 161; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

856. Also, petition of Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, Brooklyn, N.Y., favoring House bill 4677, the Sutphin bill; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

857. By Mr. McCLINTIC: Resolution memorializing Congress to urge the passage by Congress of an act appropriating funds for Federal-aid highway construction, to be distributed among the various States of the Union for the relief and to provide work for the unemployed; to the Committee on Roads.

858. Also, concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to provide relief for the oil industry, the farmers, the unemployed, business, and the people generally by providing an adequate tariff or tax on oil that will place the domestic oil industry on a competitive basis with imported oil as shown by the reports of the Tariff Commission; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

859. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of the Vick Chemical Co., New York City, opposing the passage of House Joint Resolution No. 161; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

860. Also, petition of Central Trades and Labor Council of Greater New York, protesting against the 15 percent reduction in pay of Federal employees, and urging a reconsideration of this reduction; to the Committee on Appropriations.

861. By Mr. TINKHAM: Resolutions endorsed by the Massachusetts State Union of Women's Clubs; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

862. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Interdenominational Churchmen's Committee in Philadelphia, submitting a plan for the banishment of poverty; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

863. Also, petition of the Reserve and National Guard Officers' mess of Los Angeles, Calif., relative to the national defense; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

864. Also, petition of the city of Los Angeles, urging that the necessity of persons' taking the pauper's oath in order to obtain relief from the Government be eliminated; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

865. Also, petition of the county of Los Angeles, relative to the establishment of the 5-day 30-hour week; to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 1933

(Legislative day of Monday, May 1, 1933)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	King	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Dale	La Follette	Russell
Bachman	Dickinson	Logan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dill	Loneragan	Shipstead
Barbour	Duffy	Long	Smith
Barkley	Erickson	McAdoo	Steiwer
Black	Fess	McCarran	Stephens
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Bratton	George	McNary	Townsend
Brown	Glass	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Murphy	Tydings
Bulow	Gore	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hale	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Capper	Hastings	Nye	Walcott
Caraway	Hatfield	Overton	Walsh
Clark	Hayden	Patterson	Wheeler
Connally	Hebert	Pittman	White
Coolidge	Johnson	Pope
Copeland	Kean	Reed
Costigan	Kendrick	Reynolds

Mr. REED. I wish to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. KENDRICK. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] are necessarily detained from the Senate. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

FUNCTIONS OF THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION (S.DOC. NO. 55)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the secretary of the United States Civil Service Commission, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a detailed report as to the functions of the Commission, including accounting, disbursing, collecting, purchasing, and personnel, together with citations of the authority for the performance of such functions and the annual cost thereof based on the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, also a list of employees receiving compensation at the rate of $5,000 or more per annum, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FUNCTIONS OF THE BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY (S.DOC. NO. 54)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chief of the United States Bureau of Efficiency, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a report as to the functions of the Bureau of Efficiency, the statutory authority therefor, and the total annual expenditures thereon, etc., also a list of employees receiving compensation at the rate of $5,000 or more per annum, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

(NOTE.—Under section 409 of the 1934 Treasury and Post Office Departments Appropriation Act of March 3, 1933, the Bureau of Efficiency will cease to exist on May 31, 1933.)

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures:

IN THE SENATE OF PENNSYLVANIA,
April 26, 1933.

Whereas the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania now taxes gasoline 3 cents per gallon, and exacts special registration fees on all motor vehicles, while the Federal Government also taxes gasoline, motor vehicles, and accessories; and

Whereas there is demand from certain special interests for legislation to compel blending of alcohol with gasoline; and

Whereas such blending would increase the price of gasoline about 3 cents per gallon, amounting to a special tax on the already overburdened motorist; and

Whereas the only beneficiaries would be the manufacturers of alcohol: Therefore be it

Resolved (if the house of representatives concur), That Congress of the United States is requested to reject any legislation to compel blending alcohol with gasoline.

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded by the chief clerk of the house of representatives to each branch of the Congress and to each Senator and Representative from Pennsylvania in Congress of the United States.

The foregoing is a true and correct copy of the resolution adopted by the senate the 26th day of April 1933 and concurred in by the house of representatives the 26th day of April 1933.

[SEAL]

JOHN E. MCKIRDY,
Chief Clerk, Senate.

E. F. WHITE,
Chief Clerk, House of Representatives.

E. C. SHANNON,
President, Senate of Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Colonel John Jacob Astor Camp, No. 6, United Spanish War Veterans, United States Soldiers' Home, Washington, D.C., endorsing the provisions of the National Defense Act of 1916, and favoring the full-strength maintenance of the Army and Navy, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Reserve and National Guard Officers' Mess, of Los Angeles, Calif., favoring the maintenance of the national defense and the making of adequate appropriations for the support of the Army and Navy and all auxiliaries, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of the Alumni Association of the Central High School, of Washington, D.C. (by its advisory board), praying for the full maintenance of the instrumentalities for instruction in all the graded and high schools of the city of Washington, and protesting against reductions in salaries of the teaching forces, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial and several letters and telegrams in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of the State of Louisiana, endorsing Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, condemning attacks made upon him, and remonstrating against a senatorial investigation of his alleged acts and conduct, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of Puerto Rico, favoring amendment of pending legislation, authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to certain hospitals by extending the benefits of such legislation to Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(See concurrent resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 2d instant, p. 2654, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. TYDINGS also presented a resolution adopted by the Leaf Tobacco Association, of Baltimore, Md., favoring the reestablishment of international trade in all commodities through reciprocal tariff-and-trade agreements, by which a horizontal reduction of schedules in all countries will be effected, trade restrictions modified, and barter agreements abolished, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Honolulu, Hawaii, protesting against the proposed transfer of the United States Hydrographic Office from the Navy Department to the Department of Commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS IN GERMANY

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I present an important petition in the nature of a memorial signed by a large number of representative worthy citizens of Douglas, Ariz., protesting the action of the Hitler government against Jews in Germany. I ask that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for early consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the memorial will be referred as requested.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 324) to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 50) thereon.

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1513) to amend Public Act No. 435 of the Seventy-second Congress, relating to sales of timber on Indian land, reported it without amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 555) to authorize the acquisition by the United States of the land upon which the Seneca Indian School, Wyandotte, Okla., is located, reported it without amendment.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Jed C. Adams, of Texas, to be a member of the Board of Tax Appeals for the unexpired portion of a term of 12 years from June 2, 1932, which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FRAZIER (for Mr. SCHALL):

A bill (S. 1561) providing for payment of $100 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota from the timber funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 1562) granting the consent of Congress to the Levy Court of Sussex County, Del., to reconstruct a bridge across the Deep Creek at Cherry Tree Landing, Sussex County, Del.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 1563) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building for the use of station "A", a station of the post office at Portland, Oreg.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 1564) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing the Great Falls Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Great Falls", approved April 21, 1928; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 1565) for the relief of Rene Hooze, a minor; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1566) for the payment of the claims of citizens of the United States against the Republic of Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A bill (S. 1567) for the relief of Claude W. Shelton; and

A bill (S. 1568) to repeal certain provisions of the act of February 25, 1929, entitled "An act to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes", and the act of July 3, 1930, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1930, and June 30, 1931, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 1569) for the relief of several trust companies; and

A bill (S. 1570) for the relief of the Liberty Title & Trust Co., successors to German American Title & Trust Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1571) granting an increase of pension to Helen G. Mercur; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 1572) for the relief of Berle C. Palmer; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 1573) for the relief of Joseph Duncan Smedberg; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COUZENS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 4589, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which were ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

On page 8, line 14, to strike out "installation and modification of electric traffic lights, signals, and control."

On page 8, line 18, to strike out "$45,000" and insert "$10,000."

PRODUCTION COSTS OF GOAT, KID, AND CABRETTE LEATHERS

Mr. REED submitted a resolution (S.Res. 68), which was ordered to lie over under the rule, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby directed to investigate, for the purpose of section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, the differences in the cost of production between the domestic article and the foreign article, and to report at the earliest date practicable, upon goat, kid, and cabretta leathers.

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution stating in substance that it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the delegates appointed by the President to the international economic conference shall work unceasingly for the remonetization of silver. I ask that the resolution lie on the table temporarily, and I desire to state now that at the first opportunity I shall ask that it be brought up.

I also ask that there be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by about 100 Members of the House of Representatives, directed to the President of the United States, stating that they favor the remonetization of silver.

I ask that both the resolution which I have introduced and also this statement may be printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Without objection, that order will be made.

The resolution (S.Res. 67) is as follows:

Whereas the whole world, including the United States of America, is suffering from an unprecedented depression, resulting in unemployment, starvation, falling commodity prices, and the collapse of the financial structure which in turn threatens to destroy our present social and economic system; and

Whereas all thoughtful students of economics and finance are agreed that one of the chief causes of this depression is due to the shortage and maldistribution of gold which is today the primary money of the world, seven creditor nations having $9,000,000,000 of gold out of a total world supply of about $11,000,000,000, which in turn leaves only $2,000,000,000 of gold for all the debtor nations of the world; and

Whereas increasing the value of gold held by these seven creditor nations will not increase the purchasing power of the rest of the world, nor give them primary money on which to base credit and with which to carry on their domestic and foreign trade; and

Whereas more than 40 countries are off the gold standard, including England and the United States of America, and 60 percent of the population of the world use silver as their monetary yardstick, and will continue to use it regardless of all efforts to place them on a gold or managed currency basis; and

Whereas the stabilization of currency exchange and the removal of trade barriers between nations is essential in order to successfully conduct foreign trade and commerce; and

Whereas this stabilization of exchanges of world currencies can best be accomplished by fixing the ratio of value between the two metals, silver and gold, upon which world currencies are based; and

Whereas the depreciated currencies of silver-using nations, due to the low price of silver, gives silver-using nations a lower cost of production than gold-using nations, which in turn makes it impossible for gold-using nations to successfully compete with silver-using nations in the markets of the world; and

Whereas the remonetization of silver at its historic ratio with gold would raise world commodity prices upon which our surplus products of farm and factory are sold, increase the purchasing power of silver-using countries in the United States, increase production costs in silver-using countries so that the American farmer and manufacturer would not be so handicapped by their depreciated currencies; and

Whereas the remonetization of silver would end the present uncertainty relative to inflation; and

Whereas both Democratic and Republican national platforms have favored the international remonetization of silver, and Republican and Democratic leaders in the United States Congress have repeatedly stated that they favored bimetalism if it could be on an international basis; and

Whereas the President is about to appoint delegates to attend an international conference to be held in London in June of this year of our Lord, 1933, which has for its purpose the stabilization of international exchange, etc.: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the delegates so appointed by the President of the United States of America shall work unceasingly for an international agreement to remonetize silver on a basis of a definite fixed ratio of not to exceed 16 fine ounces of silver to 1 fine ounce of gold.

The statement submitted by Mr. WHEELER is as follows:

To the PRESIDENT,

White House, Washington, D.C.:

We favor the remonetization of silver to raise commodity prices back to the 1926 level, restore the purchasing power of the American people, and bring back the prosperity of the world.

Edward T. Taylor, Colorado; Lawrence Lewis, First District Colorado; J. G. Scrugham, Nevada; Joseph P. Monaghan, Montana; Fred Cummings, Second Colorado; Roy E. Ayers, Second Montana; Abe Murdock, First Utah; John A. Martin, Third Colorado; Dennis Chavez, New Mexico; M. A. Zioncheck, Washington; Kent E. Keller, Twenty-fifth Illinois; Theo. B. Werner, Second South Dakota; J. W. Robinson, Second Utah; Fred H. Hildebrandt, First South Dakota; Tom D. McKeown, Oklahoma; F. B. Swank, Oklahoma; E. W. Marland, Oklahoma; Will Rogers, Oklahoma; Jed Johnson, Oklahoma; Wilburn Cartwright, Oklahoma; W. E. Disney, Oklahoma; J. V. McClintic, Oklahoma; J. H. Hoeppel, Twelfth California; Gardner R. Withrow, Wisconsin; Ernest Lundeen, Minnesota; Warren J. Duffey, Ohio; John Lesinski, Sixteenth Michigan; Carl M. Weideman, Fourteenth Michigan; John D. Dingell, Fifteenth Michigan; F. H. Shoemaker, Minnesota; Thomas O'Malley, Fifth Wisconsin; Wm. T. Schulte, First Indiana; Harry W. Musselwhite, Ninth Michigan; Knute Hill, Fourth Washington; Compton I. White, First Idaho; G. J. Bolleau, Seventh Wisconsin; William Lemke, North Dakota; M. C. Wallgren, Second Washington; Terry M. Carpenter, Nebraska; W. P. Lambertson, Kansas; Edgar Howard, Nebraska; Martin Dies, Texas; Lloyd Thurston, Iowa; J. J. Mansfield, Texas; Martin F. Smith, Third Washington; J. N. Sandlin, Louisiana; John Y. Brown, Kentucky; Henry E. Stubbs, Tenth California; W. D. McFarlane, Texas; Henry Arens, Minnesota; Magnus Johnson, Minnesota; C. H. Martin, Oregon; C. V. Parsons, Illinois; A. H. Gasque, South Carolina; Glenn Griswold, Indiana; M. C. Allgood, Alabama; E. M. Dirksen, Illinois; Jennings Randolph, West Virginia; A. C. Shallenberger, Nebraska; R. T. Wood, Missouri; Geo. B. Terrell, Texas; Paul J. Kvale, Minnesota; Randolph Carpenter, Kansas; O. H. Cross, Texas; Ross A. Collins, Mississippi; Jeff Busby, Mississippi; J. E. Rankin, Mississippi; Roy E. Ayers, Montana; C. W. Turner, Tennessee; Harold Knutson, Minnesota; Sam B. Hill, Washington; Geo. G.

Sadowski, Michigan; Wright Patman, Texas; W. M. Pierce, Oregon; Charles Kramer, Thirteenth California; J. O. Fernandez, Louisiana; Numa F. Montet, Louisiana; Martin L. Sweeney, Ohio; Robert T. Secrest, Ohio; Frank C. Kniffin, Ohio; Byron B. Harlan, Ohio; Wm. L. Fiesinger, Ohio; A. P. Lamneck, Ohio; Frank L. Kloebe, Ohio; Vincent Carter, Wyoming; A. J. May, Kentucky; R. M. Duncan, Missouri; Glover H. Cary, Kentucky; W. V. Gregory, Kentucky; Thomas F. Ford, California; John P. Dockweiler, California; Frank H. Lee, Missouri; Russell Ellzey, Mississippi; James Hughes, Wisconsin; Charles I. Faddis, Pennsylvania.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is the resolution a Senate resolution or a joint resolution of the two Houses?

Mr. WHEELER. It is a Senate resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator repeat his statement as to its purpose?

Mr. WHEELER. It is a Senate resolution stating that it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the delegates who are appointed to the International Economic Conference shall work unceasingly for an international agreement for the remonetization of silver.

I may say to the Senator from Oregon that since 1896 both the Democratic Party and the Republican Party have been promising the people of this country that they were going to do this. I want to find out whether or not the Senate of the United States is willing to go on record now that it is the sense of the Senate that the delegates who go to that conference shall fight for the thing that both parties have been promising the people in their platforms.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I understand that the resolution calls upon the delegates to strive to bring about an international agreement on some ratio.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; that is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE—ADDRESS BY SECRETARY WALLACE

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD excerpts from an address by Hon. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, over a network of the National Broadcasting Co., delivered on May 1, 1933, on the subject of Relief of Agriculture.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It was for the purpose of putting science to work in agriculture that this Federal Department of Agriculture was established by act of Congress 71 years ago. Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin saw the need for it even back in their day. The Department was created primarily for scientific research; its main job always has been a research job; and I hope research will always remain a principal duty.

Of course, it is not enough to discover facts: a public institution has also the obligation to see that the facts are made available to all who can profit by them.

When a plant breeder in the Department develops a variety of wheat that is highly resistant to rust, the job of the Department has not ended with that discovery. The new variety has to be tried out in various regions in the field. Next, the results of those trials have to be made known to wheat growers. That involves publications, both technical and popular, and articles for the press and radio broadcasting. Then the seed of the new variety has to be made available to farmers. The county extension agent may step into the picture at this point and suggest that the interested wheat grower sow some of the new seed in a test plot alongside some of the seed he and his neighbors have been using in the past, and when the old and the new varieties of wheat are up and harvested, let the neighbors for miles around come in to compare them and decide whether or not the new variety is better than the old and worth investing in.

That is a thumb-nail sketch of the way science is applied to agriculture in this country, and it portrays a system that is the envy of many another nation. Sir Horace Plunkett, Ireland's great authority on agriculture, in 1928 was moved to describe the Department of Agriculture as "the most widely useful department in the world."

One of the most famous examples was the discovery, by scientists in the Department of Agriculture some 40 years ago, that a micro-organism found in the blood of cattle is the cause of splenic fever, and that the disease is transmitted by the cattle tick.

During the years 1888 to 1893, four men spent most of their time trying to make that discovery. Splenic fever had become a costly disease of cattle throughout the South. Home-made remedies, treatment by skilled veterinarians, alike proved futile. The disease was costing the livestock industry, and ultimately the consumer of meat, many millions of dollars.

The four Department of Agriculture scientists, in the employ of the Government because they wanted to pursue scientific research without interruption, and at salaries sadly out of line with their worth to the Nation—these men kept doggedly on the job despite all sorts of obstacles and disappointments. The joy of achievement was their chief reward. And their achievement proved to be of lasting benefit not only to the livestock industry but to all mankind, for their research was the first demonstration that a microbial disease can be transmitted exclusively by an insect host or carrier.

From that came the knowledge, at the hands of other scientists, that yellow fever, malaria, sleeping sickness, and other maladies are similarly transmitted. From that flowed the successful control of yellow fever, for instance, which in turn made possible the building of the Panama Canal. So it can truthfully be said that the success of four Department of Agriculture scientists in discovering the cause of a cattle disease was a first step in the construction of the Panama Canal.

These scientists—by name Theobald Smith, Curtice, Kilgore, and Salmon—of course had no idea of the far-reaching consequences of their discovery. They were intent on finding the cause of a cattle disease, not in discovering a fundamental principle in medicine. But that happens often in scientific research.

And at other times, a scientist may fail to solve one problem, only to solve another unexpectedly. Not long ago some chemists in the Department of Agriculture were examining molds—fungous growths, that is—to find one that would produce tartaric acid. Patiently they tested one after another, until they had exhausted the possibilities of 149 different molds. Finally the 150th rewarded their long search with success—but not the success they were expecting. Instead of producing tartaric acid, the 150th mold unexpectedly produced gluconic acid. This is now used in making calcium gluconate, the only calcium salt that can be injected between the muscles, without causing abscesses, in treating certain human diseases. This salt used to cost $150 a pound. As a result of this research it may now be had for 50 cents a pound.

Much of the scientific work of the Department, however, calls for more than the ordinary equipment of a scientist. I am thinking of the plant explorers, the men who cut their way through treacherous jungles, or press on across the forbidding deserts of Mongolia in search of plants that we need here at home. Whenever you eat bread made from durum wheat, or enjoy a choice steak or pork chops from cattle or hogs fed on alfalfa and soybeans, or sample a package of dates or a crate of navel oranges from California, or the new Satsuma oranges from Florida—whenever you enjoy any of these things, you are reaping the benefit of the work done by a handful of explorers employed by the Department of Agriculture.

If time and your patience permitted, it would be possible to cite instances to show how research has affected all of our major farm crops and classes of livestock, how the patience, the skill, and the informed imagination of scientists employed by the Department of Agriculture have altered the agricultural map of this country and modified the farm practices of every farmer in the land. Many farmers are not aware of this, for the results of research reach the individual farm by an intricate, devious path, but they get there just the same.

If you will agree with me on that, I suspect you are at the same moment questioning whether this research has proved to be an unmixed blessing. For science and invention, you will say, have not only made it possible for us to produce enough to go around; they have made it possible for us to pile up towering surpluses, which in turn seem capable of bringing our whole economic system crashing down around our ears.

We cannot deny that. When scientists in the Department of Agriculture develop a variety of wheat that produces 5 bushels more per acre than the variety commonly grown, one result may be, and often is, too much wheat. When our modern knowledge of nutrition enables 1 bushel of corn to go as far as 2 bushels did in the pioneer days in feeding livestock, one result may be too much pork and lard.

Of late years the Department of Agriculture and the colleges have been aware of the problem. They have tried to meet it by helping the individual farmer adjust his own production to changing market needs. They have hoped that advice and complete information on supply and demand would suffice.

Where they have been remiss, in my judgment, is in declining to face the fact that the individual farmer cannot adjust his production intelligently unless he knows, with some degree of certainty, that his neighbors will do likewise. And it is to face that fact realistically that the new farm bill has been drafted. The essence of it is collective action by all the producers to accommodate their production to the market that actually exists.

Our expenditures for science, our efforts at increasing productive efficiency, have in no sense been unwise. Certainly no thoughtful person could approve the abandonment of scientific research or the relegation of our machines to the ash heap. To do that would be like abandoning the use of automobiles because we have automobile accidents. As a rule, the fault is not with the automobile, but with the driver.

It is not the fault of science that we have unused piles of wheat on Nebraska farms and tragic breadlines in New York City at one and the same moment. Rather it is because we have refused to apply science to the development of social machinery, machinery that will regulate our economic system to the end that what we produce can be equitably divided.

I am not one to ask for less efficiency. I want more, and I know that we can get far more. But I want the efficiency to be controlled in such a way that it does more good than harm. I want to see the farmers of the South grow 300 pounds of cotton per acre instead of 150 pounds, and the farmers of the North 50 bushels of corn per acre instead of 35 bushels. I want to see the average milch cow yield 400 pounds of butterfat per year instead of 200. And I see no reason why our hogs eventually should not produce 100 pounds of pork on the average from 6 bushels of corn instead of from 9 bushels.

These things can all be done. The research now going on will make it possible and will pave the way for countless new agricultural achievements as well.

Only the other day I learned that research now in progress indicates that crops grown in some regions of the Nation have a higher nutritional value than do apparently similar crops grown in other areas. If further study bears this out, the consequences will certainly be far-reaching. We may have a new agricultural map a decade from now.

The research job, far from being done, is only well begun. We shall need new varieties of cereals and grasses, to resist diseases, better than those we now have. We shall have to keep cutting costs of production by increasing yields per acre. Methods of cultivation, like methods of feeding and managing livestock, must be subject to continuing investigation if we are to keep abreast of the continually changing economic world about us.

When our chemists, not long ago, discovered an economical method by which bagasse, a sugarcane waste, could be made into high-quality cellulose suitable for rayon, we patted ourselves on the back for an achievement of considerable importance. But over in the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils is a small bottle of a brownish cellulose substance called "lignin", which was derived from the corn plant after many years of experimentation. The chemist will tell you that lignin is one of the principal parts of woody plant tissues; that it can therefore be obtained in abundance; and that it may yield a startling new collection of products. Already he has discovered in lignin such compounds as phenol and creosol. Lignin may yet rank, in its rich potentialities, in its influence on disposing of farm wastes, with our major chemical discoveries.

